COURAGE AT THE LAST.

The excellent Sir William Forbes, biographer of Beattie, uttered s: "Tell those," said he, "that drawing down to the bed of ath, from my experience, that it no terrors; that in the hour en it is most wanted there is rcy with the Most High; and t some change takes place which the soul to meet its God." When loyal Earl of Derby came to his cution, although he had said, in vious times, that he could die in ht, but knew not how it might be the scaffold, he now said he ld lay his head on the block as erfully as on his pillow. "Let people know," said the pious hdeacon Aylmor, "that their tor died undaunted, and not id of death. I bless my God t. I have no fear, no doubt, no re- ance, but an assured confidence he sin-overcoming merit of Jesus rist." So said President Finley: ive my love to the people of neeton; tell them that I am go- to die, and that I am not afraid dsath." "Oh, do not fear to " said Mrs. East in dying; "you find the word of God sure, all be fulfilled, and you will find it These were the words of Hali- ton: "I, a poor, weak, timorous , once as much afraid of death any—I, that have been many rs under the terror of death, e now, in the mercy of God and power of his grace, composedly with joy to look death in the ." It often appears that those m whom constitutional courage philosophic firmness could least expected, go down to the valley leath with most complete triumph r their past apprehensions. In recollections of many some such mple of a dying friend will occur h convincing power and tender- ss. They tell us that this absence fear is no fruit of nature, of habit of strenuous effort, but the gift him who gave to death its ter- s when he made it the doom of , and who takes those terrors ay when sin is blotted out through blood of the Lamb.—George rgess.

Look happy, if you do not feel so. resent a cheerful exterior, though ur heart and mind be troubled. ver wear a face which, as Sydney mith says, "is a breach of the ace." Dr. Johnson used to ob- rve that the habit of looking at e best side of a thing was worth ore to a man than a thousand unds a year, and Samuel Smiles ervos: "We possess the power, a great extent, of so exercising e will as to direct the thoughts on subjects calculated to yield ppiness and improvement rather an their opposites. In this way e habit of happy thought may be ade to spring up like any other bit. And to bring up men or omen with a genuine nature of is sort, a good temper and a happy ame of mind, is perhaps of even ore importance, in many cases, an to perfect them in much knowl- ge and many accomplishments."

The Little Stranger Boy.—The celebrated John Falk was well known for his love to the children under his care. Several beautiful incidents are connected with his history. Once, when they were sitting, as usual, at supper, one of the boys said the usual grace: "Come, Lord Jesus, be our guest, and bless what thou hast provided." A little fellow looked up and said: "Do tell me why the Lord Jesus never comes. We ask him every day to sit with us, and he never comes." "Dear child, only believe, and you may be sure he will come, for he does not despise our invitation." "I shall set him a seat," said the little fellow; and just then there was a knock at the door. A poor frozen apprentice entered, begging a night's lodging. He was made welcome; the chair stood empty for him; every child wanted him to have his plate, and one was lamenting that his bed was too small for the stranger, who was quite touched by such uncommon attentions. The little one had been thinking hard all this time: "Jesus could not come, and so he sent this poor dear boy in his place; is that it?" "Yes, dear child, that is just it. Every piece of bread and drink of water that we give to the poor or sick or the prisoners, for Jesus' sake, we give to him. 'Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me.'" The children sang a hymn of the love of God to their guest before they parted for the night, and neither they nor he were likely to forget this simple Bible comment.—Illustrative Gatherings.

An Example Not Entirely Safe to Follow.—We commend, says the Christian Weekly, with a little hesitation, to the attention of clergymen in search of funds for building or restoring their churches, an expedient which was recently resorted to by a Buddhist priest at Shanghai. The reverend gentleman in question, being desirous of raising money for erecting a temple at Soochow, started on a begging expedition, and in the course of his tour visited Shanghai. Here he proclaimed on high that he would allow himself to be locked up in a wooden box for seven days, during which period he would remain in an upright position, and without either food or sleep. Accordingly a box about two and a half feet wide and about five feet and a half high was prepared, into which the devotee entered, and was carefully secured with bolts and bars. With the exception of a space just large enough for his feet, the bottom was studded with nails, and near the lower end a few open bars admitted the requisite amount of air. Day and night crowds of people visited the temple, and money poured into the priestly coffers, till at the end of a week the devotee emerged from his confinement, the amount of money proving the complete success of the experiment. Even pieces of the box were anxiously bought as relics, and every nail brought more than its weight in silver.

Elect Infants.—The Cumberland Presbyterian, in allusion to some sort of a debate it has had with the Interior, and after quoting the old Assembly verdict that "elect infants, dying in infancy, are regenerated and saved by Christ," says: "The Interior will not say that elect infants means all infants. It will not claim that those who framed the confession believed that all infants dying in infancy are saved. The phrase 'elect infants' would not be used by those who did not believe that some are not elected. Infants not elected have no more prospect of salvation than adults not elected. The fact that the question is being discussed in a leading Presbyterian paper is a favorable indication. It is time the church would free its standards from a barbarous doctrine of a former age. If the phrase elect infants does not mean all infants, there must be infants not elected. They must die just as the elect, and as Christ, according to the confession, made no atonement for the non-elect, infants as well as adults must be among those foreordained to everlasting death. We would like to see the logic that will free the standards from this conclusion."

Not a Bad Rule.—The subject of giving was up in a church in the vicinity of Boston lately, and elicited a new rule, which, we presume, has not yet been adopted to any wide extent. A brother, well known for his generous benefactions, was asked what part of his income he was in the habit of contributing to the Lord's treasury. "I do not know," said the brother; "I do very much as the woman did who was famous for the excellence of her rhubarb pies. She put in as much sugar as her conscience would allow, and then shut her eyes and put in a handful more. I give all my conscience approves, and then add a handful without counting it." A few more such men would accelerate the coming of the millennium.

The Deepest Well in the World. At about twenty miles from Berlin is situated the village of Sperenberg, noted for the deepest well that has ever been sunk. Owing to the presence of gypsum in the locality, which is, at a moderate distance from the capital, it occurred to the government authorities in charge of the mines to attempt to obtain a supply of rock salt. With this end in view the sinking of a shaft or well, sixteen feet in diameter, was commenced some five years ago, and at a depth of two hundred and eighty feet the salt was reached. The boring was continued to a further depth of nine hundred and sixty feet, the diameter of this bore being reduced to about thirteen inches. The operations were subsequently prosecuted by the aid of steam until a depth of four thousand one hundred and ninety-four feet was attained. At this point the boring was discontinued, the borer or bit being still in the salt deposit, which thus exhibits the enormous thickness of three thousand nine hundred and seven feet. The boring would have been continued, in order to discover what description of deposit lay under the salt, but for the mechanical difficulties connected with the further prosecution of the operations. During the progress of this interesting work repeated and careful observations were made of the temperature at various depths. The results confirm very closely those which have been already arrived at under similar circumstances.

Stories About Church Pews.—A new English work, entitled the History and Law of Church-Seats or Pews, contains some curious stories:

At Cholderton, Wiltshire, is a pew six feet high, with glass windows in the door, to enable the occupants to see the preacher, and other windows in the side, to enable them to survey the congregation. At Merstham, Surrey (until very recently,) and at Mickleham, Surrey, were pews raised some feet above the level of the cold, damp floor, comfortably fitted, and possessing a fireplace and table—by no means uncommon examples.

In Little Bsmingham church, Norfolk, a pew was erected by a shepherd in the nave to afford accommodation for strangers and wedding parties. It bears at the southwest angle a skeleton carved in wood (which probably was not thought by the occupants particularly cheerful or appropriate) with the inscription:

"For couples joined in wedlock; and my friend,
That stranger is; this seate I doe intendo,
But (built?) at the cost and charge of Stephen Crosbee.

"All you that doe this place pass by,
As you are naw, even soo was I;
Remember death, for you must dye,
And as I am, soe shall you bee.
Anno Domini, 1640."

The late Dean Buckland is said to have been so intimately acquainted with the properties of all the geological formations of England that, being one night belated, and not knowing where he was, he alighted from his horse, took up a clod of earth and examined it, when he immediately exclaimed, "Uxbridge!" and proceeded on his journey.

"Mr. Smith, I wish to speak to you a moment privately. Permit me to take you apart." Smith (who wasn't the least bit frightened:) "Certainly, sir, if you'll promise to put me together again."

SCHOOL BOOKS—SCHOOL BOOKS.

"Southern Books for Southern Schools."

School-Books which are Unsectional, Unpartisan, and Unpolitical.

PREPARED BY THE MOST EMINENT SOUTHERN SCHOLARS, AND

ENTIRELY ACCEPTABLE TO SOUTHERN TEACHERS AND PARENTS.

The University Publishing Co.,

An Association composed of many of the most eminent citizens of the several Southern States, is publishing the necessity for a series of School Books which should be entirely unsectional, unpartisan, and unpolitical, and in their teaching should not be offensive to the thought and feeling of the Southern people—which should present only the facts of history and science—are now issuing a complete series of School and College Text-books by the eminent Southern scholars and educators named below, which are the

Cheapest, Best, and Most Beautiful School-Books

Now published. The "University Series" embraces

MAURY'S GEOGRAPHICAL SERIES,

By Commodore M. F. Maury, of the Virginia Military Institute. A series of books which mark an era in the study of this science, and which, in the words of a well known and accomplished Southern teacher, "are characterized by a felicity of arrangement and simple freshness of style which must ever render them attractive to the young, and which will be used by all who wish to teach Geography as a science, as something to make pupils think, and not merely as an enumeration of dry facts."

Holmes' Readers and Spellers,

By George F. Holmes, LL.D., Professor of History and General Literature in the University of Virginia. A series of Readers unequalled in cheapness, excellence, and typographical beauty. They are steadily progressive in character, bright and fresh in their selections of prose and verse, and illustrative of Southern scenes, incidents, and history.

Venable's Arithmetical Series,

By Charles S. Venable, LL.D., Professor of Mathematics in the University of Virginia. These books are received everywhere by intelligent teachers with the highest satisfaction, as being most admirably adapted for mental drill, as well as for business education. Their methods, rules, and reasonings are clear, distinct, logical, and comprehensive, and the series is carefully graded throughout.

Holmes' History of the United States,

By George F. Holmes, LL.D., of the University of Virginia. It is enough to say of this admirable work, interesting, impartial, and truthful, as well as pure and graceful in style, that it is the only History of the United States which is acceptable to Southern teachers and parents. It comes down to the present date.

BRADLEY'S PATENT CROQUET.

We desire to call the attention of our friends and the public generally to our large and well-assorted stock of CROQUET from the celebrated manufactory of MILTON BRADLEY & CO. The increasing demand for out-door games at this season of the year, combining exercise with harmless amusement, induced us to adopt this branch of business in connection with others; and to enable our friends to have the best of the kind, containing all modern improvements, we have made arrangements with this well-known house to supply the demand from their manufactory.

THE PATENT CROQUET

has many valuable improvements, among the most important of which is the PATENT BRIDGE, and to which we desire to call especial attention. It belongs to each set of Croquet, and the accompanying cut shows plainly the relative condition of the ordinary bridge and after a brief usage. There are many other advantages to which we could call attention, but our space will not admit. Catalogues and Price Lists, containing full particulars of this and other popular games, mailed to any address on application. Thirteen different styles of Croquet, from $4 to $20 a set. Address

THE PATENT BRIDGE

THE OLD, OLD HOME.

When I longed for sainted memories,
Like angel troops they come,
If I fold my arms to ponder
On the old, old home.
The heart has many passages
Through which the feelings roam,
But its middle aisle is sacred
To the thoughts of old, old home.

Where infancy was sheltered
Like rosebuds from the blast;
Where girlhood's brief elysium
In joyousness was passed;
To that sweet spot forever,
As to some hallowed dome,
Life's pilgrim bends her vision—
'Tis her old, old home.

A father sat, how proudly,
By that hearthstone's rnys,
And told his children stories
Of his early manhood days;
And one soft eye was beaming,
From child to child 'twould roam;
Thus a mother counts its treasures,
In the old, old home.

The birthday gifts and festivals,
The blended vesper hymn
(Some dear one who was swelling it Is with the seraphim,)
The fond "good nights" at bed-time,
How quiet sleep would come,
And fold us altogether
In the old, old home.

Like a wreath of scented flowers
Close intertwined each heart;
But time and change in concert
Have blown the wreath npart;
But dear and sainted memories
Like angels overcome.
If I fold my arms and ponder
On the old, old home.

THE GREAT WORK.

"Knowing the terrors of the Lord, we persuade men." And we know, too, "the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ; that he who was rich," for the sake of all the blind and infatuated sinful men about us, and in our world, "became poor, that they, through his poverty, might be made rich;" that he is "rich to all that call upon him," and has no "respect of persons," and by us has commanded his truth to be dispersed and his grace to be distributed. Let these views more deeply influence us, that we may never loiter in the work assigned to each of us, if we are truly recovered to God ourselves—that of "strengthening our brethren." On them who are perishing for lack of knowledge never can we too earnestly and affectionately and yearningly "set our hearts." If you convert a sinner from the error of his ways you "save a soul from death;" and can a more powerful motive be urged? You place another child in the family of God; you open a mind to knowledge ever enlarging, and to feelings which shall yield a felicity more noble and sanctifying throughout eternity. You advance the rapture of angels; for "there is joy in heaven over one sinner that repenteth." You heighten the joy of your Lord himself; for "he sees of the travail of his soul, and is satisfied." Happy will it be when this true estimate of man shall be taken by the universal church of Christ. Its torpor will be shaken off, its disputes and bickerings silenced, and every thought be absorbed, and every energy put forth in the solemn work of saving souls from death. O thou who hast set thine heart upon man, inspire us with some larger portion of thine own boundless and tender charity!—Richard Watson.

Now then, while it is possible, let us recover ourselves from our fall; let us not despair of restoration, if we break loose from our vices. He will put the best robe on thy soul, when it has put off the old man with his deeds; he will put a ring on thy hands when they have been washed from the blood of death; he will put shoes on thy feet when they have turned from the evil way to the path of the gospel of peace; and he will proclaim a day of joy and gladness to the whole family of both angels and men, and will celebrate thy salvation with every form of rejoicing; for he himself says: "Verily I say unto you that joy shall be in heaven before God over one sinner that repenteth." And if any of those that stand by should seem to find fault, because thou art so quickly received, the good Father himself will plead for thee, saying: "It was meet that we should make merry and be glad; for this my daughter was dead, and is alive again, and was lost, and is found."—Basil.

A Lost Life.—A young man was converted during an illness which proved fatal, though this was not apprehended when he gave his heart to Christ. When death approached he expressed entire resignation, and requested his friends to sing a hymn. An hour or two after, in the silence of the room, he was heard to say: "Lost, lost, lost!" This surprised his mother, and caused the immediate inquiry: "My son, are your hopes feeble?" "No, mother; but O, my lost lifetime! I'm twenty-four, and, until a few weeks since, nothing has been done for Christ, and everything for myself and my pleasures. My companions will think I've made a profession in view of death. O that I could live to meet this remark, and do something to show my sincerity, and to redeem my lost, lost, lost life!"

SCIENTIFIC.

The sunflower has the remarkable property of purifying air laden with marsh miasm, absorbing a great quantity of moist and noxious gases, and exhaling the oxidized oxygen. Many instances are cited where its cultivation has rendered whole quarters healthy and fever-free, which were previously uninhabited by the prevalence of fever.

Prof. Muller, in a course of lectures in Berlin, offered a simple and mechanical explanation of the universal admiration bestowed on circles. The eye is moved in its socket by six muscles, of which four are respectively employed to raise, depress, turn to the right and to the left. The other two have an action contrary to one another, and roll the eye on its axis, or from the outside downward, and inside upward. When, therefore, an object is presented for inspection the first act is that of circumvision, or going round the boundary lines, so as to bring consecutively every individual portion of the circumference upon the most delicate and sensitive portion of the retina. Now, if figures bounded by straight lines be presented for inspection, it is obvious that but two of these muscles can be called into action; and it is equally evident that in curves of a circle or ellipse all must alternately be brought into action. The effect, then, is that if two only be employed, as in rectilinear figures, those two have an undue share of labor; and by repeating the experiment frequently, as we do in childhood, the notion of tedium is instilled, a distaste for straight lines is gradually formed, and we are led to prefer those curves which supply a more general and equable share of work to the muscles.

A glass composition, which may be made at any time into curled or frizzled yarn, has been discovered by M. Brunfaut, of Vienna. These frizzled threads surpass in fineness not only the finest cotton, but even a single cocoon thread, and they appear at the same time almost as soft and elastic as silk lint, and beautiful to the eye. These smooth threads are now woven in textile fabrics, which are made into cushions, carpets, table-cloths, shawls, neckties, cuffs, collars and various other articles, and they may be used for weaving the figures in brocaded silk or velvet. As a material for fancy dresses, tapestry, for covering furniture, for laces, embroidery, etc., it is thought that this glass tissue will at some future time occupy a prominent place. In softness the glass yarn almost approaches silk, and to the touch it is like the choicest wool or cotton. It also possesses a remarkable strength, remains unchanged in light and warmth, and is not altered by moisture and acids. Another great advantage over other textile fabrics which it necessarily possesses is that of being non-inflammable and incombustible. The composition of this glass material is peculiar to the inventor. The spinning requires extraordinary dexterity and constant attention, and is said to be very trying to the sight. With a wheel of the diameter of five Austrian yards one operative is able to spin three thousand yards per minute, all of the most uniform size and beautiful quality.

Prof. Palmieri's experiments at his observatory, half way up Mount Vesuvius, really throw great light on the philosophy of our thunderstorms. Having watched the changes of atmospheric electricity there for nearly a quarter of a century, he believes he has detected their obedience to certain definite laws. One of the facts he has established is that the electricity of any station is always positive if there be no shower of rain, hail or snow falling within the distance of fifty miles, and provided there be no projection of ashes from the crater of the mountain. If a shower be falling within this radius the following law holds good: At the place there is a strong development of positive electricity, round this there is a zone of negative, and beyond this again positive electricity. Should negative electricity be observed during the shower, it will be found to be induced by a more powerful zone of positive electricity farther away. All this has been ascertained by means of telegraphic communication with both neighboring and distant regions. There is no usual development of electricity except where and when the moisture of the air is being condensed. In a cloud from which no rain is falling there is no greater electrical activity than elsewhere. But the moment aqueous vapor begins to condense into drops, positive electricity is thereby created, and the greater in quantity the greater the precipitation by changes of temperature. When, therefore, this condensation is extremely rapid a superabundance of electricity accumulates, which must find its way to the negative zone, perhaps, or to the earth below, by lightning discharges—in other words, thunder-storms are produced.

The man who can be nothing but serious, or nothing but merry, is but half a man.—Leigh Hunt.

THE VERB "TO BREAK."

"I begin to understand your language better," said my French friend, Mr. Arcourt, to me; "but your verbs trouble me still; you mix them so with your prepositions."

"I am sorry you find them troublesome," was all I could say.

"I saw our friend Mrs. James just now," continued he. "She says she intends to break down housekeeping. Am I right there?"

"Break up housekeeping, she must have said."

"O, yes, I remember. Break up housekeeping."

"Why does she do that?" I asked.

"Because her health is so broken into."

"Broken down, you should say."

"Broken down, O, yes. And indeed since the smallpox has broken up in your city—"

"Broken out."

"She thinks she will leave it for a few weeks."

"Indeed! And will she close her house?"

"No, she is afraid it will be broken—broken—How do I say that?"

"Broken into."

"Certainly; it is what I meant to say."

"Is her son to be married soon?"

"No; that engagement is broken—broken—"

"Broken off."

"Ah! I had not heard that. She is very sorry about it. Her son only broke the news down to her last week. Am I right? I am so anxious to speak the English well."

"He merely broke the news; no preposition this time."

"It is hard to understand. That young man, her son, is a fine fellow; a breaker, I think."

"A broker, and a very fine fellow. Good day."

"So much," thought I, "for the verb 'to break.'"—The Educational Monthly.

Philadelphia Chemists have analyzed water running through galvanized iron pipe, and find it to be as poisonous as that which coursed through leaden tubes. The zinc with which the galvanized pipes are coated is what does the fatal work.

PARLOR AND CHURCH ORGANS

—ARE—

NOT EQUALED FOR PURITY AND BRILLIANCY OF TONE.

Their peculiar construction and arrangement gives them extraordinary power.
Their Solo Stops are most remarkable for beauty and variety of effect.
They are constructed in the most thorough and perfect manner.
They invite special attention to their

SOLO STOPS.

THE VOX HUMANA,

PATENTED SEPTEMBER 13, 1870, AND JANUARY 23, 1872,

producing a beautiful and sympathetic quality of tone, capable of the most exquisite modulation, and when used with the "Tremolo," which accompanies it, resembles more than any other organ stop the peculiar trill of the human voice.

THE VOX CELESTE,

possessing a peculiar and thrilling quality of tone, most pipe-like in its nature, and which can be used in many passages with charming effect.

The above Stops are in every case separate, and additional sets of reeds, are entirely distinct from the "Tremolo," which always accompanies them, and which is never perfect without them, and can all be brought at will into the full organ, adding greatly to its power and richness of tone.

They take pleasure in announcing to the musical public and the trade the valuable addition to their Organs of a most beautiful Solo Stop,

THE ÆOLINE.

It is an additional set of reeds, exquisitely voiced and ingeniously arranged in a separate wind-chest (patented September 13, 1870.) Its quality of tone is the most delicate and soft imaginable. It is capable of the greatest variety of effects in combination with their other stops, the improved VOX HUMANA in particular. It has elicited the warmest encomiums from all organists and musicians who have examined it. It is perfectly simple in its construction, and they predict for it the highest degree of success. Its charming effects, especially when used in connection with their improved styles of cases, can but be appreciated by every musician.

IMPROVED CASES, ETC.

By the construction of these Cases the quality of tone in their Instruments has been greatly improved, every facility for the comfort and convenience of the performer has been provided for, and the effect of their beautiful and graceful design is such as to entirely obviate the disagreeable boxy appearance which has been for so long a time an unpleasant characteristic of the Reed Organ.

In addition to the above improvements, attention is called to

PERFECT VALVES and WOODS' OCTAVE COUPLER.

The Factories of George Woods & Co. are among the largest, and probably without exception the best-arranged in the country. Their machinery is of the latest and most improved pattern, and all the labor is performed under the eyes of the employers, who are mechanics with reputations second to none for knowledge of the business, ingenuity, faithfulness and ability. With every advantage that extensive capital can command, they are determined that the Organs of their manufacture

SHALL BE IN EVERY RESPECT THE FINEST AND BEST.

They endeavor to obtain and secure the confidence of their agents, and to assist and encourage them in every possible way.

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

RICHMOND, March 26.—The joint resolution indorsing Gov. Walker's plan for the assumption by the Federal government of the debts of the States has passed both houses of the General Assembly, and the Governor has been instructed to forward a copy of the resolution and his message on the subject to the Legislatures of the several States.

The Senate passed the joint resolution to amend the State constitution so as to provide for biennial sessions of the General Assembly.

PHILADELPHIA, March 27.—Governor Hartranft has signed the bill appropriating $1,000,000 to the centennial exhibition.

OMAHA, March 27.—It is reported that the Indians are raiding on the stock near Cheyenne, Wyoming.

NEW YORK, March 28.—A Herald London special says: "There has been severe fighting in Spain, in which the Carlists claim an important victory. The government troops retreated to Gronallos, much demoralized, where they were captured by Sabullo. The small garrison also surrendered there."

There has been a demonstration at Turragona in commemoration of the establishment of the Paris Commune.

A street fight occurred in Barcelona, in which six persons were killed.

WASHINGTON, March 28.—The Senate committee on the levees of the Mississippi, at a meeting held yesterday, took measures for obtaining specific information upon that subject, through correspondents, and will, during the recess of Congress, make a personal examination of that river and the general interests connected with it.

The committee consists of Senators Alcorn, of Mississippi, as chairman, Clayton, of Arkansas, West, of Louisiana, Schurz, of Missouri, and Gordon, of Georgia. They will prosecute the inquiry diligently, and at the next session will urge that the general government take charge of the levee system as a matter of great national concern.

CANTON, MISS., March 29.—A tornado swept through this place last night, striking about Captain Frank Smith's; it took a southwestern direction, destroying nearly all the property from the right portion of the town through to the new cemetery.

The following is a list of the places damaged: The courthouse, very much injured every way; the Pearce house, and all the buildings north of it to Holt's corner, destroyed; the Stone property, Baldwin's house, a negro church and all the houses in that neighborhood blown down.

Powell's house and six outhouses gone. Two loaded cars on an extension spur of the track were blown fifteen feet from the track, and one of them was wrecked. The telegraph lines between here and the tank were blown down. The railroad section men will assist in getting them up again.

Several persons are reported killed and wounded, but at the present time their names cannot be ascertained, nor can the number injured nor full extent of the damage be learned.

NEW YORK, March 29.—The gale is increasing and the rain is pouring in torrents. Awnings and street signs have been blown down. About one hundred feet of the postoffice fence in Park Row has been blown down; no one hurt.

All out-door labor to-day is suspended.

SAN FRANCISCO, March 31.—News from Australia and the Sandwich Islands, by the steamship Moses Taylor, is unimportant.

There is great scarcity of coal in New Zealand, and prices have advanced to fall rates.

King Lunalilo, now the monarch of the Sandwich Islands, has made the tour of his kingdom, in a United States steamship, on the invitation of Admiral Pennock. The King will come to San Francisco with General Schofield to make a tour of the United States.

KEY WEST, March 31.—The Cubans have captured Mennsville, an important point on the east coast.

LITTLE ROCK, March 31.—The bridge over White river was completed to-day, thereby giving Little Rock an unbroken railroad connection with St. Louis.

WASHINGTON, April 1.—Edward Pennington has been appointed centennial commissioner from Louisiana.

General Ducrot, who commanded at Sedan and Paris during the siege, recently stated to a correspondent in Paris that the republic was a failure. The only safety of France was the restoration of monarchy or the empire; that France must fight again, and that, in his opinion, Thiers wanted to attempt to prolong his term till his death.

Advices from the United States Darien exploring expedition, to March 15, represent the health of the officers and men as good, and satisfactory progress being made. Everything so far seems to point toward the valley of the Napipi as possessing all the qualifications requisite for the canal.

FOREIGN.

CITY OF MEXICO, March 20, via Havana.—General Alatorre has been appointed Governor of Yucatan.

The remains of an ancient temple, supposed to have been erected centuries before the discovery of Mexico, have been found in the San Jose mountains, in the State of Chiapas. Three stone statues, representing Assyrian sculptories, have been found in the vicinity of the temple.

The revolution in Guatemala is gaining strength. The government troops have met with reverses.

MADRID, March 26.—A levy en masse upon the adult male population of Catalonia and the neighboring provinces for troops to suppress the Carlist insurrection is probable. Many Republicans who have volunteered to fight the insurgents are already meeting at an appointed rendezvous.

The Imparcial announces that Don Carlos has abdicated his claim to the Spanish throne in favor of his son, under the regency of Don Alphonso.

General Cabreza has been appointed to the supreme command of the Carlist forces in Spain.

LISBON, March 26.—The minister of public works has asked the Cortes to ratify the concession for a cable between Portugal and the United States, touching at the Azores.

The contract for laying the cable was signed to-day.

MADRID, March 27.—It is rumored that a secession is on foot in the Canaries, the leaders of which propose to declare the islands independent, and ask for a British protectorate.

General Hidalgo has been appointed captain general of the Canaries.

Insubordination is spreading in the army in Catalonia. Many officers have been threatened with death and obliged to flee.

The Carlists are masters of Upper Catalonia.

PARIS, March 27.—The death of Amedee Aimon Dominique Thierry, an eminent French historian, is announced this morning. Thierry was in the seventy-sixth year of his age.

The Countess Guiccioli has just died at Rome.

MADRID, March 30.—Intelligence has reached here that the town of Berga, which was captured by Carlists on Friday, has been destroyed by fire by the insurgents, who, before applying the torch, saturated a number of the buildings with petroleum.

LONDON, March 31.—The Rev. Mr. Miles, secretary of the American Peace Society, sails this week for the United States. The results of his mission to Europe, in the interests of arbitration as a method for settling all international disputes, he says, are encouraging.

Since his return to London, accompanied by Minister Schenck, he has had an interview with Mr. Gladstone, which was of the most satisfactory character.

HALIFAX, N. S., April 1.—This afternoon a report being current that a steamer had been wrecked on the coast and several lives lost, it was at first regarded as a cruel April fool hoax, but this evening the Cunard agents here received news that it was true, and that only a little of the truth had been told, the fact being that the White Star steamer Atlantic, Captain Williams, from Liverpool for New York, while coming into this port for coal, struck on Meagher's Rock, near Prospect, twenty-two miles west of Halifax, and became a total wreck. Of about one thousand souls on board, upward of seven hundred were drowned.

BAYONNE, April 1.—The Carlists in Spain are receiving supplies, arms, ammunition and provisions in various ways, but mostly by sea. Four hundred Carlists, recruited in Navarre last week, were equipped almost as soon as their organization was effected. Ello, director of the Carlist committee, has eluded local authorities, who had orders for his arrest, and crossed into Spain on Saturday last.

From the Work.

MEETING AT MOSS POINT, MISSISSIPPI.—Mr. Editor: We have just closed a season of protracted service at the church in this place, and seldom have we witnessed an occasion of more interest. The services were conducted by our esteemed pastor, Rev. P. H. Napier, assisted by our presiding elder, Rev. Mr. Gillaspie, and Rev. Mr. Faust, from Mobile, with one sermon by a Baptist brother, Rev. Mr. Mitchell. The audiences were large, and gave an attention to the services such as we have never seen excelled. Several additions were made to the church, and the members were greatly revived and strengthened. We note with pleasure the fact that at this point, which enjoys a present prosperity not surpassed in the State, and bids fair at no distant day to be a place of large commercial importance, a determination on the part of this church to lay the foundation of our future prosperity by establishing a high standard of morality and religion. A LAYMAN.

MOSS POINT, MISS., March 26, 1873.

A Correction.

MR. EDITOR: I have just received the Minutes of our last Conference, and discover a very serious mistake in regard to the finances of our circuit. Justice to all demands a correction. In the column, "total collected for all purposes," Mansfield circuit is credited with $2,324. This is a mistake, arising from the fact that the secretary has added $250 house-rent to the amount collected. This $250 is included in the $1,045 salary receipts. It was paid out of that, and not over and above it. Mansfield should be credited with $2,074.70. I make this correction in justice to all concerned.

The Southern Methodist Publishing House.

This institution has a history, which, if written, would be read with interest. At present only a few of the most prominent and important items will be attempted.

In the year 1833 the Revs. L. Garrett and John N. Maffitt commenced the publication of the Western Methodist, a weekly religious paper, in Nashville. This was adopted by the Tennessee Conference on certain conditions, specified in a written contract. Mr. Garrett also established in Nashville a book depository, where most of the Methodist publications were kept on hand for sale. Messrs. Garrett and Maffitt for awhile published a monthly, containing original sermons from living ministers of the gospel. Within a short time Mr. Maffitt sold his interest in the Western Methodist to Mr. Garrett, who continued its publication till 1836, having been assisted one year in the editorial department by the Rev. J. W. Hanner.

In 1836 Mr. Garrett sold the paper, with its "good will," to the Methodist Episcopal Church, the General Conference of that year having resolved to locate at Nashville a weekly paper called the Southwestern Christian Advocate. The Rev. Thomas Stringfield was elected the editor, and entered upon his duties in the autumn of 1836. He continued to conduct the paper for four years, having been assisted one year by the Rev. J. W. Hanner, when, in 1840, J. B. McFerrin was elected editor, in which position he continued till 1854, assisted a part of the time by the Rev. M. M. Henkle, D. D., and the Rev. C. B. Parsons, D. D. During this period Messrs. McFerrin and Henkle projected the Southern Lady's Companion, which was continued till May, 1851.

In 1844 the division of the church occurred, and in adjusting the property question, the Christian Advocate, with all its interests, was transferred to the Church South. The whole matter being settled and the book agents of the Northern branch of the church having engaged to pay to the South her proportion, as per contract in the plan of separation, the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South of 1854 resolved to establish a publishing house, which was located at Nashville. Between the years 1844 and 1854, and before the property question between the North and the South was finally settled, the Rev. J. Early and the Rev. E. Stevenson acted as book agents for the Methodist Episcopal Church South. They had large establishments at Richmond, Virginia, and Louisville, Kentucky. Those two establishments were merged into the general concern in 1854, and became a part of the capital of the Publishing House. The Rev. E. Stevenson and the Rev. F. A. Owen were elected the agents. The Rev. T. O. Summers, D. D., was elected editor of books, the Sunday School Visitor, etc. J. B. McFerrin was re-elected editor of the Christian Advocate, and the Rev. L. D. Huston editor of the Home Circle, which took the place of the Lady's Companion. Prior to 1854 Messrs. A. P. McFerrin and John W. Hunter had opened a large book store in Nashville, where they kept on hand most of the publications of the Methodist Church. Messrs. Stevenson and Owen, by the advice of the book committee, purchased their entire stock, and employed Messrs. McFerrin and Hunter in the new concern. In a short time the office of secretary of the Tract Society was filled by the election of the Rev. J. Hamilton, D. D., who at once entered zealously upon his work. Thus completely organized, the Southern Methodist Publishing House commenced its career of usefulness.

The capital of the house at the beginning, including bonds, notes, cash, old accounts, etc., most of which were utterly worthless, and including a donation from the citizens of Nashville of $17,000, may be put down at $350,000, or perhaps nearly $400,000. Out of this amount, after deducting the expenses of heavy law-suits, lawyers' fees, commissions, expenses, bad accounts, the support, in part, of the Bishops, as was the custom then, both North and South, and other expenditures in the interests of the church, the agents purchased real estate, type, fixtures and manufactured stereotype plates, etc., and put the concern in full operation. Dr. Stevenson served until May, 1858—four years. Rev. Mr. Owen served two years, and resigned in May, 1856, when Rev. James E. Evans, of Georgia, was elected to fill the vacancy; but after serving six months he resigned, and Rev. F. A. Owen was re-elected. May, 1858, Messrs. Stevenson and Owen both declining re-election, J. B. McFerrin was elected book agent; the Rev. R. Abbey, financial secretary; the Rev. Dr. Summers, editor of books, the Quarterly Review, the Sunday School Visitor and Sunday school books generally. The Rev. Dr. McTyeire was elected editor of the Christian Advocate, and Dr. Huston was re-elected editor of the Home Circle. Everything settled, prosperity seemed to await this great enterprise of the church. According to the plan of the General Conference of May, 1858, depositories were established in St. Louis, Louisville, Richmond, Macon, Mobile, Galveston and Memphis, with a branch of the house at New Orleans, and these were supplied with the publications of the house at very little above actual cost. Up to January, 1862, almost everything promised success. The house was doing a large business, and was making money by which to liquidate its liabilities and enlarge its sphere of usefulness. The Christian Advocate, the subscription list of which, in 1858, had reached to more than twelve thousand, was still popular, exerting a wide influence. The other publications of the house were gaining, and promised to increase. The Sunday school books were multiplying continually in numbers, as well as the books of the general catalogue. Watson's Institutes, Watson's Dictionary, Wesley's Sermons, hymn-books, Disciplines, Bascom's works, Preacher's Text-book, Winans' Sermons, Life of Capers, Life of Bascom, biographical sketches, etc., etc., with millions of pages of tracts, were going abroad to enlighten and bless the land.

In February, 1862, Fort Donelson fell, and Nashville was surrendered to the Federal troops. The book agent and all the officers went South, except the Rev. R. Abbey, who remained in charge of the house till it was taken by military authority, and converted into a government printing office, and turned to various other uses for the benefit of the United States government during the war. The property was retained by government authority till near the close of 1865, when, by order of the President of the United States, it was returned to the church. The losses sustained by the government use of the concern the writer will not here and now attempt to estimate, but they were very heavy, as will be seen by the following items which are copied from the Nashville Banner. The first General Conference after the war, it will be remembered, met in New Orleans, April, 1866. The condition of the Publishing House was deliberately considered, and, after a close vote in the committee, the General Conference determined to make an effort to revive the establishment, and prosecute the work of publishing as originally designed. They were fortunate in the selection of an agent, the Rev. A. H. Redford, D. D., who brought into the establishment talent, energy, perseverance and experience. Dr. Summers was elected editor of the Christian Advocate, Sunday School Visitor, and general editor of books and Sunday school publications—work enough for one man. Four years satisfied the General Conference that success would crown the newly-tried effort, and in 1870 Dr. Redford was re-elected agent, Dr. Summers editor of the Christian Advocate and the books of the general catalogue, and Dr. Haygood was placed in charge of the Sunday school department. Of the progress since 1870 the reader can judge by the following, taken from the Nashville Banner:

"It is gratifying to all friends of religious literature to know to what extent the present management have enlarged their field of usefulness, in the publications issued weekly and monthly. The Christian Advocate, the great official organ of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, goes out each week to twelve thousand subscribers, and when we consider that each paper will average at least six readers, we give Dr. Summers a weekly audience of at least seventy-five thousand, and we hope we may be permitted to give it as our opinion that the learned editor is fully competent for the task assigned him, and is issuing, in our judgment, one of the best church papers published on this continent, and, for aught we know, the equal of any on the globe.

"Dr. A. G. Haygood, of Georgia, presides over the Sunday school department, and prepares and sends out monthly sixty-five thousand copies of the Sunday School Visitor, fifty thousand copies of Our Little People, eighty thousand Lesson Papers, and twelve thousand Sunday School Magazines. It will be remembered that when Dr. Haygood was elected Sunday school secretary, in May, 1870, the Methodist Episcopal Church South had no periodical Sunday school literature except the Sunday School Visitor, and since then the secretary has adopted an admirable system of uniform lessons, which are rapidly being adopted throughout the entire connection, and wherever adopted they are winning golden opinions. It is a peculiar work, and one that many predicted the failure of, but the word fail is not in Dr. Haygood's unabridged, and under his guidance the enterprise has had unlooked-for prosperity, as the foregoing figures demonstrate.

"When we come to aggregate the figures as given above we find that the Southern Methodist Publishing House sends out annually three million one hundred and eight thousand newspapers, magazines, etc., saying nothing of the almost countless numbers of Disciplines, hymn-books, commentaries, church histories, Sunday school library books, and various other religious works.

THE WEEKLY PAY-ROLL,

for salaries, type-setting, binding, clerks, etc., amounts to $3,500 per week, or about $180,000 per annum; to this add three hundred reams of paper, costing $2,500, per month, for the printing of the periodicals, we have a grand total of over $200,000 expended annually for labor and paper.

TYPE.

"The cost of type and fixtures appertaining thereto is about $10,000, and the stereotype foundery and fixtures alone have cost $5,000.

OUTSIDE WORK.

"It is also worthy of note that in addition to what may be properly termed their own work, they do a vast amount of type-setting, press-work and binding by contract; the book-work of the board of publication of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, including the Theological Medium and the Sabbath School Gem, is done under contract, and reflects great credit on the house.

LETTERS RECEIVED.

"As going to show the extent of the operations of their business, it is worthy of note that they receive, on an average, about one thousand letters per week.

LOSSES BY FIRE.

"About thirteen months ago the buildings were partially burned, causing a loss to the house of about $25,000, of which only $5,000 was covered by insurance. They have now, however,

A NEW HOUSE.

"This building has a stone front, surmounted by a Mansard roof; it fronts one hundred and sixteen feet on the public square, and runs back to the river bluff, two hundred and twenty-four feet. The house is seven stories high at the rear and four in front, and adding the Mansard will make it five stories. To this new building the citizens of Nashville have, since the fire, contributed $33,000, to which add $17,000 contributed by them in 1855, and it will be seen that our people have the snug sum of $50,000 invested. There are four stores in the building, three of which have been rented to Messrs. Jennings, Goodbar & Co., Ewing, McClaugherty & Co., and Cooke, Settle & Co., while the fourth store will be used as a salesroom for the Publishing House. The house is now nearly completed, and is occupied by the parties to whom rented, except Messrs. Ewing, McClaugherty & Co., who have not yet moved in. When entirely finished there will be a room for the use of the missionary board, one for the Bishops, and offices for the use of the book agent, editor of the Advocate, Sunday school secretary, and the missionary secretary.

ITS PROSPERITY.

"Notwithstanding the embarrassed condition of the house when Dr. Redford was elected agent in 1866, we are glad to say that in examining the annual exhibit of the agent, made July 1, 1872, we find that the net profits for the year, ending June 30, 1872, were $33,189.23.

"In the management of its affairs Dr. Redford has the counsel and experience of an able book committee, consisting of Rev. J. E. Evans, of Georgia; Rev. J. H. Linn, D. D., St. Louis; Rev. P. A. Peterson, Norfolk, Virginia; Hon. J. S. Lithgow, Louisville, Kentucky; and Revs. A. L. P. Green, D. D., Dempsey Weaver, Thompson Anderson, T. D. Fite and Dr. W. H. Morgan, of this city. With an executive board of the ability possessed by these men, it is no wonder that the enterprise succeeds.

"Including agent, editors, book-keepers, clerks, compositors, binders, pressmen, etc., there are nearly one hundred persons engaged in the house.

"There are eight Adams presses and two cylinder presses, which are run by an engine of twenty-horse power, and the concern uses on an average one hundred and seventy-five bushels of coal per week."

From the foregoing it will be seen that the Methodist Episcopal Church South has a noble establishment, and one that, under God, promises to be a great blessing to the country and to the church.

Every section of the church should rally to the support of this vast and important interest, and not only repair the injury sustained by the fire of 1872, but labor to extend its usefulness ten-fold. The concern is yet in its infancy.

J. B. McFERRIN.

Reminiscences.

MR. EDITOR: For years past the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, published at New Orleans, has been a welcome visitor to my home—always highly prized because of its true merits, but more valued since my lot has been cast "over the river." Now it brings before me familiar faces every week in the communications from the members of the dear old Alabama Conference, my alma mater. To day I have been over the itinerant route by which I came—beginning at Big Sandy circuit, by the way of Brush Creek, Warsaw, Brooksville, Crawfordville, (the war,) Demopolis, Dayton, to Columbus station, from which point, at the solicitation of Bishop Pierce, I came to the Little Rock Conference; stationed three years in Pine Bluff, and now in my second year in the beautiful city of Little Rock. I have before me the appointments made at the last session of the Alabama Conference, and I call to mind a class of twenty-two, I believe, who were received on trial in the fall of 1851, myself being one of the number, and I find remaining: Rush, Hawkins, McCarty, Mobley, Woodward and Sumpey.

The college question, you remember, brought into existence the Mobile and Montgomery Conferences; then the lines were drawn again, and the Alabama and North Alabama appeared, giving a portion to Mississippi. The brethren have been somewhat scattered, I discover—Dr. Hamilton, Ross and others to the North Alabama: J. T. Heard to Mississippi; J. A. Heard to Memphis; Ramsey, Weir and Cameron to North Mississippi; Vaughan to Texas; Nicholson to Florida; Mathews to your Louisiana; Parker and your correspondent to Little Rock. Some have died, and last in this list I notice the name of James L. Cotton. A good preacher, an earnest, faithful worker in the vineyard was lost when he died. A little incident will show the interest he felt in the young preachers. During the session of the Conference, in the city of Selma, the writer, in his presence, used a "slang phrase." His reproof was gentle, kind. In an under-tone he said: "My brother, I would not use slang; it will injure you." And the lesson has not been forgotten.

God has been merciful to me and mine. Our lives have been spared, and our efforts to do good blessed; and yet, as I look back to-day over the old field of labor, I long to see the faces of my brethren, as in other days. In my Western home toil and nerve are required to do my Master's will, but I am among brethren beloved, who are noble, laborious, self-sacrificing in this open field. "The harvest is truly plenteous."

Alabama Conference.

MR. EDITOR: In looking over our printed Minutes I was interested in the statistical and financial report. Believing too that some facts gathered from them might be productive of good, if presented to the attention of the church through the columns of the ADVOCATE, I send the following:

Increase of church property during the past year, not including churches and parsonages, $97,534.

Increase in amount paid to support the ministry over the previous year, $4,056.

Increase of collections over the previous year, namely, Bishops', missionary and Conference, $1,290.

Twenty-four new churches and four parsonages built, with increased value of the same, $31,484. Making a grand total of $154,361. This does not include the amount contributed to the poor, Sunday school and other expenses of the church. It is encouraging to see this increased awakening on the part of the membership to the interests of the church. There was an increase of new subscribers to our church periodicals of 226. Suppose this number had been 2,000, instead of 200, which it could and should have been—is there not every reason to believe that the contributions to the various enterprises of Zion would have been doubled?

But we cannot enlarge our space by comments. Let us notice the result of the year's labors by districts, and see which has been the most successful and liberal:

Mobile district—2,257 members; paid about $4.33⅓ per member to support of the ministry, and 80 cents per member to the collections.

Demopolis—2,284 members; paid a fraction less than $4 per member to support of the ministry, and about 49½ cents to collections.

Selma—2,44 members; paid a fraction over $4.11 per member to support of the ministry, and 77 cents per member to collections.

Greensboro—2,705 members; paid per member $3.16⅔ to support of the ministry, and about 42½ cents to collections.

Montgomery—4,216 members; paid about $3.27 per member to support of ministry, and about 72 cents per member to collections.

Eufaula—2,525 members; paid a fraction less than $3.31½ to support of the ministry, and a fraction over 53 cents per member to collections.

Marianna—3,319 members; paid 94 cents per member to support of the ministry, and 12½ cents per member to collections.

Camden—2,792 members; paid a fraction over $1.77 to support of the ministry, and 17 cents to collections.

Union Springs—3,478 members; paid a fraction over $2.30 to support of the ministry, and a fraction over 35 cents to collections.

The collections include Bishops', Conference and missionary. From the above we learn that Selma district stands at the head of the list, and Marianna at the foot in point of liberality to the varied interests of the church. Selma is justly the banner district, notwithstanding the unprecedented pecuniary loss of the members of the church, within its bounds, by the overflow of the rivers bounding their territory. In their great poverty their liberality abounded. Marianna district, I believe, is a mission, or should be until it learns to walk alone. It does seem that the members of the church on that district can do better if they will. Some children are so timid, when small, that they refuse to make any effort to learn to walk, and go-carts have to be brought into requisition to aid and encourage them. Perhaps some sort of ecclesiastical apparatus might be introduced to teach the people down there to walk. Perhaps some Alabama Bonnerges may yet arouse them from their Rip Van Winkle sleep, and apprise them of the fact that their limbs are strong enough to use without danger. Now that our church is enlarging her missionary borders, and the Macedonian cry, "Come over and help us," is heard from distant fields, it is high time that the entire membership of the church should be arranging to invest largely in this real estate of spiritual wealth. To sum up, all the districts in the Alabama Conference may be pronounced in a healthy, growing condition but two, Marianna and Camden. But we hope better things of them in the future. Altogether we have much to be congratulated for, and should thank God and take courage.

GREEN FIELDS JUST IN SIGHT.

"At the portals of the morning
Stood a child with dainty feet;
All about him golden sunshine,
Pearly dew and blossom sweet;
And with tender, dimpled fingers
Plucked the flowers fresh and fair,
And the overhanging branches
Showed the dew-drops in his hair.

Looking forward o'er life's pathway,
Saw he broader fields of green,
Skies with snowy clouds so fleecy,
Here and there blue shreds between;
And with sunlit, flying footsteps
Started he for fields more bright;
But in vain he hurried onward—
They were always just in sight.

Warmer, brighter grew the sunshine;
Broader, rougher grew the way;
But with green fields just before him,
Nothing could his footsteps stay.
So he wandered on, till manhood
Took the place of childhood fair;
Then he threw aside his flowers,
Wiped the dew-drops from his hair.

Onward, onward, toiling, striving,
Helping others with his might,
Saw he that the blooming meadows
That are always just in sight
Lie within the dark, cold river.
Here we only wish and wait,
Till the Master calls us over,
And unbars the pearly gate.

REPLY TO REV. J. W. SHORES' PROTEST.

MR. EDITOR: Bro. Shores' article, on page 2 of your issue of February 13, deserves notice, since it is calculated to mislead. Several things about it are objectionable.

1. It is so in its purpose as a protest. As such it should have gone on the journal of the Conference, where the record would have explained it; not into the ADVOCATE, where it gives an ex parte view of the case. Isolated, it supports the inference that the Alabama Conference was possessed of $13,000 in its own right; that each member has a personal pro rata interest in that fund; that the Conference, under an impulse of misguided liberality, so invested it that a favored few will get all the income, while the many will be "cut off from the benefit of their own money." How this is we will see in the sequel.

2. It is objectionable in its spirit. Take the following: "I have ever felt and taken more interest in this institution than any of its special guardians and custodians have in me." Again: "My counsel for its management, success and prosperity may not be worthy of the notice or consideration of its special friends, yet my personal interest in education, and my devotion to the Conference in which I have spent twenty-two years of active ministerial life, would certainly cause me to be true to the institution claimed as 'the college of the Conference.'" I know not to what allusion is made in the first quotation. One who esteems Bro. Shores as his present reviewer does cannot but regret, for his sake, that he sent it abroad. As to his "counsel" not being considered "worthy of notice," etc.—well, I will not comment.

3. It is objectionable because it puts the action of the Conference in a wrong point of view. Had the Conference done in the premises what Bro. Shores says it should have done, it would have betrayed a most sacred trust. Surely those who claim a personal interest in those funds know nothing of their history and nature. They came into the hands of the Conference as a bequest, not for the personal benefit of its members, but to be so directed by the Conference as to promote the cause of religion. How, then, can they be so considered the funds of the individual members of the Conference that all who do not receive an annual dividend are "cut off from the benefit of their own money?" As well might the managers of the American Bible Society claim the bequests made to that noble institution for their personal benefit. It was with surprise and pain that the writer heard the claim set up at the late session of our Conference to a personal interest in those funds, and saw the claim urged in the article under review—surprise that any one failed to discriminate promptly between funds held by the Conference in trust and funds held for the benefit of its members; pain to see that the direction given to those funds is likely to provoke hostility to our colleges. The question to be settled by the Conference was: How can this money be invested so as to bring the largest return to the cause of Christianity? By a large majority it was answered: By making the money serve, on the best plan in their view, the cause of sanctified learning. I am glad to be able to report to the world that any personal benefit to the members of the Conference was held subordinate to the main object. In view of these facts, how remarkable the declaration that preachers with incomes too limited to justify boarding their children at our Conference schools help to pay the tuition fees of the children of preachers more highly favored!

This, by the way, answers Bro. West's inquiries in your issue of March 6. The Alabama Conference does not propose to give any portion of the funds it holds in trust to the preachers of the North Alabama Conference. But, having settled the interest of $10,000 on the Southern University, the faculty of that institution and the Alabama Conference are willing that it shall be considered an equivalent for the tuition fees of the sons of the members of both Alabama Conferences, and of such indigent young men as are preparing for the ministry. No offense was intended to our North Alabama brethren by extending to them this privilege. But to return.

4. The scheme of Bro. Shores is objectionable on grounds of both principle and policy. "What a fine nucleus," he writes, "this $10,000, with the $3,000 turned over to the Alabama Female College at Tuskegee, would have been to establish a respectable fund, the annual interest of which might have been used, as I have indicated, for the education of preachers' children." This postulates that those funds belong to the preachers in their personal right, which has just been shown to be an error. But this aside. What sanction does God's word give to the Christian ministry to create large endowments for their personal benefit? If church history proves anything, it proves that endowments of that nature tend to invite unworthy men into the ministry; to foster in those who hold that sacred relation the spirit of money-loving, ambition and aggression upon the rights of others; to the substitution of ecclesiasticism, which exalts the clergy, for true religion, which enfranchises the individual soul. It proves that an endowed clergy is the curse of both the church and the world. Neither the form the endowment takes nor its amount affects the principle involved. That is wrong, on all correct principles of both philosophy and religion.

But on grounds of policy also I oppose this scheme. My experience and observation as an itinerant satisfies me that Methodist preachers have paid dearly for their special privileges in the schools of the church, the little help they sometimes get, when in extreme want, from aid societies, and from the Conference fund when they shared in its distribution. Had we such a fund as the above scheme provides for, a certain and large class of Methodists would, in their imaginations, pass an amount so indefinitely large to the credit of their respective pastors that their fears would be alarmed lest they should ruin the church by giving to increase the riches of the preachers. Many will, even now, persist in believing that the preachers have a fund somewhere upon which they draw in times of emergency. Only last year a man of ordinary intelligence and information, who reads our papers, congratulated the writer, in view of a deficit in salary, on the certainty that what the church he was serving failed to pay would be made up at Conference. No doubt his conscience has found ease many times in the reflection that his lack of service would thus be supplied. An attempt to carry into effect the above scheme would give him, and the class he represents, just the argument they want when the steward calls around. For one, I want no such fund thrust between me and the sense of obligation on the part of the people I serve to support me and furnish the means to educate my children. They may not do it; but I would rather risk the issue on this footing, as a matter of policy, than on that of an invested fund.

After all the complaints we hear about meager support, I have come to believe that preachers, in the main, have about as much temporal prosperity in our day, in serving the church, as would have attended them in any other calling. I doubt not many children receive a liberal education, for being the children of preachers, who would otherwise grow up in ignorance; while it would be difficult to make clear that those who miss an education would be any better off had their fathers never entered the Christian ministry. The same inequality in fortune will of necessity be always found in the Christian ministry that obtains in all other legitimate callings, and from the same causes. Inequalities in fortune can never be rectified by any scheme, whether of communism, close corporations or endowments. As preachers we must be content to serve God and our fellow-beings faithfully, cheerfully, lovingly, and take with resignation the allotments that fall to us in the order of Divine Providence, and look to the future for our reward, just as we exhort other good people to do.

A Dangerous Article.

MR. EDITOR: The article alluded to made its appearance in the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE of February 20, 1873, over the signature of W. Now who W. is I know not; but one thing I do know—he advocates a doctrine in his article which I think very dangerous, and cannot believe. The doctrine is this: He would have us all to believe that all infants are regenerated by the Holy Ghost, in an unconscious state, before they are capable of repentance and faith. Now I do not believe one word of this. But W. does believe it, and advocates it in the article he has written, and which is published to the world in the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

All we have to do to prove that W. does believe that all infants are regenerated by the Holy Ghost, in an unconscious state, is to refer to his article. In this article he admits that "we are born into this world depraved, and this nature has to be regenerated before it can enter the paradise of God." So you see W. is not a Pelagian. He goes on and says: "If, then, infants are saved through the operation of the Holy Ghost, vouchsafed them in the death of Christ, at what period in life do they receive the Spirit of God savingly? Some tell us that they receive it in death. But we can see no reason why it should be deferred until death, but many why it should not be." As to the question, At what period in life do they receive the Spirit of God savingly? we answer: No man on earth can tell. It is the work of the Lord, and he has not revealed to man at what time he will do it. He may do it for the dying, unconscious infant before the breath of life leaves it, or at the time the breath leaves it, or after the breath leaves it; we cannot tell. I think Mr. Watson believed that the Holy Spirit sanctified the unconscious infant in the article of death. But why not suppose the Holy Spirit to spiritualize both the soul and body of the dying, unconscious infant after death. We know that the Lord spiritualizes the body; and why not the soul also? Be this as it may, there is no proof that the Holy Ghost regenerates the living, unconscious infant at the time or soon after it is born, which is the idea W. would have us believe, and which he endeavors to sustain in his article.

Hear him again: "But does not the Bible teach, when rightly understood, that all infants, irrespective of condition, receive the Holy Ghost savingly before they come to years of discretion? I think it does." I think it does not, in the sense of washing away all their pollution inherited by the fall of Adam. But W. proceeds to prove it from "the real purport of circumcision. Paul tells us, Romans iv, 11, that Abraham 'received the sign of circumcision, a seal of the righteousness of the faith which he had, yet being uncircumcised.' Now if circumcision was to Abraham a sign of his righteousness at the age of ninety-and-nine, what was it to Isaac at the age of eight days? Could it signify to Abraham that he was righteous, and at the same time signify to Isaac his great need of righteousness? Impossible." Now this is one of W.'s scriptural arguments to prove that all infants are regenerated at or before they are eight days old. But is this a good argument? We answer: It is not, because it is a sophism—a fallacious argument. And we will lay open its fallacy, so that all may see it. Abraham was an adult ninety-and-nine years of age, and capable of believing, and he received the sign of circumcision, a seal of the righteousness of the faith which he had, yet being uncircumcised. But Isaac was an infant but eight days old, and incapable of believing and hence circumcision could not have been to him what it was to his father, Abraham—a sign and seal of the righteousness of his faith—because he had no faith. The fallacy of the argument consists in the making of Abraham and Isaac parallel cases, when they are not. Hence the argument has no force. W. thinks he has a text that is to the point, Mark x, 14: "Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom (or church) of God." Now we would ask: Does this text prove that unconscious infants are regenerated at or before they are eight days old? They might have been as old as that good sister was of whom W. speaks, who remembered, when she was quite small, that she loved God. At any rate, these children were large enough to talk, walk and understand, or Christ would not have said: "Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not." These children were at that time members of the church or kingdom of God; and as they were large enough to go to Christ, and had minds capable of understanding those that forbid them, it is reasonable to infer that they were capable of believing the gospel. If so, they sustained a different relation to Christ's atonement than that of unconscious babes. The former sustains an active relation, but the latter sustains a passive relation; the former are saved by grace through faith, but the latter are saved by grace without faith.

Again, W. says: "Let us illustrate: Here are twin infants, A. and B., born of the same parentage, partakers of the same nature, and incapable alike of sin or faith. A. dies, receives the Holy Ghost and is taken home to heaven. Now why may not B. receive the Spirit as well as A.? It is absurd to talk about death preparing the heart of A. for the Holy Spirit. Such would be salvation through death, and not through Christ." To this we answer: A. receives the Holy Spirit to prepare him for heaven because God gives it to him, as he sees cause to take him out of this world. B. does not receive the Holy Spirit to prepare him for heaven at that time because God sees cause to let him live to adult age. If the Holy Spirit prepares the heart of A. for the kingdom of heaven, it is not death that does it, but the Holy Spirit, and A. is saved through Christ.

These citations are sufficient, Mr. Editor, to show what W. believes, and advocates in the article he has written on Infant Church-Membership and Salvation. Now we think this a dangerous article because its tendency is to make all sinners, young and old, believe that they were regenerated and born of God when they were unconscious infants, and have no need of converting power in adult age; and hence a death-blow is struck at the root of justification by faith in adult age, and the knowledge of sins forgiven and the witness of the Spirit. If all our Sunday school children and all our unconverted church-members, and all other sinners believed that they were born of God at the age of eight days, we might preach, "Ye must be born again," but it would be all in vain.

Again, our own church is in great danger of losing its spiritual power and becoming a lifeless form; and the doctrine of unconscious conversion, in an infantile state, at the age of eight days, is the doctrine, if believed, that will ruin it. The preachers among us who believe and preach this doctrine are not born of God themselves, or have forgotten that they were purged from their old sins. They are not called of God to preach the gospel, but they are the deceivers of the people; they ought not to be heard nor believed. They are the blind leading the blind, and will all fall into the ditch together. They are natural men, born of the flesh, but not of the Spirit; and they cannot discern the things of the Spirit, because they are spiritually discerned. They have the form, but deny the power of godliness. They are as ignorant of the spiritual birth as Nicodemus was when he came to our Lord by night, or as Saul of Tarsus was when struck blind on his way from Jerusalem to Damascus, to bind and carry the disciples of Christ to Jerusalem, to be put to death. They are deceived themselves, and are deceiving others. They tell the people that if they are converted they have no knowledge of it—it must have been done when they were unconscious infants—and that all those preachers who are always talking and preaching about the knowledge of sins forgiven and the witness of the Spirit are deluded themselves, and are not to be believed or relied on, for it is impossible for any man or woman on earth to know their sins forgiven; this was done when they were unconscious infants. At our revival meetings we find these Simon Magulres telling penitent mourners that they are converted to God when they are not, and we find them teaching the same doctrine in private families. This we know to be true, for we have seen and heard it ourselves. When I was under conviction one of these false teachers came very near ruining me forever by telling me I was converted when I was not. These false teachers are not confined to preachers alone, but we find them among the members of our church, both male and female, and in the world, by thousands and tens of thousands. Now this dangerous article, written by W., not only has a tendency to uproot and destroy God's plan of adult salvation, but it also has a tendency to strengthen and confirm these precious but deluded souls in their fatal error. Therefore I pronounce it a dangerous article, and here enter my protest against it.

WAYNESBORO, February 28, 1873.

Letter from Glennville, Alabama.

MR. EDITOR: When I severed my connection with New Orleans, to labor in a sister State, I promised to let you hear from me occasionally. That promise has not been fulfilled sooner from the fact that I thought I had nothing of interest to communicate. But the very cause which has thus far kept me silent is now the occasion of my writing. I wish to say a word about the little concerning which many circumstanced like myself have to write. I am satisfied that much harm is done by many of our preachers and membership generally by drawing invidious and frequently unjust comparisons—comparing those things which have hardly anything in common, and consequently should not be compared. I committed this mistake myself. It has been my good fortune, as you are aware, to know Bro. Foster, the prince of Sunday school superintendents, and be familiar with the working of his model Sunday school, with its tastefully-arranged room, banner-class system and missionary society, of which, by the way, I am a life member. All of these interesting features I desired to introduce in the school of which I now have charge, as pastor of the church; but I soon saw, without making the experiment, it would not be practicable. I also missed the largely-attended, interesting and profitable prayer meetings and class meetings I once had the privilege of attending. So that, in drawing a comparison between my present and former conditions, I thought I had very little left with which to be contented or to write about. I was mistaken. Upon taking a more analytic survey of my position, I doubt if I have sustained any absolute loss by the change. In the first place, we have the most refined, intelligent and moral community with which I am acquainted. I have now been here six months, and have hardly heard that number of oaths, and have not seen as many men under the influence of liquor. In good weather we have good congregations, who are always attentive and appreciative. Our church contributes nearly as much for the support of the gospel, in proportion to its membership, as any other church in the Conference. We have a very comfortable parsonage, and a church-building, modern in style, with Sunday school room in the basement, and worth more than any other church-building in the district. We have just closed our first Quarterly Conference, which was a time of general refreshing to us all, especially the love-feast. Our presiding elder, Bro. Ellison, was present and preached both on Saturday and Sunday. He is universally loved throughout this section of the State, where he is best known. After the services of Sunday morning, which were very impressive and effective, we received five members by certificate and one on profession of faith. We might tell you more, Mr. Editor, but think we have said enough for the present. And while we have not some of the attractions which our differently-circumstanced neighbors possess, we thank God for what we have and take courage. I desire for myself to carry no unnecessary burdens, and to draw comfort from whatever source I am justly entitled to.

A Question.

MR. EDITOR: I quote from the Discipline, page 100:

"Ques. 6. What are the duties of a district steward?

"Ans. To attend the district stewards' meeting for the purpose of estimating the salary and traveling expenses of the presiding elder, and to apportion the amount among the several charges in the district, and to report the same to his Quarterly Conference."

Is it admissible, under this law, for the district stewards to simply resolve that the presiding elder's salary, etc., shall be a certain per cent. on each and every preacher's salary in the district, prior to knowing the amount of the salary of the several preachers? We think it an innovation of mischievous tendency, and without precedent. One preacher's salary is $100 and another's $1,000; one has a wife and ten children; another is single. Your answer will oblige stewards, preachers and

AN EX-PRESIDING ELDER.

TEMPERANCE REFORM is exciting a good deal of attention in different parts of the country. The iron-clad liquor law in Indiana has gone into effect; the Legislature and Governor Hendricks are working together harmoniously; and a case has been agreed upon to test its constitutionality. In Pennsylvania a stringent local option act, which requires an election throughout the State on the third Friday in March, is likely to be approved. It provides for the enforcement of an act passed in March, 1872, and defines the meaning of "an act to regulate the sale of liquor in Allegheny county," passed in April, 1872. From New York we hear that the National Temperance Association has resolved to urge upon Congress the appointment of a commission of scientific men to investigate the subject of intemperance in the United States. This simultaneous movement in all parts of the country is a most gratifying and cheering indication that the advocates of temperance are working to some purpose. The last two years have witnessed changes in several States which the most sanguine had not dared to expect.—Interior.

OBITUARIES.

JOHN E. SIDDON was born December 22, 1844, and died, at his residence in Claiborne county, February 13, 1873.

Bro. Siddon united with the church of Christ in August, 1871, and lived a consistent Christian till his death. He was regarded as one of the best young men in the community in which he lived. His brightest virtue was affectionate devotion to an aged and infirm mother, who is now left alone to feel and mourn his loss. May God sustain her in her sad bereavement. The separation will not be long. Soon she will go to meet him in the land of bliss.

D. A. J. PARKER.

DIED, on the eleventh of February, 1873, near Downsville, Louisiana, MRS. ELIZABETH HESTER, in the eighty-first year of her age. She was born in North Carolina, September 27, 1792. In her infancy her parents moved to and settled in the State of Georgia, where she grew to womanhood. January 4, 1812, she was married to Mr. Randolph Hester. In 1818 they moved to and settled in Alabama, where they lived until 1846, when they moved to and settled in Louisiana, where the family have since resided.

Sister Hester joined the Methodist Church in 1809, from which time until the hour of her death she remained its faithful friend, always contributing of her means to its support. Her house will be remembered by many of the itinerants as a preacher's home, where they have rested both mind and body, conscious of a generous hospitality. During a long life Sister Hester adorned her profession, and was ever looked upon as a model Christian lady. She went down to the grave like a summer sun, without a cloud to obscure a single virtue. What the Master said of Mary is in her case literally true—she has done what she could. She rests now, while her children rise up and call her blessed.

R. T. PARISH.

DIED, in Clarke county, Alabama, on the ninth of March, 1873, of consumption, MARY L. MUNERLY, wife of Dr. J. B. Munerly, in the thirtieth year of her age. She was born in the State of Kentucky, where she lived for several years, and then moved to Louisiana. She professed religion and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South at the age of thirteen, and remained a consistent Christian until death.

During her last moments she conversed freely with her husband about death. She said that death would be a welcome messenger. She asked him to write to her loved ones in Louisiana, and say to them that she was going to glory, and wanted them to meet her there.

We laid her slumbering form away to rest, through the flitting years to come, in an old field, where once stood the old courthouse of Clarke county, Alabama. There the sweet songsters and gentle zephyrs, amid the emerald-robed boughs above, sing her requiem in sweet melodious strains, and the beautiful blue veins of heaven complacently smile responses. There "sweet be her rest", till, united with her heaven-born spirit, she is transported to the shores of "the beautiful river that flows by the throne of God."

J. S. FRAZER.

MARY J., wife of George Hickman, and daughter of William and Sarah Scarbrough, was born August 22, 1816, and died, in Eutaw, Alabama, February 28, 1873.

She was an obedient and affectionate child, giving but little trouble to her parents and teachers. To her brothers and sisters she was very much devoted from childhood, showing a degree of affection which is characteristic of refined natures only.

As a wife and mother she was devoted and true. She was converted and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South October 20, 1863, at a meeting in Eutaw, conducted by the Rev. J. W. Glenn, of the Alabama Conference. Her Christian character was never demonstrative, and, being naturally timid, but little was known of her religious enjoyment only to those who were very intimate with her. She appeared for some time before her last sickness to be impressed with the fact that she would soon die. Her last sickness was protracted and painful, but her physicians say they never saw a more submissive, patient sufferer. She was not only willing to die, but it was a victory so signal and complete that those who were present will not soon forget it. When it became evident that death was near, she called the family to her and gave them her last advice with as much composure as if she had been in perfect health. Being perfectly conscious to the last moment, and seeming to keep up strength for the final struggle, she began repeating,

"Rock of ages, cleft for me,
Let me hide"—

and in a few moments was gone. It was a sad sight to see the young mother laid beside the grave of her infant, buried three days before. May the Lord be merciful to the little daughter she left to battle with this world without the guidance and prayers of a mother.

R. M. POWERS.

ROBERT W. FAULK was born October 7, 1838, and died, at his residence on the Ouachita river, below Monroe, February 16, 1873. He was the son of the venerable and widely-known John T. Faulk—after whom Faulk's chapel is named—and brother of John C. Faulk, who died a member of the Louisiana Conference. From his childhood he was a lover of Jesus and a professing Christian. He led his household to the Master, and was truly known among them as a "priest unto God." He felt himself thoroughly identified with the church in its every experience of joy, sorrow, bereavement and labor. Never, to bless her sons, was voice or hand denied. Nothing but personal sickness ever vacated his place in the congregation. The preacher now will feel bereaved, as he stands in the sacred desk, of appreciation, sympathy and love; nor there only, for his heart was always open to the cares, fears and anxieties of his pastor.

He was peculiar, but his angularities were conscientious—the result of convictions attained by processes, and from a standpoint purely his own. This gave his manner at times the appearance of abruptness and harshness; but it was appearance only, for his heart was full of generous, delicate and tender sympathies. Conspicuous among other noble qualities was his liberality. An instance recurs: In 1870, as a member of the board of stewards, he made the assessment on himself, in view of his embarrassment, but in the winding up of the year his crop exceeded his expectations, and he voluntarily increased his subscription $50. Gratitude formed no small element of his beneficence.

During the last few years he ripened rapidly for the kingdom, and death neither took him by surprise nor gave him alarm. The habit of trusting the Savior was too frequently exercised and firmly rooted to be shaken by such an event. To his soul, fully armed and strong in recent and numerous triumphs, the last enemy came as an insignificant reptile that was crushed by his mailed heel.

The church and community participate with his family in their sense of bereavement. The resurrection of the good is precious to us all, but each saint we bury intensifies the eagerness of our hope to join our loved ones in heaven.

FAULK'S CHAPEL, March 21, 1873.

MRS. SUSAN DAVIS was born in Wilkinson county, Mississippi, March 18, 1791, and died, at her late residence in Madison county, Mississippi, March 6, 1873, having almost reached fourscore years of age.

The deceased had been for many years the widow of Isaac W. Davis, elder brother of Hon. Jefferson Davis, formerly president of the Confederate States of America, and had been for forty-three years a constant and zealous member of the Methodist Church. She was the mother of eight children, all of whom died in infancy, except one, General Joseph R. Davis, who still resides at the old homestead in Madison county, Mississippi.

The living owe it no less to themselves than to departed ones to enshrine the names and deeds of the good in affectionate and perpetual remembrance. Of the subject of this memoir it is neither difficult nor dangerous to write. While there is abundance that might truthfully be said in her favor, there is little danger of saying too much. Though baptized in early life in the Roman Catholic Church, she became deliberately and permanently a Methodist, developing and exhibiting through life a Christian character which would have been an ornament to any branch of the church. Christianity in her was unostentatious, yet earnest, constant and beautiful, consisting in that pure love which found its expression in cheerful reverence, worship and obedience to God, and in a charity toward all men which admirably adapted itself to the peculiar circumstances of every one within the sphere of her influence. Though fitted by birth, education and fortune for the society of the great, she had the happy art of making the humble poor feel comfortable in her presence, while they rejoiced in the reception of a kindness which never humiliated or afflicted them by the manner of its bestowment. Indeed she was at once the gentle minister of grace to the great and of mercy to the lowly. The rich were often her welcome guests, but she was innocent of the charge of "despising the poor." Her sincere interest in the religious instruction of her slaves, previous to the late war, was shown in the erection of a neat and comfortable church, and the providing of regular preaching and instruction for them and others around—such provision as exists only in memory to them since their emancipation. To orphans, several of whom became providentially the inmates of her house, she manifested a motherly care and kindness which endeared her to them for life. Ministers of the gospel were at all times welcome visitors at her hospitable home, and were entertained with a generosity as free as it was ample. Indeed her house was a home for the way-worn servants of God, who were often glad to find lodgment and refreshment there. However inexperienced or uneducated the young minister might be who was sent to her little mission church, he was sure to find in her a friend who would bear with his infirmities and pray for his success.

To every deserving applicant for pecuniary assistance she gave with a joyous liberality. Many beyond the circle of her own family will sadly realize the loss of her faithful friendship and loving kindness, now that she is gone. Let those who knew and loved her cherish the memory of her many virtues as a priceless legacy. Such gentleness of manner, such meekness of spirit and such earnestness of faith as were hers, it is a privilege to have known and a duty to emulate. Amid the trying reverses of fortune which attended her later years she maintained an amiable equanimity of spirit which could be attributable only to the presence of grace from an unseen source.

At the close of a serene old age she passed away. Placid had been her life and peaceful was its end. As a gentle stream flows silently through meadow and plain, ministering life and beauty along its way, and at last quietly disappears in its ocean home, so with unobtrusive beneficence and grace her saintly life passed among us on earth, and finally glided, like receding music, beyond our tracing into the great eternity. But the good may expect to greet her again.

OF LATE YEARS the price paid for the old masters has been amazing. The Garvagh Holy Family, by Raphael, was purchased for the National Gallery in London at $45,000 in gold, which is at the rate of $225 per square inch of panel.

AT EVENING-TIME.

The old nest swings on the leafless tree,
The red sun sets in the west;
I think that like two brown birds are we,
Left lost in the empty nest.

All the young ones are afar and away,
Each sings with his chosen mate;
Twilight is closing our lightsome day,
Though the crimson flush lasts late.

'Tis a trembling step comes down the path
You could erst so lightly tread;
Changed is our thought of the grave old earth
That is keeping in trust our dead.

O comely face! that I knew so fair!
Soft cheeks, that are sunken now;
I love the gray in your faded hair,
The lines on your thoughtful brow.

The past grows a book to understand,
The future has gifts to bring,
As I sit by the fire and hold your hand,
And finger the warm gold ring.

My own true wife, who is dearer now
For all that the years resign—
For the third love, for the spoken vow,
For the home that was yours and mine;

For hopes we shared and for tears we shed,
For comfort in days o'ercast,
For the trust that we hold to meet our dead
When the shades of life are past.

Griefs that are over left as a gift—
They lit as a lamp of light;
Soon shall God's sun shine clear through the rift,
And there shall be no more night.

Close to my side, dear wife that I love,
With your chin head fast in mine!
So will we wait for the light above,
Till the morning star shall shine.

John Eliot's Oak.

BY EDWARD A. RAND.

There stood, until last autumn, at Auburndale, a village in the western part of Newton, Massachusetts, a venerable oak. It was confidently asserted by a clergyman, once the proprietor of the grounds overshaded by this oak, that under it John Eliot used to preach to the Indians. Hearing the tradition, we visited the spot. The tree, smitten by the lightning, had been cut down. The old relic lay in huge sections upon the ground. Its massive trunk, its brawny arms testified to its great age. In how many winds of the autumn it must have rustled its withered leaves, and how often the snow must have powdered its head. Whatever may have been the history of the tree, whatever may have transpired in its shade to be whispered all through the branches by one leafy tongue to another, this past is now locked up in its solid heart. Just this tradition came to us, that here preached Eliot, the famous "apostle to the Indians." It is enough of a wind to set ajar the door opening into the apostle's life, and incline us to look in.

It was in 1652 that John Eliot took charge of the church at Roxbury, Massachusetts, to be, as the old church records declare, its "teacher." He must have been a man of clear, strong intellect, fine linguistic abilities, broad sympathies, holding out in his trust just a child's hand to God. The Indians in New England at that time must have numbered at least fifty thousand. Their canoes still skimmed the glassy rivers. The smoke of their wigwams curled up above the dark pine forests. The print of their feet was stamped around the white man's door in peace or for plunder.

How the far-reaching sympathies of the Roxbury pastor flowed out to and took in these sons of the forest. This child of consecration went again to the cross. He laid himself down there for mission work among the Indians. He learned their language. At the camp of Wabon, a leading chief, he first preached. The spot, called Nonantum, is still shown in Newton. It must have been a strange interview. On one side was that earnest man, his fair features lighted up by magnetic flashes of sympathy and love. Opposite bent that line of dark faces, looking on with a stolid stare. It was only in part a circle of welcome drawn about those first labors.

Some of the chiefs and "medicine-men" hurled out threats of violence if he went on. Stout-hearted soldier of the cross, he gave an intrepid answer: "I am about the work of the great God, and he is with me, so that I neither fear you nor all the sachems in the country. I will go on. Do you touch me if you dare."

He gathered a circle of "praying Indians" at Nonantum. It was finally transferred to Natick, and a church was formed. Eliot was an apostle indeed. Sometimes he made extensive tours for those days. He skirted the forests of the Merrimac. He was seen upon the sandy shores of Cape Cod. Then he was up in New Hampshire or down at Plymouth, Massachusetts. Somewhat in the Pauline style, in Second Corinthians xi, he affirms in one place: "I have not been dry night or day from the third day of the week unto the sixth, but so traveled, and at night pull off my boots and wring my stockings, and on with them again, and so continue; but God steps in and helps." Even the iron nature of the savage yielded and softened before the fervor of such labors. A large number of the Indians sloughed off the old savage ways, and took on civilized habits.

Eliot had the happiness of sending out twenty-four to preach the gospel. Churches were organized. Such a man naturally was a kind of idol among the Indians. One man though was unimpressible, the haughty King Philip. Eliot desired to preach to the Indians before him. Grasping a button on the apostle's coat, the proud savage said: "I care no more for the gospel than for that button."

Eliot's great work was the famous Indian Bible, adding a catechism and the Psalms of David in Indian verse. This was one of the first tongues of flame to light up the Pentecostal incoming of the many versions of the word of God in these latter days. It was a marvelous thing. Its longest single word was—well, we won't try to write it. By actual count, we find that it contains thirty-four letters. As one pronounces it, it sounds like the running and tumbling of one of the old Indian rapids. The word is in Mark i, 40. It means "Kneeling down to him."

One naturally infers that Eliot's generosity was as conspicuous as his sympathy. The larger portion of the yearly salary of £50 from the Society for Propagating the Gospel he gave to the Indians. He gave in every direction. There is an old story afloat that the treasurer of the Roxbury parish, as he paid Eliot his yearly salary, tied it up in a handkerchief, putting in as many tough knots as possible. In this way he hoped his pastor's money would get at least as far as home, knowing his liberal turn. The little knotty bag got safely along as far as the home of a needy sick woman. Then Eliot began to untie his handkerchief. The knots yielded so slowly that he gave it up, and, laying all in the woman's hands, he cried: "Here, my dear, take it. I believe the Lord designs it all for you."

Eliot's active labors were kept up a long time among the Indians, in addition to his regular parish duties at Roxbury. When he became infirm, the burden of old age could not break his love for his scattered flock in the forest. When he could not visit them, he requested a number of families to send their negro servants to him that he might weekly teach them out of the Bible.

Eliot died in faith, May 20, 1690. Before his death his colleague, Mr. Watten, called to see him. Said he: "You are welcome to my very soul, but retire to your study and pray that I may have leave to be gone." Death released him to join the dusky faces that through his labors had become fair and luminous in the glory of the redeemed.

Standing near the old oak in Newton, one may fittingly think of all these things. A little way off runs the river Charles, turning its many graceful curves. Looking down upon it, we seem to see the canoes slipping again out of the forest shadows by the shore.

Up the green sward in front, over the hills at the left from the meadows in the rear, come the little ties of swarthy men and women. They cluster around the childlike yet grand man, with his open Indian Bible under the oak. He lights up the story of the cross. He yearns over them in the agonies of prayer. He baptizes them with his own spirit. As the colors of the scene come back, shifting, brightening, we are moved to ask: What might not the same spirit of consecration kindling in many hearts now accomplish among the Indians of our land?

Human Apparitions.

BY E. L. FANCHER.

The transfiguration of Jesus is related by three of the evangelists. It was not a dream nor an optical delusion, but an actual occurrence, visible to three earthly eye-witnesses. Such particulars are recorded as to contradict a mythical conception of the narrations which the apostles have given concerning it. It teaches many truths that belong to the system of Christian doctrines, and at the same time excites an almost childlike wonderment at the astonishing revelations it makes. Three disciples were chosen to be present at the unexampled scene. Three wonderful personages were the glorified actors. Moses represented the ritual, sacerdotal and moral law. Elijah, as the deputation of the prophets, one of the forerunners of bodily translation and the witness to Christ from the oracle of inspired promise, represented the subserviency of all prophecy to the cross. And Jesus, who was the fullness of divinity, the perfection of man, and the mediator between God and men, unveiled his glory on the mount, so that his face shone like the sun, and his raiment was white and glistering. What strange glories commingled! The sublimest glory was that of divinity which shone forth from Jesus. Another glory illumined the disembodied spirit of Moses, and still another the embodied soul of Elijah. They uttered words which human ears could hear and human intelligence could understand. The visitants from heaven spoke no word to the amazed disciples, but they conversed with Christ "concerning his decease which he should accomplish at Jerusalem." Moses had been in the spirit-world during fourteen hundred and fifty years. Elijah for upward of nine hundred years had been an inhabitant of heaven. They found after the lapse of so many centuries but one topic of converse with Christ. They had sung many anthems with the angels; but not one of the angels could join them in the notes of that "new song," which is sung only by the redeemed. Now they talked of its inspiring theme.

Angels had appeared to men, but had any human soul returned from Hades until this appearance? Here were two reappearances of departed human spirits, and they engaged in an audible conversation with the Son of God. Moses had a distinguishable form, visible to men, though he was a disembodied human soul. Elijah had a palpable form, and, though glorified, was likewise visible in the body, reappearing to human eyes. They both knew the way back to earth, and had power, one in spirit alone, and the other in spirit and body conjoined, to traverse the immeasurable realms of space from heaven to earth. What wonderful powers and perceptions belong to the glorified state!

This sublime event seems to indicate a heavenly consecration of our great High Priest. The altar was a mountain; the lights were illuminations of the most excellent glory; the attending servitors were the representatives of the ritual symbols and of the evangelic predictions which pointed to the great sacrifice for sin; and the consecrating voice came from heaven itself, and was spoken from God the Father. It teaches us the doctrine that Christ is now the great Lawgiver and the great Prophet of promise. Law and promise had demanded his death. It appeared before their heads and said: "Lo! I come; in the volume of the book it is written of me, I delight to do thy will, O God." He talked with Moses and Elijah "concerning his decease which he should accomplish at Jerusalem."

There was a tradition among the Jews that Moses and Elijah should appear in the time of the Messiah; and, after the transfiguration, the disciples referred to it in the query addressed to Christ: "Why say the scribes that Elias must first come?" He did come to link the lines of prophecy with the death of Jesus.

After the "talking with Christ" by Moses and Elias, one of the wondering disciples, Peter, spoke to Jesus. While he was speaking "a bright cloud overshadowed them, and a voice out of the cloud said: This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased; hear ye him." The disciples fell on their faces in fear; and Peter afterward says of the occurrence: "We were eye-witnesses of his majesty; for he received from God the Father honor and glory, when there came such a voice to him from the excellent glory: This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased; and this voice which came from heaven we heard when we were with him in the holy mount."

What were the particulars of the transfiguration conversation? Did Moses and Elias allude to the cruel incidents of the crucifixion? Was that head crowned with divine glory to bow so low as to submit to be crowned with thorns? Was he, who was waited for by all the heavenly hosts, that they might cast their crowns at his feet, which in human flesh had not yet trod the golden streets—was he to be crucified between two thieves and nailed to a cross by human murderers? Were those garments, now so white and glistering, to be stripped from him, and were lots to be cast for them by executers? Was the spear of a soldier to pierce that heart whose palpitations were yearnings of love for a lost world? Perhaps the heavenly attendants passed by the incidents of the death of him with whom they conversed, and spoke only of its grand results; of the high joy of heaven when he should return to his Father's right hand; and of his eternal triumph in the salvation of souls, and in the rescue from the grave of the bodies of his redeemed.

O human philosophy, come sit at this scene! Has that cloud of glory vanished from that brow? Is he not now God's well-beloved Son? Do not Moses and Elias pay tribute at his feet, and never cease to speak of the wonders of his decease accomplished at Jerusalem?

We do not yet know the art by which departed spirits hold mutual intercourse; but we have proof that they can communicate with each other and with men. They are endowed with the powers of intelligible speech. They can come to a limit of this earth, and have a capacity to utter thoughts which the living can hear. Children cannot tell how thoughts can be spoken from one shore to the other of a vast ocean; nor can mortals comprehend the spiritual modes of intercommunication. But when "our change comes" we shall gaze on radiant forms; shall have companionship with pure, happy and glorious immortals, and shall enter upon our second and eternal life of intelligent and blessed existence. A glimpse only of that glory was visible at the transfiguration, but the scene just beyond the Jordan will open amid immortal splendors, and the vision will be beatific and eternal.—New York Christian Advocate.

Presenting Truth Positively.

The predecessor of Rev. Joel Hawes, as pastor of one of the Congregational churches of Hartford, Connecticut, was Dr. Strong. His pastorate was one of almost uninterrupted prosperity, persons uniting on profession of faith at every monthly meeting. The younger Dr. Edwards was a contemporary of Dr. Strong, and, on a visit to the Hartford parsonage, lamented that there were no more conversions among his own people, while so many were added to Dr. Strong's church under his preaching. He inquired the reason, when Dr. Strong said: "Perhaps one reason is this, that you preach as if your people did not believe the Bible. You undertake logically to prove everything, and to state fully all kinds of objections to the truth, and to answer them; and I admit that you do it most ably and fully. But then you often suggest objections that many have never thought of till they heard them from your lips, and perhaps the objection is remembered while the answer is forgotten. Now I do differently. I preach to my people as if every one of them believed the Bible just as much as I do. The great object of every one of my sermons is to urge my hearers to obey it—to live up to the truth they in theory believe, and to do it now. And the result is that I never hear of a doubter in my congregation, and continually men are converted and added to the church." The incident has an important practical lesson. There is no loss of power to the pulpit in the positive presentation of truth, and there is a fitness in truth to the conscience, when pressed upon it, which makes it, in the hands of the Spirit, the mighty power of God to salvation. Somebody has said that it is not enough that we do not preach on mere lecture-room themes and sensation topics; such as "The Beautiful Shoes," "The Convoy of Wings," "The Apostle's Left Baggage," or "The Message of Balaam's Ass;" we must preach truth, gospel truth, truth in its positive claims, truth as now pointing all to Christ and to duty and to heaven, else our ministry will be in vain. Richard Baxter's words to a remonstrating friend are always in place: "When so many are preaching to the times, do not find fault if I try to preach for eternity!"

SPEAKING truth is like writing fair, and comes only by practice; it is less a matter of will than of habit; and I doubt if any occasion can be trivial which permits the practice and formation of such a habit.—Ruskin.

IN PROSPERITY we can honor God by the full consecration of our substance; in adversity by a cheerful submission to his dispensations.

Concerning Babies.

Now women who are nursing babies should never drink tea. If I had time I could tell you in plain terms the reasons for this assertion. I do not believe in tea for any one outside the countries where it is raised, and I have no doubt that there it is a national blessing. Americans need no such astringents, no such nerve quickeners. That tea-drinking is one great cause of nervousness among our women I believe every thinking man and woman will agree; and I often wish that our first row with our mother country had been one something worth fighting about, instead of an old tea-chest.

Oatmeal, Indian meal, gruel and cocoa or chocolate are the beverages to be partaken of by women who nurse their babies. These insure quality as well as quantity, and, made of good rich milk, can be freely partaken of. There is no need of an ordinary healthy woman growing thin because she is nursing. Then, again, infants should be held as little as possible, and trotted and rocked never. Use your baby at once to the bed or crib, and insist, whatever your nurse may say to the contrary, upon its sleeping alone. Then feed your baby regularly, and disabuse your mind of the impression that it is hungry every time it makes a noise. No woman should nurse her infant oftener than twice in the night, and at six months this should be stopped entirely, in order to guard the mother against the exhaustion which follows inevitably upon the keeping up of this unnatural night drag. Once in two or three hours during the day is also quite often enough. Bear in mind also that your baby wants, and must have, cold water to drink daily. Begin first, and immediately, with a teaspoonful, allowing the child to be its own judge as to the quantity.

Give your babies room enough, and enough to eat of the right kind, good air to breathe and plenty of sunshine, and my word on it you will have no trouble; and mothers can only do this by taking proper care of themselves. The present system of bringing up children is an abomination; but what more can be expected with so little preparation for life and its duties on the part of our women?—Herald of Health.

MAPLE-SUGAR GOVERNMENT.—The eldest son of the celebrated President Jonathan Edwards, after congratulating a friend upon his fine group of sons, said to him, with great emphasis: "Remember, there is but one mode of family government. I have brought up and educated fourteen boys, two of whom I brought up, or rather suffered to grow up, without the rod. One of these was my youngest brother; the other, Aaron Burr, my sister's only son (both of them were orphans from infancy;) and from my observation and experience I tell you, sir, 'maple-sugar government' will never answer. Beware how you let the first act of disobedience in your little boys go unnoticed, and, unless evidence of repentance be manifest, unpunished." The lesson has a historical significance in our own loose age.

This probably is one great element in solving the wayward character of that profligate genius, who was the son of a revered clergyman and of a Christian mother, and the grandson of the most eminent and devout Christian philosopher of his age. It is one of the sad exceptions which proves the truth of the divine declaration: "Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it." In this case there was no such training. It was "maple-sugar government," and it ended in utter ruin.—Christian Intelligencer.

CANINE ECONOMY.—The Springfield Republican has the following: "A dog whose master purchases his family supplies at one of two meat markets, but a few doors apart, has been in the habit of going there every noon with a five-cent piece, which his owner gave him, in his mouth, and receiving in return a dinner of meat. But one day he blundered into the other market. Too proud to retreat, he laid his money on the counter, and was furnished a dinner by the proprietor, who was familiar with his habits. But, either through generosity or a more liberal spirit of dealing with customers of every sort, the dinner was considerably more bountiful than he was in the habit of receiving at his old quarters, and from that day to this he has regularly patronized the market which experience had shown him gave him the most for his money."

A man in Clinton, Massachusetts, has a dog whose extraordinary wisdom is thus evinced: While getting his forenoon lunch from a neighbor's pail of "odds and ends," he upset the pail, which fell to pieces. Seeing the mischief he had done, he at once trotted home and took back a sound pail, which he substituted for the broken one, carefully transferring the contents of the old to the new, and as carefully covering his tracks by carrying off and hiding the staves of the disintegrated vessel.

VERY SUGGESTIVE.—The late Rev. Robert Hall was conversing with a clergyman who had obtained a lucrative living after a change of religious opinions. Mr. Hall pressed him hard upon the subject of church reform. The gentleman's constant answer to the arguments addressed to him was: "I can't see it;" "I don't see it;" "I can't see that at all." At last Mr. Hall took a letter from his pocket and wrote on the back of it with his pencil, in small letters, the word "God." "Do you see that?" "Yes." He then covered it with a piece of gold. "Do you see it now?" "No." "I must wish you good morning, sir," said Mr. Hall, and left him to his meditations.

WHEN N. P. WILLIS was asked to make a speech he replied: "I am by profession a writer, and you cannot expect a pump to give water from the handle as well as from the mouth."

Religious Intelligence.

OBERLIN COLLEGE, OHIO, has forty-three theological students. It is building a new hall to cost $65,000.

THE First Presbyterian church, Nashville, Tennessee, has five Sabbath schools, with more than 1,000 scholars.

ANIRA KUCKIK, son of a Shintoo priest of Yeddo, has been received as a student of the Drew Theological Seminary at Madison.

WILLIAMETTE UNIVERSITY, Oregon, is enjoying a powerful revival work, in which many of the students and other young people have professed conversion.

A MICHIGAN BAPTIST PREACHER writes to the New York Examiner that he has been in that State nine years, and that in that time all but four or five of the 200 Baptist ministers of that State have changed places.

IN A PRIVATE LETTER, dated Arcot, November 29, Rev. John Scudder writes: "I had quite an accession to this church last Sabbath. Nine joined on confession of their faith, and twelve adults were baptized. Most of those baptized were from the Preparandi School."

SPANISH.—Twenty-four young local ministers in the Boston Theological Seminary, among them a son of Dr. Butler, are pursuing the study of Spanish under a native instructor, with a view to missionary work in Mexico and other Spanish-speaking populations on this continent.

THE Rev. W. E. Boardman, a Presbyterian preacher of New York, has been holding a series of meetings in Dayton, Ohio, for the promotion of holiness. His congregations are largely made up of the Presbyterian element, and a goodly number have professed the higher experience.

THE young men connected with the Baptist mission to the Chinese in San Francisco devised a celebration of the Chinese New Year—January 28—in a Christian manner. The Sunday schools were gathered, and appropriate services were held. Mr. Jee Gum, who intends to study for the ministry, made an address.

OUR Western exchanges report Rev. Mr. Evans, an esteemed Welsh minister in Minnesota, as one of the victims of the recent severe snow-storms in Minnesota. The whole family, consisting of himself, wife and two children, were frozen to death. The case is one of much more than ordinary sadness.

THE Society for Open-Air Preaching in England, reviewing the work done during the past summer, say that they have occupied twelve stations, held 303 services and delivered 1,179 addresses to about 40,000 people, mainly of that class which habitually neglect the regular services in churches and chapels.

REMARKABLE EXEMPTION.—The Watchman and Reflector states that of eighty-four Baptist missionaries sent to Asia since July, 1855, only three have died, and ten have returned to this country. Of the whole number, seventeen labored among the Chinese, eight among the Telegoos, thirteen in Assam and forty-six in Burmah, of whom not one has died in seventeen years.

THE Rev. Charles H. Wolfe and wife, who are missionaries of the Reformed Church in America, and who have lived in Yokohama during the past two years, studying the language, have gone to Matsamai, in Yezo, under appointment to teach. They will be better enabled to acquire the language, and also to extend the knowledge of Christianity in a part of the country that greatly needs it.

THE International Bible Lesson Committee met at Niagara Falls on Wednesday of last week. All but two of the committee from the United States and Canada were present. George H. Stuart, of Philadelphia, sent in his resignation, on the score of ill health; and J. B. Tyler, superintendent of Sunday school work in the Presbyterian Church, was appointed in his place. The purpose of the committee at this session was to arrange Sunday school lessons for the year 1874. A plan for that year was submitted from a committee of the London Sunday School Union, to aid the American brethren in meeting the views of workers on both sides of the Atlantic. The result of the committee's deliberations will soon be formally announced.

AT BETHLEHEM, PENNSYLVANIA, is the principal Moravian settlement in this country, and a unique and interesting community it is. Wett to do in this world's goods, the members devote their large receipts almost exclusively to church and educational purposes. Their house of worship is large, and the regular congregation of the village averages 1,000 members, who are divided into choirs or societies. One is composed of children; another of boys and girls; another of unmarried women, and still another of married people; and each of these societies has its meetings and love-feasts; from time to time, which are generally delightful social occasions. The Moravians give heed to their music, for a huge choir leads the congregation, and singing occupies a large portion of the service.

THE Mexican war may or may not have been just, but it furnishes us today with a bit of interesting history in connection with the promising missions in our neighbor's territory. It appears that the American army took the first Protestant Bibles into Mexico, and paved the way for Bible agents and missionaries. Major General Casey gives some reminiscences, in the last Christian World, on the subject, how a number of army officers distributed 100 or more copies of the Scriptures among families in the Mexican capital after the surrender, which were kindly received. Whether these Bibles were the seed which is to bring forth fruit in that country may never be known to a certainty, but it is certain that ever since that time the truth of the gospel has been gradually leavening the lump that has now developed into a number of Protestant churches and schools, having a vigorous growth.

THE Niger mission of the Church Missionary Society, which is an offshoot of the West African mission, is entirely conducted by native teachers, priests, etc., with a native bishop. The principal stations are Onitsha, on the Niger river, first occupied in 1857, and Lokoja, also on the river. Akassa, Brass and Bonny, on the sea-coast, are also stations, the latter having been occupied but a few years. Bishop Crowther, the native bishop, ordained last year, in the new Bonny church, which the king and chiefs have helped to build, three ministers, and admitted the same day five young men to the church, whom he calls the first fruits of the Bonny mission. There were more than 400 natives present at the services, who but a few years since were cannibals. Indeed, Rev. J. White, who accompanied the Bishop, writes of seeing there, in one of the idol temples, more than 1,000 skulls of human victims, whose flesh had been devoured. One chief and others of lower rank, were giving up their idols, and king and chiefs were alike interested in the boarding and day schools, which were in flourishing condition. In 1866, according to Grundemann, the Niger mission numbered 202 native Christians and seventy-eight communicants. Now in Lokoja alone there are 120 native Christians, twenty-six scholars and fifty communicants.

REV. E. LANE, who is stationed at Campinas, Brazil, where the Southern Presbyterians have recently established a mission, and have bought 24 acres of land for mission purposes and for the use of their schools, in order to prevent any misapprehension on the part of friends of the mission as to the time devoted by the missionaries to educational work, states that the school at Campinas is an incidental part of mission work, although imperatively called for; and that of the eight or ten ministers laboring in Brazil not one is engaged in teaching, but all are preaching the truth, and meeting sufficient opposition to develop their Christian manliness of character. One, a few months before, while preaching sixteen miles from Campinas, had his life threatened by an armed mob; and a Brazilian (a converted Roman Catholic priest,) who is a member of the Northern Presbyterian mission, was but a few weeks since insulted and maltreated because he wished to preach the truth as he understood it. Such outbreaks, however, are contrary to the popular feeling.

HOW GREATLY a thoroughly faithful, accurate and catholic translation of the Bible, but especially of the gospels, in Japanese is needed is seen in the fact that the translation of Matthew into very vernacular Japanese, made by the Rev. Mr. Goble (a Baptist missionary) alone, speaks of "John, the Soaker," and renders the next to the last verse of Matthew thus: "Go ye, therefore, and teach all nations, soaking them in the name," etc. The Japanese word hitashi, which is used in the version above spoken of, is thus defined in Hepburn's dictionary, and is acknowledged by all Japanese scholars to be correctly defined:

"Hitashi. To dip into a fluid, to immerse, to soak, steep, moisten, macerate."

To the mind of a Japanese who uses the word in the talk of the kitchen, the dye-vats, the concocting of nostrums, etc., the idea does not, to say the least, convey a very clear notion of the act as being religiously significant; and the circulation of such a version is, to say the least, unfortunate. The word adopted by the committee on the translation of the Bible into Japanese—consisting of the Rev. S. R. Brown, D. D., Rev. David Thompson, Rev. David Green, Dr. J. C. Hepburn, M. D., aided by other long residents and able scholars in Japan—is the term sen-zei, which is a compound word, equivalent to "the washing of thanksgiving," and is used in the standard versions used in China. Pere Nicolai, the priest of the Russian Greek Church in Yeddo, who has studied Japanese diligently for twelve years, and is said by Japanese to speak without foreign accent or idiom, hesitates, even now, to publish any of his own work done in translation; and it is more than probable that he will co-operate with the committee, as he uses the so-called King James' version of the Bible as the basis of his teaching.—Independent.

PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH IN CHINA.—In our China mission a translation of the Prayer-Book has been made by the Rev. Dr. Schereschewsky, of our own church, and the Rev. Mr. Burdon, of the English Church, into the Mandarin tongue—the mother tongue of 200,000,000 of people. The translation of the Bible into the same tongue is progressing rapidly. A boarding school for girls in China, erected largely, if not entirely, out of funds given by a missionary now deceased, has lately come under the control of our mission. A boarding school for boys has been erected at Wuchang without any cost to the church at home, having been paid for out of the savings of the missionaries stationed there. The committee have received from the estate of another missionary the sum of $12,520.87. The meaning of such devotion on the part of those who are engaged in the foreign missionary work in China is apparent. Our Chinese converts in Shanghai have sent offerings hither in aid of our domestic missions, and for the education of young men for the ministry, and have contributed nearly $1,000 for the succor of one of their former teachers, now resident in this country. And the poor Dakota Indians, at one of the missions of our church, have made moccasins and such things, and placed them upon the alms-basin to be sold for the aid of the mission in Greece. There would be no limits to the powers of the church, both in the home and in the foreign field, should such a spirit as is indicated by these offerings pervade it throughout; and, encouraged by these manifestations of it, the foreign committee hopefully ask that in every congregation of the church, without exception, the work of making known among the Gentiles the blessings and the glory of the Redeemer may receive a "God-speed," both in the cordial presentation of its claims and nature by the minister, and in the responding prayers and alms of the people.—Church and State.

Harmless.

It does not appear, at first thought, that mere harmlessness should have a prominent place in the character and conduct of Christians. It seems so much more to be actively and positively useful, and the essence of religion is so intensely benevolent, that we are ready to conclude no harm can possibly be connected with the sincere profession of Christ. It would be in place to admonish the ungodly and to warn them against the mischief they are doing, but it would seem to be needless to impress the importance of doing no harm upon those who profess to aim at nothing but good. It looks like it was out of place, and that it was a lowering of the standard of religious experience and duty, to tell Christians, with solemn earnestness, to be harmless, when they ought to be and are supposed to be so much more than this.

Just here is the thing which arrests our attention. Christ himself is described by Paul as harmless. He was much else—he was holy, undefiled, separate from sinners, but also harmless. To put this in with so many other excellent traits in a sketch of the Savior gives it a very important meaning. It must be a great thing in a Christian to be harmless, because it is one thing wherein he becomes like Christ. There may be higher qualities in him for our imitation and attainment, but this is something very high and very noble, or it would not have been mentioned as entering into that perfect character. When the Master sent forth his disciples "as sheep amongst wolves," the first words in their commission were to be "wise as serpents and harmless as doves." Going out to do good, to preach the glad tidings of salvation, to found churches and to call sinners to repentance, it was not out of place for Jesus to tell them to do no harm. They were not bent on mischief evidently, and their hearts were filled with the sublime and benevolent mission on which they were sent, but they are admonished to be harmless. "That ye may be blameless and harmless, the sons of God without rebuke," says Paul in writing to the Philippians. And much more to the same purpose might be gathered from the inspired page.

It is therefore as Christians that we are to be harmless, because there are peculiar liabilities and dangers growing out of our duties and profession as the friends and followers of Jesus. It is the harm of inadvertence rather than of intention; injury and damage done, while the purpose has been to do nothing but good. It was evidently a word in season to the terrified jailer, "Do thyself no harm, for we are all here," because he had his sword drawn, and was about to destroy his own life. These scriptural admonitions to the Christian against doing harm are, however, directed to those who meditate no evil, and are supremely intent on benevolent purposes and the most unselfish ends. At least we may suppose the warning is for the sincere disciples of Christ, and not for the hypocritical pretender to Christian sanctity. The Christian can do a harm which no other, not even the most abandoned sinner, can—he can disparage religion, wound its friends, prejudice it in the eyes of the world, and promote infidelity as no avowed infidel or unbeliever would be able to do. In the government of the tongue the Christian may be harmless, or he may do much evil by a frivolous and inconsiderate indulgence. "If any man offend not in word, the same is a perfect man, and able also to bridle the whole body." Much harm is done by well-intentioned people by the manner of their piety, and by certain things which are offensive in this zeal. For want of carefulness and circumspection in business many, whose hearts are probably right, bring reproach upon the Christian name. It is not seldom that those who are highly endowed and possessed of the most brilliant gifts are most unfortunate in the harm which seems almost inevitably to attend their course. The clouds which dispense the beneficent showers are charged with electricity which smites and shatters. The most shining qualities and the rarest qualifications for usefulness are often neutralized by some untoward and baneful proclivity to pull down with one hand what has been built up with the other. Nothing is more common than to see great and striking powers and endowments offset and nearly destroyed by the most conspicuous faults and infirmities.

It is no mean standard, therefore, of religious practice to aim at being harmless. If we consider the subject carefully, as illustrated by actual experience and observation, we shall find that it is one of the most infrequent of Christian attainments. The number of those who are more or less useful is vastly greater than of those who are harmless. The good done is greatly lessened by the want of circumspection, and often altogether overshadowed by some flaw in the manner or spirit of our piety. The satisfaction with which the best of Christians look back upon lives of devotion to Christ is fearfully disturbed by the damaging mistakes and errors which appear more or less upon the record.

While the believer aims at the greatest positive results—to be a fruitful tree, and to be most fruitful—it is scarcely less important that he resolves to be harmless. Let him see to it that his garments are always white, and that his good be not evil-spoken of. Whatever the pastor determines to do this year, let him purpose to do no harm, and then the good will be a clear gain. Whatever the Christian, just setting out for the kingdom, may propose, let this be a subject of continual prayer and watchfulness, that he may be harmless. It might well be made a matter of study and self-examination with the maturest Christian. With all your achievements in doing good, and with the zeal and denial of a busy and devoted religious life, are you harmless? We fear it is a feature often overlooked and forgotten, and one wherein we are least likely to resemble our Lord.

Mexico.

OUR BEAUTIFUL LOT—HOMEWARD.

BY BISHOP KEENER.

CITY OF MEXICO, Feb. 28, 1873.

MR. EDITOR: Intending to take home a few specimens of this goodly land, I have been quite disappointed to-day. A head-dress made of feathers, a wreath with two roses made of humming birds' breasts, five breasts making the petals of one rose, which about two weeks ago was shown me in a dark, second-hand curiosity shop, presided over by a Mexican woman who displayed a diploma from Maximilian for having graduated in antiquities, I had set down as one; but on sending for it find that it has been sold. Another was the Clarina del Sylvia, a bird with the note of our woodlark, only fuller, richer in compass and sweetness. I first saw it at Chapultepec in a cage. As entrancing as the landscape was from that chateau, overlooking the cultivated valley, the lakes and the City of Mexico, with its surrounding circle of grand mountains, the song of this bird called off my attention for awhile entirely to itself. It is in body shorter than the mocking-bird, of the same color, without the white feathers, but with rounder head, and a very full, dark eye. It is not possible to conceive of any music more satisfactory than the gushing, ringing, long-continued, loud, mellifluous calling-note of this songster. I could only compare its refreshing fullness to a glass of ice-water on a hot day. To secure one of these I had also put down as a sort of duty to be discharged, but now see that it is too late, for news has just reached me that it is possible to get a church-lot in what I conceive to be the most desirable spot in this city. And it will take uninterrupted work to-day and to-morrow if I succeed. Fortunately I have secured some excellent colored maps which were lithographed here, and several models of the Mexican bird-sellers and strollers, made of rags and wax by native artists—good specimens of the artistic skill of these people.

MARCH 1, 1873.

At work all day, and have succeeded in getting the papers signed in the purchase of the lot. It is on the Alemada, a public square, and the fashionable part of the city, where everybody walks or rides. There are several churches fronting on it, and I supposed it barely possible to obtain so eligible a site, excepting at a price far beyond my resources. The lot has a wall one yard thick and eighteen feet high on three sides of it, which could not be placed there for $1,000. We now have two pieces of property belonging to Southern Methodism in this city, including a chapel, which has cost us in all $8,000, the cash payment being, including repairs on the church, $4,000. This is considerably less than the sum I expected would be necessary to make a good lodgment in the very heart of this great mission-field.

For this success, next to the openings of a good Providence, the church is indebted to Mr. R. M. Walmsley, of New Orleans. He was kind enough to give me a letter of credit for $5,000, and to advance for me three sterling bills, £40 each, for immediate use. Without this credit I could not have turned a wheel in Mexico, because the Missionary Society of our church is as yet not known here. I desire especially to acknowledge the hand of God in the unlooked-for turn of events, and sources of information suddenly opened, as if in answer to prayers long since offered by absent friends.

"In all my ways thy hand I own, Thy ruling providence I see."

The anxieties which have pressed upon me ever since leaving the wharf at New Orleans, and the alternations of faith and doubt, now give place to gratitude; and mingled with this is the thought of starting for the most attractive spot in all the world—my wife's home. I hope that the church will be satisfied with the responsibility assumed and discharged. At the last meeting of the Board of Bishops, Mexico and Central America were put in my charge. To be sure, $1,500 was appropriated for the Spanish work on the Texas border, but that was not "Mexico." To be put in charge means something, and the grace of God has made me a liberal constructionist. Representing so large a body of Christians, the projection of this mission is by no means the measure of an unusual faith; and yet it is a fair start and must be followed up vigorously. Will the Church South take this field to her heart, not for the hour, but incorporate it into her conscience, her prayers and her undying zeal for the kingdom of Christ, that her offerings may be increased, not divided, by so much as the annual support of this mission may demand?

The Northern Methodists have appropriated largely for this work—they talk of $50,000; and the Presbyterians have but recently gone even more extensively into it. It lies next to us geographically, and will at some future time be a part of our Southern territory. Railroad enterprises are now on foot which will at no distant day enable one to hold quarterly meeting one Sunday in New Orleans and the next in the City of Mexico.

Dr. Butler, the superintendent of the missions in Mexico of the Methodist Episcopal Church, arrived here a week ago with his family. He is a man of large experience, of good sense, of hope, of pleasant address, with much pulpit ability and spirituality. No better one could have been selected for the work. His success in India is something wonderful. Beginning with one native preacher, after a period of fifteen years he concluded his superintendency with one hundred and sixty-five preachers, workers and helpers of various sorts, male and female, the most of them natives. I have had great pleasure in his acquaintance and that of his excellent family. I met here also a very efficient, intelligent gentleman in the Rev. William Parkes, the agent of the British and Foreign Bible Society—a minister of the Congregationalists. Dr. Cooper, a Church of England preacher of Chicago, sent out by the Foreign Christian Union, is now working on his own account—half English and half Spanish. The doctor I found to be a very excellent gentleman, who supposes himself to be a Low Churchman, but who is constitutionally high—so high that he allows no one to work with him. The Revs. Messrs. Hutchinson and Phillips are doing capital work for the Presbyterian board, and they harmonize admirably with all others who are advancing the Master's kingdom. Bishop Haven and I became well acquainted. I suppose he knew me to be the "rabid editor," as Dr. Wheedon affirmed, of the Southern Church, and I knew him to be of all the most radical of the Northern; and so we agreed to disagree very harmoniously. It is a pity that the Bishop had not been raised at the South, for he would then have added to his well-stocked brain some knowledge of the negro and the Yankee. His life has been spent too far from the one and too near the other to acquire anything like a reasonable acquaintance with either. Despite this, however, the Bishop will make his mark in the high office to which he has been recently advanced.

There are a number of ex-Confederates in this city, who have been here ever since the break-up. They have maintained themselves by dint of hard work, and are highly respected. One of them, Mr. George W. Clarke, is the publisher and editor of the Two Republics, a paper published in English in this city. He writes a polished and pungent article, and is yet full of kind remembrance for his old friends of Arkansas and the South. I found great pleasure in his company, and am much indebted to him for the agreeableness of my sojourn in Mexico. He made up a very pleasant American party, with whom I visited the magnificent houses and grounds of Mr. Baron and Senor Escandon, at Tacubaya. These establishments are on a palatial style, full of choice paintings by the old masters, and surrounded by grounds which show union of the best taste with the very highest natural advantages—grottoes, lakes, exotic trees and shrubs, rustic arbors, and artificial mounts which command a landscape, worthy the hills of Eden. I obtained there the best view I had of Ixtaccihuatl. Immediately in front of it was a dark mountain, which raised the white-sheeted summit of the volcano to a height that reminded me of the engravings in Pilgrim's Progress of the gates of the celestial city.

A visitor to Mexico from our country will always find himself welcome, delightfully so, at the United States legation. Mr. Nelson and his accomplished daughter dispense an elegant hospitality. I am under many obligations to him, and also to our consul general, Dr. Skilton, a graduate of the Wesleyan University. I do not know that our country could be better represented at the republic of Mexico.

I find myself leaving this land and people with ideas immensely corrected and different from those I had upon entering it. I had imagined a people rude, mongrel, half negro, turbulent, incapable of much more than rudimentary development, excepting by Christian processes, and a land scorched and peeled by incessant revolutions; whereas no land can be imagined to show fewer traces of yearly strife; and as for the people, seven-tenths are pure-blood Indian, and one-tenth pure-blood Spanish; and there is not a negro or mulatto in the City of Mexico, excepting two servants imported by the American consul, nor any on the way, excepting a very few in the seaport of Vera Cruz. And as for capacity and civilization, in many respects which are most highly valued—these people can surpass Boston in music, Philadelphia in libraries, and New York in fine art. This is a hard saying, but a true. They need nothing but the Bible, railroads, and a more generally diffused ownership of land to be a great people.

I leave presently for the railroad station. The train starts at twelve midnight.

The $20 in gold which Sister Bustillar, of Carondelet Street, sent me as I was leaving for Mexico, and the $15 which Miss T., of Felicity, gave, I have ordered to be used in building the pulpit of the "Capilla de San Andres."

Fare from the City of Mexico to Vera Cruz by railroad, $16; from Vera Cruz to Havana, $40; from Havana to New Orleans, $34, all in gold.

Temperance.—No. I.

The annual amount of fermented and distilled liquors used in the United States would fill a canal four feet deep, fourteen feet wide and one hundred and twenty miles long. The places where intoxicating drinks are made and sold in this country, if placed in direct lines, would make a street one hundred miles long. If all the victims of the rum traffic were gathered before our eyes, we should see a thousand funerals a week from their number. Placed in a procession five abreast, the drunkards of America would form an army one hundred miles long, with a suicide occurring in every mile. Every hour in the night the heavens are lighted with the incendiary torch of the drunkard. Every hour in the day the earth is stained with the blood of drunken assassins. See the great American army of inebriates, more than half a million strong, marching on to sure and swift destruction, filling off rapidly into the poor-houses and prisons, and up to the scaffold, and yet the ranks are constantly recruited from the moderate drinkers! Who can compute the fortunes squandered, the hopes crushed, the hearts broken, the homes made desolate by drunkenness?

This is an extract from an essay on temperance. What a horrid picture this is! What a dreadful scene is here portrayed! This looks like a window opened into the infernal regions. West's great painting of "Death on the Pale Horse," whose terrific scenes once made our young blood run cold, is nothing compared to this picture. Just think of that "canal, four feet wide, fourteen feet deep and one hundred and twenty miles long," filled with the fiery liquid, winding like a huge python through all the land, destroying happiness and withering beauty and inviting death! Think of that "street one hundred miles long," every house in which deals out the fatal drink! Imagine what scenes of horror are enacted there, what words of foulness are spoken there, what deeds of atrocity are committed there! See, in that street, how quickly that nature, upon which was impressed the "stamp divine," can be transformed into the nature of a fiend! How easily reasonable man can get below the brute that wallows in the mire! Look at the lurid lights which flash through all that one hundred miles, and tinge with the ashy hues of death the faces of its frequenters! Go and stand at the entrance of that graveyard, where one thousand victims are buried weekly! Count the little hillocks that have been made in your own short lifetime! Number the widows and orphans that have wept over the untimely and sad deaths of loved ones! Just think of that staggering, reeling, besotted army, more than five hundred thousand strong, marching through the land, destroying property and outraging virtue, brutalizing humanity and defying heaven! Watch that march, more dreadful in its effects than the sweep of an army of vandals, and you see poor wretches laying violent hands on themselves, and going unculled into the presence of God; you see them rapidly leaving the ranks and straggling into the poor-houses, and filling the prisons and mounting the scaffolds! Just think of it; that every "hour in the night the heavens are lighted with the incendiary torch of the drunkard!" This is but an outlet for that fire kindled in his soul by alcohol! Just think of it, that "every hour in the day the earth is stained with the blood of drunken assassins!" That is but an expression of hate, fired to frenzy by strong drink!

But, reader, the thing most to be pondered in this dark picture—the stroke that cuts very close to the hearts of hundreds of the readers of the ADVOCATE—is that the ranks of this army "are constantly recruited from the moderate drinkers." No man becomes a soldier at once. There is the drill and training, and these make the soldier. No man goes from sobriety to drunkenness at one leap. He walks from one to the other. If there were no moderate drinkers the race of drunkards would soon die out. Then this is the thing to be most studied in this picture which the temperance essayist has drawn. The moderate drinkers dig that horrible canal! The moderate drinkers build up that dreadful street! The moderate drinkers light those incendiary torches and flourish those death-dealing daggers! The moderate drinkers fill the poor-houses and prisons of the land! The moderate drinkers make up that fearful army in whose train follow woe and want and penury and shame! And what are we doing to stop this all-prevailing evil? What is the church of God doing to put an end to this "monster of such hideous mien?" VOX.

Rev. Greenberry Garrett.

MR. EDITOR: Death has removed another of our aged ministers—Rev. Greenberry Garrett. He is so widely known and has been so long a member of the Alabama Conference that his death will be sad intelligence to a large number of your readers. He has done so much good in his long lifetime, been so faithful to the interests of the church, that his departure deserves more than a passing notice. Bro. Garrett died about five o'clock A. M. on the twentieth of March, 1873, after a violent attack of pneumonia, of ten days' duration.

This venerable minister was born in Davidson county, Tennessee, July 24, 1800. In 1819 he was converted to God, and in 1821 began his successful ministry in connection with the Tennessee Conference. He was missionary three years to the Cherokee Indians in north Alabama. In 1832 he married Miss Mary W. Speer, of Davidson county, Tennessee, and in the following year was transferred to the Alabama Conference, taking up his residence in Autauga county. In 1844 he was a member of the General Conference, held in New York. In 1850 his wife died, and he married, a second time, in 1856, Mrs. Eliza J. Plummer, of Pascagoula, Mississippi, who survives him. By his first marriage he had five children—one son and four daughters—all of whom still live except the son. Bro. Garrett has occupied the office of presiding elder for more than half the period of his ministry. He has resided in Summerfield for over thirty years, and was one of the honored founders of these two church institutions. At first he was a successful agent, and then an efficient trustee, doing everything he could to promote their interests and give them permanent success. In 1865 he was placed in the superannuated relation, but continued to preach as he was able. He preached for the last time in Verona, Mississippi, while on a visit to his children there. He loved the Sabbath school, and taught a class of young men, who will doubtless never forget the counsel and words of wisdom that so often fell from the lips of the aged servant of God as he labored to impress them with the simple truths of the gospel. He loved the prayer meeting, and was remarkably gifted in prayer. They were strong, glorious prayers of faith he uttered, which we will long remember. He loved too the class meeting, and his earnest talk there, just three weeks before he died, was so spiritual and impressive that it touched deeply all hearts, and it has been repeatedly spoken of since his death as worthy of grateful remembrance.

During the last year he has declined more rapidly than in any former year, enduring great suffering, of which he never complained, always bearing a brave and cheerful face, and in heart completely submissive to the will of God. He was attacked with serious illness several times before his last sickness, and thought his time of departure at hand, longing for the glorious exchange. He said that God had mercifully spared him, and permitted him to visit his children last summer and give them his parting blessing, and now he had nothing to do but to wait his summons to go home, which he expected every moment.

During his last illness his attack was so violent that he could not talk much, but gave repeated evidence that his faith was strong and his hopes bright to the last. On being questioned as to his spiritual condition he said: "My work is done. All is peace. No doubts trouble me." Toward his end his wife asked him if he felt his Savior precious to his soul. "Yes," he said, "precious; O how precious." Bro. Massey asked him if he could say that the Lord was his Shepherd still. With great effort he answered, "Yes," and continued to move his lips, but could utter no sound. We knew full well what he would have said.

His funeral took place in the Summerfield church—a church which he had contributed largely by his efforts to build. An able and impressive discourse was delivered by his surviving friend and associate, Rev. Dr. A. H. Mitchell. The text (Matthew xxv, 23) was strikingly illustrated by the remarkable life of devotion to the cause of Christ just ended in beautiful and serene old age. The venerable doctor presented some of the striking features of Bro. Garrett's character. He was a faithful citizen, a good neighbor, the best of parents, a true, earnest and laborious minister of the cross, and died an honest Christian man, owing no man anything, leaving the legacy of a good name to his children, and to the church the memory of a useful career as an humble embassador of the cross. There is a glorious history running like a golden veil all through his long life. Those who knew him well loved him most; and those who have heard him preach, and have felt the power of his ministry, know well how to estimate his life and to cherish his memory.

In the Sabbath school, last Sabbath, Bro. John Massey, the superintendent, alluded to his absence in a very touching manner, pointing to his class as one that was left without a teacher; and, after alluding to the forcible manner in which the venerable teacher had taught his class, he said, that eighteen years ago this same aged minister preached, and he (the speaker) was awakened, came to the altar, and felt the old man's hand upon his head, while he sought and found his Savior. Many such trophies will shine as stars in the crown of the aged saint. The grand result of a long, useful and faithful life in the ministry has been that it has ended in peace.

We have buried him beside his first wife, in the graveyard on the Summerfield road, and we know that if faithful we shall meet the old man again, radiant with immortality, in the kingdom of our Father.

A. D. MCVOY.

SUMMERFIELD, ALA., March 21, 1873.

ONE OF THE BEST INVESTMENTS.—The Southwestern Presbyterian has the following notice of a new parsonage recently completed by the Thalia Street Presbyterian church of New Orleans:

We performed a pleasant duty, the other day, in paying our respects to the pastor of Thalia church in his new parsonage, at 434 Franklin street. It is a snug two-story cottage, skillfully planned, tastefully arranged and substantially built, located within a convenient distance of the church, on a wide and airy street. Every convenience that thoughtful intelligence could contrive combines to make it a delightful home. The house was built by the congregation. It is the realization of a wish of the late H. T. Bartlett, of honored memory. And though all the congregation, including the Sabbath school children, contributed generously, the successful completion of the enterprise is mainly due to the taste and munificence of his widow, who survives him.

One of the best investments a church can possibly make is to build a parsonage. Every church without one is at a disadvantage.

We congratulate Thalia church on this important move in the right direction.

Books and Periodicals.

THE INSPIRED HISTORY OF JESUS. Edited by Samuel J. Vandersloot. Philadelphia: Vandersloot & Co. Duodecimo. 564 pages.

Cream-tinted paper, excellent type and splendidly bound. Over 300 pages are given to the Savior's life as exhibited by a collocation of the gospel narratives, and the whole history is made up from the literal words of Scripture—a curious and at the same time instructive performance. In addition to the inspired history the volume contains an analysis of the whole Bible, the lines of early Christianity, the history between the Old and New Testaments, the leading Christian doctrines, and much more which we have not space to mention. There are sixteen full-page illustrations, purporting to be by Gustave Dore. Rather hard pictures they are, for the most part; but the book is a good one, and we wish it a large circulation. Gulf States Publishing Company, 112 Camp street, New Orleans.

THE ALDINE for April contains fourteen splendid engravings, besides the usual large amount of choice reading matter. Of other April magazines we have received Lippincott's, the Southern Magazine, Arthur's Illustrated Home Magazine, the Children's Hour, and, among the best, Scribner's Monthly.

THE TWO REPUBLICS is the title of a weekly paper published in English in the City of Mexico. George W. Clarke is editor and publisher. It is a live sheet and an interesting journal. With railroads, American newspapers and the gospel, Mexico is bound to wake up and join in the progress of the age. We have received three numbers of the Two Republics, and shall henceforth count it among our exchanges.

THE Raleigh Christian Advocate of March 16 comes to us in mourning for one of the princes of Israel, the Rev. William Barringer, of the North Carolina Conference. Rev. J. A. Cunninggim writes as follows of the circumstances of his death:

After his return from the last Conference, at Fayetteville, he entered upon his work at once, and had completed the first round of quarterly meetings. He had been confined to his house for about a week with influenza, which had somewhat enfeebled him. On the eleventh he was superintending the work on G. F. College. When passing out of the window on the third story to the gangway his foot slipped and he fell about twenty-eight feet. His right thigh was broken, and his right arm and face considerably bruised. The fall produced concussion of the brain, which caused his death. He was conscious for several hours on the day of his fall, and also about one hour on the sixteenth. He did not apparently suffer much except occasional paroxysms of pain. During his lucid moments he gave satisfactory evidence that he was fully ready to depart and be with Jesus, which he did at ten minutes past seven P. M. on Monday, the seventeenth.

The same paper notices the death of another venerable preacher:

Rev. Robert L. Carson, for many years an active and influential member of the North Carolina Conference, but for the past few years a member of the Virginia Conference, is no more. He died in the town of Halifax on the evening of the sixteenth instant, after a brief illness. His many friends will be deeply afflicted at the announcement of his death. One after another of our fathers in Israel are called from labor to refreshment.

DEATH OF AN OLD PREACHER. Rev. Thomas Berry, well known to many in St. Louis, died in great peace, at the house of his brother, Baldwin Berry, near Logootee, Indiana, on the tenth of February last, after an illness of nearly three weeks.

By an attack of paralysis he had almost entirely lost his speech some several months before his death, and during his last illness, of seventeen days' continuance, he took very little nourishment, and during twelve days swallowed nothing but water. So writes his brother to us.

Bro. Berry once lived in Vicksburg, Mississippi, then in St. Louis and at other places.

At the time of his death he was well advanced in the eighty-fourth year of his age.—St. Louis Christian Advocate.

WE REGRET TO LEARN, says the Western Methodist, that Bishop Paine still suffers from the attack of rheumatism by which he has been prostrated for some time. Our latest advices are to March 18, when he was unable to walk or write. We earnestly hope that, if not before this date, he will soon be restored to health; and we pray that the days of the venerable Bishop may be long in the land, as a precious blessing to the church and to his family.

THE work of religion in Franklin, Tennessee, still goes on. Nearly the whole community seems to have come under its influence. Large numbers of happy converts crowd the courts of Zion. In due time the rejoicing pastor, Bro. Plumpfer, will give us an account of this remarkable revival.—Nashville Christian Advocate.

REV. S. A. STEELE, a student at Emory and Henry College, Virginia, has been elected to the chaplaincy of the University of Virginia, an office to which the faculty elect every two years from the four leading denominations of Christians—Methodist, Baptist, Presbyterian and Protestant Episcopal.

AN EFFORT is being made in Texas to found a university. The president, Rev. F. A. Mood, D. D., mentions two donations of a thousand acres of land, each for the institution. The call is for ten thousand acres.

MANY run about after feliedly like an absent-minded man hunting for his hat while it is on his head or in his hand.

REV. HENRY C. HARRIS.—This gentleman, the details of whose unfortunate death at Cassidy's have already been given in this paper, had been an occasional contributor to the columns of the Sunday Times for nearly two years. His contributions were at first sent from points in north Mississippi, but more recently from Mississippi City. Accompanying one of his last contributions was a note in which he stated that he would remain for some time at the last-mentioned place, adding: "I am, as you may know, but a poor missionary of the Episcopal Church, and have tried in vain to make a little money by my pen."

The following "little manuscript poem, just written," is what accompanied the note. It is suggestive of some "rooted sorrow."

LIGHT.

Blinded and hopeless
You sail all alone;
Your treasures all lost,
Your rest but a stone.

Sad your heart aching,
And longing for sleep;
Anything welcome—
A grave in the deep.

Up! for the shadows
Are passing away;
Morning is coming
With golden array.

Night has an ending,
And soon there will be
The light of the dawning
Aglow on the sea.

New Orleans Times.

A MERITED TRIBUTE.—Governor Leslie, of Kentucky, who is a teacher in a Baptist Sunday school, remarked to a friend recently: "For six years I have taught a class of young men in the Sunday school; during this time twenty-two have been members of this class, and of this number I have witnessed the conversion of sixteen, who have become active members of the Baptist Church, and prosperous, honest members of society." He added that he regarded the Sunday school as the most efficient agency that can be employed to counteract the agencies of error and evil which are now, like a flood, rolling in upon the nation.

IT IS SAID that a Sunday school talkist recently sent word to a superintendent that he would like to visit his Sunday school again, as he had "a new story" he was telling just now. Even he was ahead of some of the peripatetic Sunday school speakers, who mercilessly repeat the same story year after year, in the hope that it was not before heard—at least by those of the children who were born since they commenced its recital.

SPEAKING OF GREATNESS, Lavater says: "He only is great who has the habits of greatness; who, after performing what none in ten thousand could accomplish, passes on like Samson, and tells neither father nor mother about it."

AN INGENIOUS French writer observes that those who depend on the merits of their ancestors may be said to search in the root of the tree for those fruits which the branches ought to produce.

THE ATTENTION of planters is requested to the Dufhols Flange Cotton Gin, the latest and one of the best improvements in this indispensible article to the Southern planter. This gin may be seen at Messrs. Golsan Brothers', general agents, No. 39 Perdido street.

FANCY VARIETY AND LADIES' HAIR STORE.—Oliver A. Peirce, No. 625 Magazine street, has a superior stock of fancy articles and human hair goods, which he offers at reasonable prices.

CHINA AND PORCELAIN WARE and household comforts, in great variety, at Navra & Offner's, No. 171 Canal street

AMERICAN MUTUAL INSURANCE COMPANY.—The above company has been in operation only a few months, but with encouraging prospects for the future. The third section of article second of their charter authorizes the establishment of agencies in Louisiana and in other States, which we regard as a good feature for the company and for the insured, as the strength of the company is thereby increased, while the risks are distributed. The capital of the company is $500,000, with the privilege of increasing to $1,000,000. The company is presided over by D. Leubrie, Esq., and Mr. B. Meyer is its secretary. The character of its officers and board of trustees is a guarantee for the success of the company. An advertisement will be found in another column.

WHOLESALE GROCERS.—For many years it has been our privilege to enjoy the acquaintance of the firm of John I. Adams & Co., wholesale grocers and dealers in provisions, etc., 43, 45 and 47 Peters street, and take pleasure in stating that our acquaintance and business transactions with them, both before and since the war, have been entirely satisfactory, and resulted in confirming our good opinion of the gentlemen composing the firm. Their establishment is one of the largest in the city. Their advertisement is in our columns.

AGRICULTURAL IMPLEMENTS.—One of the largest and best-furnished depots of agricultural implements in the South is that of B. J. West, 115 and 117 Magazine street, whose advertisement is to be found in our columns. Besides the articles manufactured by Mr. West, and the patents in his own name represented in his depot, he has the agencies of about twenty manufacturers and inventors of articles in his line. No one in search of implements or machinery should fail to visit his establishment.

OUR lady readers will observe with pleasure the announcement, in another column, of the return from the East, with a superior assortment of spring goods, of Madame Sophie, the accomplished modiste, whose establishment (formerly 152 Canal) is now located at No. 13 Baronne street, where she will be pleased to receive a continuation of the liberal patronage heretofore bestowed. Madame Sophie's opening commenced this week.

GERMAN STUDENT LAMPS.—This lamp has for scores of years been considered the best lamp to read by. A large invoice has just been received by the go-ahead Septoline Oil Company, at their two stores, No. 62 Camp and No. 15 Dauphine street. These excellent lamps are offered at cost for cash, together with the elegant Japanned tea caddies and tin foot room sets, for which this company has now become famous.

SOUTHERN MATTRESS AND BEDDING HOUSE.—M. D. Gleason, No. 52 Royal street, offers for sale a large stock of mattresses of all kinds, pillows, comforts, blankets, mosquito bars, etc. He claims that his prices are twenty-five per cent. less than St. Louis manufacturers, and invites the especial attention of country merchants.

THE advertisement of J. Booth, No. 220 St. Andrew street, will be found of interest to those in quest of sewing machines. Mr. Booth will exchange or repair old machines, and keeps a supply of needles, findings and attachments for all kinds of sewing machines.

OUR READERS will do well to examine the stock of dry goods at Myers, Braselman & Adams', Nos. 536 and 538 Magazine street, who offer goods of superior quality at reasonable prices.

J. BOTH, No. 291 Camp street, is prepared to carefully pack furniture for shipping, and give assistance in house-cleaning, etc., at a reasonable charge.

UNDISPUTED FACTS.—It has been truly and significantly said that domestic happiness is more dependent on good digestion than virtuous creeds or moral codes. If the dogma holds, the oracle can be consulted by a prompt application to Price, the Delphic author of the Celebrated Aromatic Stomach Bitters. Wherever, within the length and breadth of the land, Price's Bitters have penetrated, every household has been illumined by the sunshine of an unclouded joy, and every family revelled in the sweets of health and contentment. The sparkling eye, the ruddy cheek, the cheerful smile and happy glance, no less than the elastic step and the unfaltering tread, what are they but the eloquent telltales of some vitalizing elixir? No secret botany holds the charm, no scientific alchemy creates the spell. The days of miracles are gone; the magic, mysteriously-working wonders have passed away, and the age—a plain, practical one—gives us a simple tonic that, by a happy amalgamation, restores to energy and strength the enervated system. Take Price's Celebrated Aromatic Stomach Bitters, and you bid an eternal farewell to such unwelcome guests as dyspepsia, indigestion, nervousness, neuralgia, flatulency and debility.

THE grand secret of beauty is health. The secret of health is the power to eat, digest and assimilate a proper quantity of wholesome food. This can never be the case while impurities exist in the system. Every organ must perform its functions naturally, or the whole organism is deranged. The blood must be purified. It is the vital principle, ramifying through every part of the body, and when it becomes impure its effects are shown on the weaker organs. DR. TUTT'S SARSAPARILLA AND QUEEN'S DELIGHT expels all impurities and vitalizes the whole system.

VEGETABLE CALOMEL.—The substances composing DR. TUTT'S LIVER PILLS are derived from the vegetable kingdom, and are particularly designed to act with gentleness and thoroughness upon the stomach, bowels, liver and general circulation. They produce one or two easy passages a day, without any purging or griping. They contain no drastic element.

For Inflammatory and Chronic Rheumatism, Gout, Dyspepsia, Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, diseases of the blood, Liver, Kidneys and Bladder, DR. TUTT'S SARSAPARILLA AND QUEEN'S DELIGHT has been most successful.—These diseases are the result of vitiated blood. As a blood purifier this preparation has no equal. It is purely vegetable. apl It

PROCTER & GAMBLE'S EXTRA OLIVE SOAP.—This Soap is made of the best ingredients and is agreeably perfumed. It is sold, at the same price as common soap, in all the groceries in the country and the city of New Orleans. This superior Soap has acquired in the market a large sale—for the toilet, to wash linen, and all other domestic uses. It is sufficient to buy once only to be convinced of its great quality, and to give it the preference to all others. Ask for it in your grocery and you will buy no other. All our acquaintances are perfectly satisfied with it. apt It

CHILLS AND FEVERS, in all forms,

"Fold their tents like Arabs,
And as silently steal away," under the magic influence of Kress Fever Tonic. A few doses will start the procession promptly, and leave in the place of these unwelcome guests sunshine, health, happiness and joy in the household. A box of pills, free of charge, is contained in each wrapper, and when this chill-remedy is taken according to the directions around each bottle the proprietors warrant it to cure. Frederickson & Harte and P. J. Hart & Co., New Orleans, supply the remedy. mh20 2m

TO BE TAKEN in the place of quinine or bitters of any kind. The dose is small, and its virtues undoubted. It will be found cheaper and better than any other remedy for that purpose, and also as a general plantation and family medicine Simmons' Liver Regulator probably has no superior. ap3 1t

What the Doctors Say.

Amos Woolly, M. D., of Kosehske county, Indiana, says: "For three years past I have used Allen's Lung Balsam extensively in my practice, and I am satisfied there is no better medicine for lung diseases in use."

Isaac A. Doran, M. D., of Logan county, Ohio, says: "Allen's Lung Balsam not only sells rapidly, but gives perfect satisfaction in every case within my knowledge. Having confidence in it, and knowing that it possesses valuable medicinal properties, I freely use it in my daily practice, and with unbounded success. As an expectorant it is most certainly far ahead of any preparation I have ever yet known."

Physicians do not recommend a medicine which has no merit. What they say about Allen's Lung Balsam can be taken as a fact. Let all afflicted test it at once, and be convinced of its real merits.

It is harmless to the most delicate child. It contains no Opium in any form.

THE DUBOIS FLANGE COTTON GIN.

By the Flange the Cotton is kept in contact with the teeth on each side, until the fiber is taken from the seed, without allowing them to be taken up by the return motion of the roll, as in other Gins.

The Flange prevents hulls, stems, sticks and hard substances from being cut, consequently making a better sample out of roughly-picked cotton than other Gins.

We have sold more from this point than any agency of any other Gin, for the crop of 1872-73; consequently we can furnish more and better references, and they are warranted to come up to all that is said of them.

We keep constantly on hand all sizes, from 40 to 80 SAW STANDS, left or right. Price, $5 per saw.

The Child's Corner.

TO "LITTLE YELLOW-HAIR," ON HER BIRTHDAY

BY PERDITA.

Oh wild Yellow-hair! Oh sweet Yellow-hair!
Little one small, thou art so fair!
Come up with the daisies, when the birds sing,
With a heart full of music, fair child of spring!

Long dark lashes, over wide-open eyes
That study the world with azure surprise;
And the sunbeams linger, with glowing caress,
On the peach-bloom cheeks all lips love to press!

Not a wind that blows but pauses to play
With those flying locks in a wanton way;
While caressingly down on that fair young head
The blossoms of summer their crimson leaves shed.

Say, what do you think of "this luminous sphere?"
A big play-house for the little folks here,
Or a rare old garden of sunshine and shade,—
And thornless paths for dainty feet made?
Oh child of our love, stay just as you are,
And never grow wiser, wild Yellow-hair!

You are gath'ring just now life's honey, my bee;
Let me tell you, the sweetest you ever will see;
So flutter and dance on your flowery way,
With a butterfly heart in that wee bosom gay.

"Life's just a big garden of sunshine and blooms;"
So thrive on its sweetness and drink its perfumes;
But, child of our love, stay just as you are!—
Ah! never grow up, my wild Yellow-hair!

A Letter to the Children.

DEAR CHILDREN: I have often cast a wishful glance toward your Corner, wondering if I could write anything that would interest you, until I at last thought I would try. There can be no harm in trying—even to learn a very hard lesson. And I tell you I feel very doubtful about my success when writing to children. It is not an easy matter to put one's self in a child's place. They are great critics, and like a nice story as well as grown-up people.

Now I cannot promise you stories, at least not this time, but I can tell you how I love children, how I consider them my own private property, and talk about the many charming things we see this lovely spring weather. I know you love spring the best of all the year, especially you who live in the country and know how much beauty spring brings—with its soft blue sky, fleecy clouds that form themselves into ever so many queer shapes; the grand old "woods," where the buttercups, daisies and violets spring up all around, where the dear little birds sing so sweetly, and the tall trees somehow make one feel so strong and brave.

Don't you like to hunt for flowers? I think I know which flowers you like the best—the wee winsome violets, that you have to look for so long, under bush and grass, to find. And when you see them nestling so cozily way down in the cool green shade, don't you clap your hands for joy? I know I feel like it sometimes, if I am "grown-up;" and when I get in the woods with a crowd of little ones, I know just how they feel! It's human nature to like best what gives the most trouble; that is one of the reasons you like violets best.

Did you ever think how much violets are like some people? You search and search, passing by the flowers growing boldly by the wayside, flaunting their colors in your faces, until at last, when you are not expecting it, you find one hid way off by itself; and how much prettier it is than the gaudy flower that strives to attract every one! Some people, particularly girls and boys, who are quiet and modest, and wait for their good qualities to be found out, instead of forcing themselves on every one's notice, though they may remain a long time neglected or unnoticed, when they are found out, how everybody loves and respects them! And even if they never are found out, God knows all about them, and they have the promise of resting in his arms in heaven. Flowers grow in heaven, right under his eye and tender care, if they are sometimes neglected and trampled under cruel feet here on earth. When I see those sweet, gentle flowers it seems as though angel faces are looking out from their dewy, fragrant hearts; and when I see a child, the words of our Savior ring in my ears, "Suffer little children to come unto me," and I know he is protecting them from all harm.

I could write you many things that would interest you, but others will want to say something to you, so I must not be selfish. We must think of others besides ourselves if we wish to be happy. In telling you good-by I won't say, "Be good children," because if you love your dear parents who are so kind to you, and God who gives them to you, of course you will try to be as good as you can. When you are praying to "our Father" think of LITTLE BEVERLY.

Work for Little Hands.

How old is my little reader? Ten? Eight? Seven? Perhaps only five, and just beginning to read. Have you learned the great truth that, in this world where we live, even little children have work to do? I once asked Lucy this question, and what do you suppose was her reply?

Lucy was five years old; and one day I saw her fretful because she was tired of play.

"Lucy," said I, "have you no work to do?"

The little girl opened her blue eyes and looked earnestly into my face to see if I was in earnest. Then she said:

"No, indeed. Papa works because he is a man; all the tall men ought to work, so ought the great ladies, and the big boys and the large girls; but I am only five years old."

Just then a honey-bee came buzzing along and alighted upon a white rose, which from the top of its thorny tree looked in at the window.

"The bee," said I, "is not a 'tall man, a great lady, a big boy or a large girl,' yet he finds work to do."

"He works for honey," replied Lucy.

And, taking a knitting-needle from the table, she idly stirred his soft wings and touched his tiny legs, until the bee, losing his patience, flew to another flower.

Then we saw the bird that was building a nest upon the apple-tree beside the garden wall. Very busy was that little bird, carrying sticks, straw and all manner of things, and singing merrily when she had deposited her heavy load. Once, in her zeal to secure material for building, this same busy bird had stolen a piece of thread-lace from a work-basket in the window, and it was found curiously woven with her sticks and straw.

Lucy was still at the window, and I whispered in her ear:

"The birds find work to do."

Then I looked from the window again and saw the little ants running to and fro as though half crazy with work to do; the spider warping a web from the honeysuckle to the rose-bush, and the crimson lady bugs going of errands without once stopping by the way.

"They are all at work," said I. "Fathers and brothers in the fields and shops, mothers and sisters at home, the birds, the bees, the ants, yes, the smallest of all God's creatures work. They have no hands, no reasoning soul like ours; yet they understand that in the world's great 'work to do,' they must have a part. So the tall men and the great ladies, the big boys and the large girls are doing the work belonging to them; and the little insects, even those whose life is but the length of a summer day, are working while that short day lasts; but who will do the work of the little Lucys belonging to this world, who are only five years old?"

The little girl thought a moment, and then replied:

"Everybody seems to have his own work to do; what if the idle little Lucys should do what belongs to them?"

"Sure enough," said I.

"But," she continued, "how shall we know what belongs to us?"

What would you have told her, my dear? That which needs to be done, and we can do, belongs to us. I thought this a proper answer, and when I told Lucy this she began to look around the room; then she set about putting it to order; and when everything was nicely arranged she sat down to hem a pocket-handkerchief for her father, and was soon singing as merrily as did the little bird who undertook to trim her nest with a handsome pattern of thread-lace.

And as we sat I spoke with her of the chief thing which little girls, as well as grown-up people, ought to be in haste to do. What is that? "Seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness." And how shall you do this? Hasten to the Lord Jesus, and then, your sins forgiven and your heart made new, you may "add to your faith virtue, and to virtue knowledge, and to knowledge temperance, and to temperance patience, and to patience godliness, and to godliness brotherly kindness, and to brotherly kindness charity."

The Vine.

FROM THE GERMAN.

A gardener had trained a vine against his house, and it soon covered the whole of one side of the wall with lovely green leaves, and bore most beautiful purple grapes. The gardener was very fond of his vine, which brought him a great deal of money through the sale of the fruit, besides giving pleasant shade to the rooms over the windows of which it grew, and enabling him sometimes to give a treat of grapes to his children after dinner.

But in this world there are people so wicked as to grudge others having anything good or pleasant if they cannot share it themselves. The gardener had a neighbor who envied his beautiful vine. Not being able to get one to grow equally well in his own garden, he coveted the fine grapes of his neighbor, and one night, when every one was asleep, he came and cut the best branches off.

The gardener was much vexed when, on getting up in the morning, he saw the finest branches gone, and sap flowing away from the vine in every part where a bough had been lopped away.

"I could almost shed tears," he said, "as the poor vine seems to be doing now. Just look!" he added, pointing to the flowing sap; "how it seems to be weeping for the loss of its beautiful branches!"

But, strange to say, the vine that year bore many more bunches of grapes than it had ever done before, and every one who tasted the fruit declared it to be much richer and sweeter than it had been in former years. The gardener's dishonest and unkind neighbor had never thought to do him a kindness in cutting away the boughs, but it had done the vine great good, for the plant wanted pruning, and before that time people had not known how needful that is when a vine has put forth so many branches as to weaken its stem. But the useful lesson the gardener learned in that way brought him ten-fold as much good as his neighbor had done him harm.

ONLY A GRAIN OF SAND.—A man who had for years carried an old and cherished watch about him one day called on its maker, and told him it was no longer useful, for it would no longer keep time correctly.

"Let me examine it," said the maker, and, taking a powerful glass, he looked carefully and steadily into the works till he spied just one little grain of sand.

"I have it," he said. "I can get over your difficulty."

About this moment, by some powerful but unseen power, the little grain, suspecting what was coming, cried out: "Let me alone! I am but a small thing, and take up but so little room I cannot possibly injure the watch. Twenty or thirty of us might do harm, but I cannot; so let me alone."

The watchmaker replied: "You must come out, for you spoil my work, and all the more so that you are so small, and but a few people can see you."

Thus it is with us, whether children or elders—one lie, one feeling of pride, vanity or disobedience may be such a little one that none but ourselves know of it; yet God, who sees all things, knows it, and that one sin, however little it may appear, will spoil all our best efforts in his service. Christian Worker.

WHAT does happy mean? A little girl lately said it is "to feel as' if you wanted to give all your things to your little sister."

Farm, Garden and Household.

Southern Orchards and Vineyards.

On the subject of the cultivation, pruning and training of fruit-trees and vines there has recently been much useful knowledge diffused among our people—so much done, in fact, toward building up the orchards and vineyards of the South that it would almost seem unnecessary to go into any further details upon this topic. Still there are hundreds, mere beginners in this branch of industry, who do not know the simplest requirements that are indispensable to success, and these are looking to the agricultural press for instruction and advice.

In all cases we find that cultivation is as essential to promote the growth and bearing of trees and vines as it is of any of the field or garden crops, and we also find that proper manuring, pruning and care generally are as necessary in the one case as in the other. Whether we cultivate for market or home use the requirements are the same—we must manure liberally, cultivate thoroughly and prune and train judiciously if we would attain to the best results. It is not an uncommon circumstance that individuals purchase large quantities of the very choicest fruit-trees and vines, with a view to market fruit-culture, and the trees, etc., given into the hands of ignorant freedmen, who take neither pains nor interest in their employer's business. The trees are planted like fence-posts, and with not much more respect for their present or future vitality; the roots, all bruised and broken as they usually are in "lifting," are still further mutilated by thrusting them with iron-shod boot-heels, perhaps, into small holes in half-plowed ground, and covering and tramping in around them clods that would be better adapted to the building of heathen temples than to the furnishing "food and shelter" for the tender rootlets of newly-transplanted trees and vines! This is no exaggerated picture. Over and often have I witnessed these scenes of violence to nature and disrespect to the true interests of the planter. This is one of the causes of failure in tree-planting. Here is another.

I have frequently noticed young orchards where the trees were originally fine and had been well planted, but where neglect or bad management had ruined every prospect of success, the trees being literally bowed to the earth by their heavy heads and slender stems. There is where the knife is required, promptly and energetically. Their heads should be thinned out and branches shortened, so that the stem may have sufficient strength to bear its top erect, even when weighted down by sleet and rain. On the whole, I am no advocate for heavy pruning, but there are exceptional cases, and the above is one of them. There must be, in all cases, a proper balance kept up between the stem or trunk and top, especially should the latter not be allowed to outgrow the ability of the former to properly support it. If this is not done the habit of the tree becomes disordered, and nothing but severe pruning, at the expense of much loss of time, will remedy the defect.

In order, therefore, to keep an orchard in good shape and health, it will be necessary not only to start it right, but to go over the orchard once a year and thin out and regulate the heads. The soil also will want occasional attention, keeping all clean around the trees and applying manures to those that are feeble or stunted. By attention to these simple rules fruit-culture may be made both agreeable and profitable.

The grape is often the victim of excessive pruning, as well as of excessive starvation. These extremes are frequently met with in our vineyards all over the piny-woods regions. There seems to be no thought or attention paid to the manuring or top-dressing of vineyards. Of course there is nothing but feebleness and decay, as we cannot expect large and profitable crops from stunted, half-starved vines. Nor is this neglected, starving practice at all necessary, for there is no other crop that pays back a better return for the labor and manures requisite for its production. Hence the sooner that slovenly cultivators turn their practical attention to the renovation of their neglected orchards and vineyards the sooner will they begin to reap a bountiful harvest, and begin to realize some return for their care, expense and waiting.

Let intelligence, energy and perseverance be the fruit-grower's motto, and failures will sink into their justly merited oblivion. With the best soils and climate in the world the South needs but judicious selection and intelligent culture to stand unrivaled in the production of fruits, vegetables and flowers. And, unless the signs of the times are strangely deceptive, she will yet do it.—Correspondent of Rural Alabamian.

TO MEND CHINA.—Take a very thin solution of gum-arabic, and stir into it plaster of Paris until the mixture is of a proper consistency. Apply it with a brush to the fractured edges of the China, and stick them together. In a few days it will be impossible to break the articles in the same place. The whiteness of the cement renders it doubly valuable.

TOMATOES, sliced and put on the steak as it broils, make a splendid relish; and sliced in half, covered with rolled crackers, placed in a dripping-pan with a spoonful of butter and seasoned to the taste, then baked for two hours, make a dish fit for—an editor and other sensible humans.

ACCORDING to Dr. Nathan Allen, of Lowell, in his registration reports of deaths in Massachusetts for thirty years, the cultivators of the earth stand as a class at the head, reaching on an average the age of sixty-five years.

LADIES clean their black dresses, silk, cashmere or alpaca, of last season, with borax and tepid water—a teaspoonful of borax to a quart of water. Apply with a black woolen rag or nail-brush.

IMPROVED

EAGLE COTTON GINS.
"The great popularity of the EAGLE COTTON GINS is established from the well-known fact that they are the most reliable, strongest and best built Cotton Gins ever made. The Eagle Cotton Gin runs lighter than any other gin, thus having a great advantage for planters who wish to run by horse power. All the immense planters who use the Eagle Cotton Gin will certify to the fact that when their cotton is sent to market it always brings the highest market price, as no other gin can produce a finer or a better sample of cotton than the Eagle Cotton Gins. Over seventeen thousand of the Eagle Cotton Gins have been made and sold. During a period of twenty years the undersigned has had the agency of the Eagle Cotton Gin in New Orleans. He has never had a gin returned or rejected out of the immense number sold. The saw cylinders of all the Eagle Cotton Gins are twelve inches in diameter, which is two inches larger than most other kinds of gins, thus giving our forty-saw gin more teeth, and they are more than equal to the fifty-saw gins of other makers, who use only a ten-inch cylinder, and the same great advantage of the twelve-inch cylinder in larger-sized gins can be easily estimated. Planters who wish a reliable cotton gin, with an established reputation, can purchase an Eagle Cotton Gin with a certainty that they are not making an untried experiment, but will obtain a cotton gin which is indorsed by the oldest and largest planters in the country as the best in use. A large stock of the Eagle Cotton Gins are always kept on sale in New Orleans, ready for immediate shipment. Planters should be particular to state if they want right or left-hand motion gins.

WASHING MACHINES, PORTABLE ENGINES, ETC.

J. C. TILTON, PITTSBURG, PA.

WOMAN'S FRIEND AND STEAM WASHER

ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND SOLD.

WILL CLEANSE YOUR CLOTHES WITHOUT RUBBING.

EVERY ONE SOLD IS FULLY WARRANTED.

NO FLUIDS OR EXTRA SOAP USED.

IT CONSUMES LESS SOAP, LESS TIME AND LESS FUEL THAN THE USUAL method. It saves Labor; Wear and Tear, and the Annoyance of Wash-day. It requires no attention while the process of cleansing goes on. It will do the Washing of the Family while you are eating breakfast and doing up dishes.

Steam has long been known as the most powerful agent in removing dirt, grease and stains from clothing, and bleaching them white. Paper-makers have for many years used steam in cleaning and bleaching their rags, and they succeed in making, by its agency, the filthiest picking from the gutter perfectly pure and white. Until the invention of the STEAM WASHER or WOMAN'S FRIEND, although often attempted, no method had been discovered of applying Steam directly to the clothing, which could be used in a portable manner for domestic purposes. The WOMAN'S FRIEND washes without labor. It will do the washing of an ordinary family in from thirty minutes to an hour. The STEAM WASHER is superior to all other devices for the following reasons:

1. It does its own work, thereby saving a large portion of the time usually taken in a family.
2. It uses much less soap than is required by any other method.
3. It requires no attention whatever while the process of cleaning is going on. A lady can do her washing while she is eating her breakfast and doing up the breakfast dishes.
4. Clothing wears double the time, washed in this Washer, that it will washed by a machine, or by hand-labor or a washboard.
5. Lace Curtains and all the fabrics are washed in a superior manner. For Flannels this Washer is most desirable, as it will not full them, as a machine or hand-rubbing does. All fabrics, from the finest lace to a bed-blanket, can be washed perfectly and with ease without the rubbing-board.

IT IS TRULY A LABOR AND CLOTHES-SAVING INVENTION.

READ THE FOLLOWING TESTIMONIALS:

NEW ORLEANS, LA., January 16, 1873.
This is to certify that I have used the Steam Washer sold by E. B. Hayes, General Agent, and fully indorse all he claims for it, having used it four or five weeks.
(Signed) ANN S. RASSETT, 180 Chippewa street.

NEW ORLEANS, LA., January 17, 1873.
This is to certify that I am using the Steam Washer called the "Woman's Friend," and consider it the best invented Washing Machine in use. It saves labor, soap, fuel and clothes, and I fully indorse all Mr. Hayes claims for it. (Signed) MRS. H. H. W. LEUDE, No. 81 St. Charles street.

NEW ORLEANS, LA., January 17, 1873.
I am using the Steam Washer called the "Woman's Friend," and consider it the best thing for washing clothes I have ever seen. (Signed) J. C. McALLISTER, cor. Carondelet and Julia Sts.

NEW ORLEANS, LA., January 17, 1873.
I am using the Steam Washer called the "Woman's Friend," and consider it the best invented Washing Machine in use. It saves labor, soap, fuel and clothes.
(Signed) N. MILLER, No. 86 Gravier street.

NEW ORLEANS, January 21, 1873.
This is to certify that I have tried the Washing Machine known as the "Woman's Friend," and find it all that it is claimed to be. I gave it a fair and honest trial, and I take great pleasure in recommending it to every housekeeper. It is very simple. A small child can use it. There is no rubbing necessary, and consequently no damage to clothes. Very respectfully, (Signed) MRS. N. JENKINS, No. 100 Baronne street.

NEW ORLEANS, January 30, 1873.
I have used the Steam Washer called the "Woman's Friend," and am perfectly satisfied that it will do all that Mr. Hayes claims for it. It is truly a labor-saving invention.
(Signed) FRANK SCHAEFFER, corner First and St. Denis streets.

NEW ORLEANS, January 30, 1873.
This is to certify that I have purchased from Mr. Hayes the Steam Washer called the "Woman's Friend," and I find it to be a great invention. It saves labor, soap, fuel and clothes, and I can fully recommend the same. No family should be without one.
(Signed) MRS. J. F. ROHRBACHER, No. 237 Camp street.

NEW ORLEANS, January 31, 1873.
E. B. HAYES, Esq., NEW ORLEANS, LA.—Dear Sir: The Steam Washer I bought of you, called the "Woman's Friend," I find, does all that you promised for it, and ought to be in every family.
(Signed) MRS. H. M. WALMSLEY.

NEW ORLEANS, January 31, 1873.
MR. E. B. HAYES, NEW ORLEANS, LA.—Dear Sir: It gives me pleasure to say to you that my wife has tried your Steam Washer, and pronounces it a perfect success, so far as she can judge. Wishing you much success in introducing it generally, I remain Your friend, truly, (Signed) S. HENDERSON.

NEW ORLEANS, February 1, 1873.
The Washing Machine called the "Woman's Friend" is well named. It has been used in my family, and found to come up to all that has been claimed for it by the patentee. We can cheerfully recommend it to all as a complete success. (Signed) DR. E. D. BEACH, 393 Canal street.

NEW ORLEANS, February 5, 1873.
MR. E. B. HAYES—Sir: I have tried your Steam Washer and find it a great saving of labor, and would recommend it to all housekeepers. (Signed) MRS. A. P. CLEVELAND, 67 Phillip St.

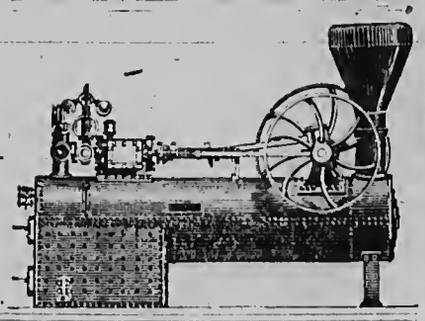
NEW ORLEANS, LA., February 5, 1873.
MR. E. B. HAYES: After a thorough test of your Steam Washer, or Woman's Friend, I pronounce it the most wonderful invention of the age. It was with much difficulty that I succeeded in getting my washerwoman to try it, being opposed to washing machines generally; but she is perfectly delighted with this, and I can cheerfully recommend it to every family.
(Signed) MRS. W. W. CARRE, 360 Rampart St., corner Ulo.

NEW ORLEANS, February 4, 1873.
MR. E. B. HAYES, NEW ORLEANS, LA.—Sir: I take pleasure in testifying to the superior merits of your Steam Washer, or Woman's Friend. From the use I have made of it I feel sure that all you claim for its performance is a success. Every family ought to have one.
(Signed) MISS E. C. WINGATE,
Principal Trinity Church Girls' School, Jackson street.

NEW ORLEANS, February 4, 1873.
This is to certify that I have purchased from Mr. Hayes the Steam Washer known as the "Woman's Friend," and must say I consider it the best Washing Machine I have ever seen. In fact there is nothing equal to it. It saves labor, soap, fuel and clothes, and I fully recommend it to every family as the best and most perfect Washing Machine in use. (Signed) MRS. S. P. RUSS.

NEW ORLEANS, February 5, 1873.
I have used the Steam Washer, or Woman's Friend, sold by Mr. Hayes, general agent, and fully indorse all he claims for it. Every family ought to possess one.
(Signed) E. B. ROTH, 106 Josephine street.

NEW ORLEANS, February 8, 1873.
MR. E. B. HAYES—Sir: The Washing Machine known as the Woman's Friend, or Steam Washer, purchased from you, has proven all you say of it. I cheerfully recommend it to all.
Yours truly, (Signed) MRS. S. BOI'LLETMET.



NEW ORLEANS, March 11, 1873.
MR. E. B. HAYES—Sir: I am delighted with your Washing Machine. It is indeed most happily called the Woman's Friend. I fully indorse every word of praise accorded by all who have given it a trial. Respectfully, (Signed) MRS. F. W. HUSTIN.

NEW ORLEANS, March 10, 1873.
MR. E. B. HAYES, GENERAL AGENT—Sir: I have used your Steam Washer, or Woman's Friend, and find that it performs satisfactorily all that you claim for it as a labor-saving machine—saving time, fuel, soap and, more particularly, the clothes. I cheerfully recommend it to all my friends and all housekeepers. (Signed) MRS. R. J. MONROE, widow of Ex-Mayor Monroe.

WANTED—MEN WHO WANT TO MAKE Money.—Here is an opportunity for making money rarely presented to a lifetime. We have got the best and surest-selling article ever invented, that every housekeeper buys on sight. It is a small Furnace, weighing only 60 pounds, that can be used with or without a stove. It will fit to the holes of any sized stove or range, and will do as much work with one quart of fuel—charcoal, chips, coke, corncobs, wood or soft coal—as can be done on any stove with one-half bushel. It will boil, broil, roast, toast, bake and stew. It is the best flat-iron heater in the world. Its economy in saving fuel is marvelous. You have no smoke, gas or heat in the room. It sells the year round. Retail price only $2. Thousands are sold every week. Any man with a small capital can clear from $20 to $40 per day by owning the right of any good county, and a whole State is of incalculable worth to a man of enterprise. We will send a sample Furnace to any part of the United States on receipt of $2. Address, for circular,

New Orleans Markets.

From the New Orleans Price Current.

The weather has been variable and showery. Nothing of any importance has transpired with regard to the crops, excepting moderate receipts. Crop estimates now range from 3,500,000 bales to 3,900,000 and 4,000,000 bales.

The river is 5 feet 1 inches below high water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the twenty-eighth ultimo:

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Louisiana and Mississippi | bales. | 8,261 |
| Arkansas | | 1,120 |
| Mobile | | 591 |
| Florida | | 251 |
| Total | | 10,512 |

On Saturday the market opened with a fair inquiry, but the movement being checked by factors being more stringent in their pretensions for the better qualities, which were the most in request, the sales during the morning were of moderate extent, at stronger prices for all desirable kinds, but easier for the poorer qualities. Operations were also restricted by telegraphic communication being interrupted and no market reports received from Liverpool, and although those received later in the day were not discouraging, yet the movement exhibited little animation. The sales embraced 6,400 bales, not including 400 omitted on Friday. Dusty cottons exhibited great irregularity. Strict ordinary, with but little dust, sold at 14@14¼c., strict good ordinary, high style, at 17¼c., and strict low middling at 18¼c., while less desirable styles would not have commanded over 17@17¼c. for strict good ordinary, and 18¼@18¾c. for strict low middling. On Monday, under an advance at New York of ¼c. in spots, and 7-16@½c. in futures, which closed at ¼@½c., as well as a slight improvement at Liverpool, and an irregular advance of ⅛@1⅛ ₱ cent. in foreign exchange, the movement was still more active, and about 12,300 bales changed hands at an improvement of ¼@½c. The supplies of good cottons were limited, and an unusually large proportion of the business was in low cottons, mostly at about Saturday's asking prices, but partly, after the demand was fully developed, at ⅛@¼c. higher rates. The above is the largest business reported this season, the heaviest previously being 12,200 bales on January 22. On Tuesday the sales were confined to 3,450 bales, at prices showing no quotable change, but much less buoyancy than on Monday, and in some cases a falling off of about ⅛c. The favorable influence of an advance of 1-16d. at Liverpool was neutralized by a decline of ⅛@⅜c. in futures at New York, and ⅛@¼ ₱ cent. in sterling exchange.

The above makes an aggregate for the past three days of 19,050 bales, against 19,600 for the corresponding time last week and 16,500 the week before.

The receipts proper at this port since the first of September, exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas, are 1,023,529 bales, against 857,682 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 580,454 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 127,858 to Great Britain, of 53,248 to France, and of 121,447 to other foreign ports.

SUGAR.—The market has continued dull, though there has been a better demand and more movement. The receipts on Saturday and Monday comprised 244 hhds., and the sales embraced 420 hhds., including some from previous supplies, at 6¼c. for inferior, 6⅞c. for common, 7⅛@7⅜c. for good common, 7½c. for fair, 8@8⅛c. for good fair, 8⅛@8⅜c. for fully fair, 8⅝c. for prime, and 9¼c. for strictly prime.

MOLASSES.—The receipts of Louisiana are small, and there is very little movement in consequence. Only 155 bbls. were received on Saturday and Monday, and small sales were made at 40@41c. for fair fermenting, 50@52c. for prime fermenting, 55c. for choice fermenting, and 55c. for cistern bottom.

CORN.—On Tuesday the supply was good and the demand fair, but at lower prices. The sales embraced 15,150 sacks at 56½@57c. for white and white mixed, 57c. for yellow mixed, and 58c. for choice yellow and choice white.

OATS.—On Saturday 800 sacks sold at 44@45c., and on Monday 800 sacks sold at 45c. ₱ bushel; while on Tuesday 850 sacks sold at 45c. ₱ bushel.

BRAN.—On Saturday 200 sacks ship's stuff sold at 90c., and on Monday 500 sacks choice bran at 95c. ₱ 100 lbs. On Tuesday 330 sacks sold at 90@95c. ₱ 100 lbs.

PORK.—On Tuesday there was an upward tendency in prices. 100 bbls. even-weight mess sold, on the spot, at $17.12½, 200 and 100 full-weight at $17.50 ₱ bbl.; and for future delivery, 500 bbls. sold, seller's option, May, at $18 ₱ bbl. It is retailing at $18 ₱ bbl.

BACON.—On Tuesday the market ruled with an upward tendency. 170 casks sold, on the spot and to arrive, at 7¼c. for shoulders, 9½c. for clear rib sides, and 10¼@10⅜c. ₱ lb. for clear sides. For future delivery, 50 and 50 casks clear sides sold, seller's option, April, at 10¼c., 100 and 100, May, at 10½c. ₱ lb.

MONETARY.

Gold opened on Tuesday at 116¼@116¾ (against 117 at New York,) and after a fair business, closed at the opening rates (against 116¾ at New York at 3.25 P. M., after which it was quoted at 117¼.)

The sales of silver have been confined to retail transactions. American half dollars are quoted at 110@111, and Mexican dollars at 2¼ ₱ cent. premium in gold for new, and 5 ₱ cent. for old.

THE PRAISE OF LIGHT.

Who praiseth theo in fittest mood, O Light?
Perhaps 'tis one who, while the city sleeps,
Long time a sick man's dreary vigil keeps,
And wistfully counts the signs of coming night,
The dying sound of wheels, the midnight hush,
The according bells of congregated towers,
That chime the round of dusk slow-footed hours,
Till daylight dawns at last; then with a rush,
Of glad expectancies he weeps and prays,
And half he prays to Light and half to God.
"If now, indeed, I tread the upward road
From unfamiliar death to life's fair ways,
O lovely Light! let me no longer shame,
By heart unclean or crooked, thy sweet name!"
Cornhill Magazine.

ABSENCE OF MIND.—The day he was to he married to Mrs. Terrance he had his niece in the honse with him; the hour was coming on; his niece sent him to his room to dress. I suppose going to bed was in his mind the sequence of undressing. However, the hour of marriage came, and the cab to carry him; no sign of the dressed bridegroom. His niece went to see how it was, and found him in bed sound asleep, with a Hebrew book in his haud. I was at the marriage, being a pupil of his; he was deep in a Hebrew lesson with me in a bay-window; the bride was brought in without interrupting the lesson; some one came and took him by the arm to lead him off to other doings; his steps moved away, but his face remained turned to his scholar; his parting words were: "Well, mind we take that up another time." In his noted mental absence there was frequently an infantile simplicity that did not want its own charm. "Will yon have another cup of tea, Mr. Duncan?" said a lady to him with exemplary patience, after he had drained his cup fourteen times. "No, I thank yon, madam," he replied; "I never take more than two cups of tea." This absence often showed itself by the presence of others, as if he had been alone. At dinner, in a company of ministers, following his constant habit of walking up and down when interested in a subject, he unconsciously rose and walked round the table, reasoning out his argument in his peripatetic course, till an elderly clergyman checked him a little sharply with the remark: "Sir, this cannot be allowed; yon are reasoning in a circle."—The late Dr. Duncan.

WHAT BREAKS DOWN YOUNG MEN.—It is a commonly-received notion that hard study is the unhealthy element of college life. But from tables of the mortality of Harvard University, collected by Prof. Pierce from the last triennial catalogue, it is clearly demonstrated that the excess of deaths for the first ten years after graduation is found in that portion of the class of inferior scholarship. Every one who has seen the curriculum knows that where Easchylus and political economy injures one, late hours and rum punches use up a dozen, and the two little fingers are heavier than the loins of Euclid. Dissipation is a sure destroyer, and every young man who follows it is, as the early flower, exposed to an untimely frost. Those who have been inveigled into the path of vice are named legion. A few hours' sleep each night, high living and plenty of "smashes" make war upon every function of the body. The brains, the heart, the lungs, the liver, the spine, the limbs, the bones, the flesh, every part and faculty are overtasked and weakened by the terrific energy of passion loosened from restraint, until, like a dilapidated mansion, the "earthly house of this tabernacle" falls into ruinous decay. Fast young men, right about.—Scientific American,

AHMED, the last bey of Constantina, in Algeria, wishing to adorn the walls of his gallery or loggia with frescoes, of which he had heard, but which he had no artist capable of executing, whether Arab, Moor or Jew, applied to a prisoner. The man was a French shoemaker, who had never touched a brush; he vainly tried to decline the honor, but the bey was inflexible: "You are a vile liar; all the Christians can paint. Liberty if you succeed, death if you disobey me." Extremely nervous was the hand which the painter malgre lui applied to the unlooked-for task. From the laborious travail of his brain issued at length an odd mass of arabesques with which the walls were somehow covered. His invention exhausted, he awaited in an agony of fear the inspection of his Turkish master. The painter was free, and the bey observed: "The dog wanted to deceive me; I knew that all the Christians could paint."—Lippincott's Magazine.

"HE IS A BRICK."—Many persons beside school-boys and college students use the phrase, "He is a brick," without the least idea that it is supposed to be of classic origin. It is said that King Agesilaus, being asked by an embassador from Epirus why they had no walls for Sparta, replied: "We have." Pointing to his marshaled army, he said: "There are the walls of Sparta; every man you see is a brick."

SCIENTIFIC.

FIREPROOF STARCH.—From the scion of royalty to the seamstress or the ballet-girl more cases of sudden and violent death have been due to the combustion of wearing apparel than to any other cause. At the International Exhibition there is exhibited a starch which ought to remove all such calamities. Improving on the old and very partially adopted tungstate of soda, Mr. Donald Nicoll has produced a preparation which renders the finest cambrics and muslins not only uninflammable, but well-nigh incombustible.—Lancet.

MR. WILLIAM B. GAGE, a master mechanic in the employ of the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company, is said to have invented a self-adjusting railway-switch, which, in design and purpose, gives promise of most important results. The operations of the switch are automatic, and its movements are based on the familiar switchman's law: "Keep the main track open." One important feature of this improvement is that, while the switch can be made to command eight side tracks, it will, when not in operation, adjust and lock itself to the main track only, and, as the action is automatic, it is impossible for any passing train to be switched off from the main line, however neglectful of his duty the switchman may be.

SINCE the researches of Schiaparelli were published, in 1867, showing the identity of the orbit of Tempel's comet with that of the so-called Leonides, or meteors of November 12, no astronomer has doubted the close relationship of comets and shooting stars; especially as it was soon after shown by Oppolzer that the Perseids, or meteors of August 6 to 11, are also accompanied by a fine comet. Some have thought the comet to be merely a dense aggregation of separate meteoric bodies; others that it is simply a larger meteor, attended and followed by smaller ones—pieces of the same great lump of nebulous matter, which, falling toward the sun through interstellar space, was somewhat broken up; others, following a suggestion first made by our own Kirkwood in 1861, are disposed to regard the meteors which follow in a comet's wake as the result of a partial disruption of the comet—bits of cometic matter detached from the principal mass by perhaps the same forces which produce the comet's tail. Probably it is not yet possible to decide between these views; but a most beautiful confirmation of the general theory has recently occurred. Biela's comet is a little fellow, with a period of about seven years (first discovered to be periodic in 1826, by the Austrian officer whose name it bears.) It was observed again, on its return, in 1832, when great alarm was excited among those unversed in astronomy, by the fact that it crossed the earth's orbit only about a month before the earth reached the point of intersection. In 1839 it was not seen; in 1846 it separated into two, under the action of some unknown cause; in 1852 the two parts were observed as two separate and independent comets; and since then nothing has been seen of it until within a few weeks, though it was anxiously searched for in 1859 and 1866. Astronomers had pretty much given it up as finally lost (although since September last on the earnest lookout for it,) when, all at once, on November 27, occurred a remarkable shower of minute meteors, radiating in the early evening from a point in the sky near the star gamma Andromedæ. It was well seen in this country, but better in Europe. At Rome more than thirteen thousand meteors were counted in three hours. On previous occasions less remarkable star showers have been observed with the same radiant and on the same day of the month; and it is only fair to note that some years ago Kirkwood, Weiss, Darrest and others had suggested that these meteors might be connected with Biela's comet in the same way as the Leonides with Tempel's. Of course after the great star shower all astronomers at once jumped to the conclusion that Biela's comet had either fallen upon the earth, or at least brushed very near us. Kliukerfues, of Gottingen, went further. Reasoning that, if the comet had really passed close to us, it should now be found receding from us in the portion of the sky just opposite to that from which it had approached, he telegraphed to Pogson, director of the observatory at Madras, in southern India: "Biela touched earth on the twenty-seventh of November. Look near Theta Centauri." And on the second of December Pogson found the long-lost little stranger, which he describes as circular, pretty bright, and without any traces of a tail. The companion comet is missing. Perhaps it was spoiled by the collision with the earth.

I SUPPOSE that many might have attained to wisdom had they not thought that they had already attained it.—Seneca.

AN INSTRUCTIVE BRICK.—The Popular Science Monthly has the following: "By a microscopic examination of a brick taken from the pyramid of Dashour, a German philosopher has discovered many interesting particulars connected with the life and habits of the ancient Egyptians. The brick itself is made of mud of the Nile, chopped straw and sand, thus confirming the account of the Bible and Herodotus concerning the Egyptian method of brick manufacture. Besides these materials the microscope has brought to light the remains of the river shells, fish and insects; the seeds of wild and cultivated flowers, corn and barley, the field pea and the common flax, cultivated probably both for food and textile purposes, and the radish, and many others known to science. Manufactured products were also found, such as fragments of tiles and pottery, and small pieces of string made of flax and sheep's wool."

DISTURBANCE.—The Rev. T. L. Cuyler says: I confess to a great liking for the godly old negro "Uncle Johnson," who used to say: "Massa, you know de flesh be weak; and when dey begins in de meetin' to talk about Jesus, I begins to fill up, and putty soon I has to holler, and den dey say: 'Carry dat ole man out; he 'sturbs de meetin'.'" Would to God that all our church prayer meetings had a few more such blessed disturbances!

THE VOX HUMANA,

PATENTED SEPTEMBER 13, 1870, AND JANUARY 23, 1872,

producing a beautiful and sympathetic quality of tone, capable of the most exquisite modulation, and when used with the "Tremolo," which accompanies it, resembles more than any other organ stop the peculiar trill of the human voice.

THE VOX CELESTE,

possessing a peculiar and thrilling quality of tone, most pipe-like in its nature, and which can be used in many passages with charming effect.

The above Stops are in every case separate, and additional sets of reeds, are entirely distinct from the "Tremolo," which always accompanies them, and which is never perfect without them, and can all be brought at will into the full organ, adding greatly to its power and richness of tone.

They take pleasure in announcing to the musical public and the trade the valuable addition to their Organs of a most beautiful Solo Stop,

THE ÆOLINE.

It is an additional set of reeds, exquisitely voiced and ingeniously arranged in a separate wind-chest (patented September 13, 1870.) Its quality of tone is the most delicate and soft imaginable. It is capable of the greatest variety of effects in combination with their other stops, the improved VOX HUMANA in particular. It has elicited the warmest encomiums from all organists and musicians who have examined it. It is perfectly simple in its construction, and they predict for it the highest degree of success. Its charming effects, especially when used in connection with their improved styles of cases, can but be appreciated by every musician.

IMPROVED CASES, ETC.

By the construction of these Cases the quality of tone in their Instruments has been greatly improved, every facility for the comfort and convenience of the performer has been provided for, and the effect of their beautiful and graceful design is such as to entirely obviate the disagreeable boxy appearance which has been for so long a time an unpleasant characteristic of the Reed Organ.

In addition to the above improvements, attention is called to

The Factories of GEORGE WOODS & Co. are among the largest, and probably without exception the best-arranged in the country. Their machinery is of the latest and most improved pattern, and all the labor is performed under the eyes of the employers, who are mechanics with reputations second to none for knowledge of the business, ingenuity, faithfulness and ability. With every advantage that extensive capital can command, they are determined that the Organs of their manufacture

THURSDAY, APRIL 3, 1873.

DON'T DRINK, MY BOY, TO-NIGHT.

I left my mother at the door,
My sister by her side,
Their clasped hands and loving looks
Forbade their doubts to hide.
I left and met with comrades gay,
When the moon brought out her light,
And my loving mother whispered to me:
"Don't drink, my boy, to-night."

Long years have rolled away since then,
My jetty curls are gray;
But oh! those words are with me yet,
And will not pass away.
I see my mother's loving face,
With goodness radiant, bright,
And hear her words ring in my ears:
"Don't drink, my boy, to-night."

My mother is now resting sweet
In the graveyard on the hill;
But her kind words come back to me,
And haunt my memory still.
I've often passed the cup;
Oh! then my heart was light,
Because I heard the warning words:
"Don't drink, my boy, to-night."

I've now passed down the road of life,
And soon my race is run;
A mother's warning listened to,
An immortal crown is won.
O mothers, with your blessed smile,
Look on your boys so bright,
And say, as you alone can say:
"My boy, don't drink to-night."

These words will prove a warning when,
In the stormy paths of life,
The boy is in the tempter's wiles,
And warring in the strife.
These words will stop the morning cup,
And the revelry at night,
By whispering back a mother's voice:
"Don't drink, my boy, to night."

A CATHOLIC MINORITY IN A NON-CATHOLIC COUNTRY.

In discussing recently the question whether Catholics can be loyal citizens we quoted the declaration of Archbishop Manning that his co-religionists must of necessity be an isolated body in a free State. According to the archbishop a free State, therefore, in which there are Catholics remains free only because they are in a minority. A numerical preponderance of them being reached, they are bound to overturn a free constitution and to establish the supremacy of their church. It is interesting, therefore, to know by what principles Roman Catholic minorities in non-Catholic countries should regulate their conduct. Are they to abate their claims, or merely practice reserve? If they profess liberal principles, can their professions be trusted? Is or is not their profession of political liberalism sincere?

These questions must be answered on their authority, not on ours. Protestants may make charges of hostility to free institutions against Catholics, but without proof the charges fall to the ground. We shall therefore appeal here to their own testimony, and permit them to speak for themselves. In the Essays on Religion and Literature, edited by Archbishop Manning (London, Longman's, 1865,) this problem is handled with considerable freedom. The essayist takes two positions: (1) That a Catholic minority in a non-Catholic country can abate nothing of the church's demand of supremacy, but (2) must practice understatement and ambiguity of language.

On the first of these points the essayist discourses thus:

"We Catholics are, by the grace of God, children, whether by grace or adoption, of the church, which is the sole and exclusive depository on earth of eternal and immutable truth; nor alone the passive receptacle of that truth, but its ordained guardian and dispenser. We neither share our treasure nor divide our claims with any other religious body whatever. The most imposing of the pretensions of other bodies does not even approach the limits, far less invade the province and threaten the majesty of our prerogative. The most orthodox of their opinions does not, in one, and that a most important sense, come a whit nearer to our truth than the wildest and most fanatical of their doctrinal innovations. * * * Far from being accorded an external position in this country (England) which is any fit representation or sufficient public exponent of our true place in the world, we are doomed to the humiliation of seeing the upstart sects of yesterday preferred to us in the race of privilege or the scale of power. Far from being permitted to assert our ascendency as a prerogative, we are treated to scant measures of the barest right with a smile of patronage or a bow of condescension."

The only position in the State, then, which will satisfy Catholics is one of ascendency or supremacy over heretics. Equality as to rights is not enough. How, then, must Catholics act while struggling for the supremacy which they intend never to forego? The answer of the essayist here is very plain—the policy to be pursued by Catholics is one of understatement and reserve. Let us hear him:

"We are all in fact thrown, against our inclination, upon a discipline of economy or management. We must adopt our sentiments, so far as it may safely and rightly be done, to the popular standard of acceptance, adjust our claims to the measure of probable recognition, and shape our language by the rule of the public intelligence."

Catholics, when they assent to liberal ideas, are to be considered by us as only practicing "the discipline of economy or management." Their words may or not mean what they seem to mean. At all events they cannot abate one jot of their essential principles.

The essayist, we must do him the justice to say, is a little ashamed of this policy of suppression, for he adds: "We shall all, I am sure, agree in the conclusion that those understatements of Catholic truth which our position entails upon us should be strictly limited to cases of necessity or the most obvious expediency. They come, indeed, under the head of those studied ambiguities of phrase which our theology rather permits than encourages. * * * He must regard them as a kind of condescension—the only sort of condescension which is consistent with Christian humility."

The essayist advises Catholics to be cautious in the use of understatement, lest they be caught some time in an uncomfortable logical dilemma. The inconsistency between the real Catholic claims and Catholic statements must be managed in the following way:

"We ought to have a reason to give them (our enemies) for the apparent inconsistency, such as even they may be able to understand, however incapable of appreciating it. * * * Thus, when we are found advocating principles highly favorable to toleration in one country, and apparently at variance with it in another, to this charge of inconsistency we have a complete and satisfactory answer at hand. But as it is one which our opponents are incapable of appreciating, we may, therefore, well waive the abstract question and refer them to those principles of religious equality, which, in this country, are so ostentatiously professed and often so partially applied."

And this suppression of facts, this insincerity of statement, this studied ambiguity is the teaching of the church which professes to speak to mankind with the authority of God. We have, then, the word of Roman Catholics for believing that when they profess a cheerful acceptance of free institutions, the profession is but a deceit—that they wait only till they can climb up to power and overthrow that liberty which deprives them of their supremacy. We doubt if the Roman Catholic laity can be driven by the hierarchy to act up to these abominable principles. We too must wait, but we will wait as men wait and watch for the uprising of a treacherous foe. Let it be understood that we have, of ourselves, brought no charges against Catholics. Out of the mouths of their own teachers we judge them.—Methodist.

PRACTICAL USES OF SCIENCE.

"Practical men" frequently ask the question: "What is the use of scientific study?" They have accustomed themselves to regard those far-reaching investigations among the heavenly bodies, which astronomers are every year making more extensive and minute, those exacting analytical processes of the chemists, those delvings among the igneous and the aqueous rocks, and the fossils which the geologists are carrying on, as having no real bearing upon material interests. The Scientific American collates a few facts showing what has actually been realized from some of the apparently most recondite researches, which will go far to cause these "practical men" to reconsider their judgment:

"Newton's analysis of light by passing a beam through a prism was a discovery of no apparent value at the time it was made. The spectrum was very beautiful to look upon, but few persons could understand or appreciate it. No one could have anticipated that this was the germ of a method which would gradually lead to the discovery of new metals on our earth; to a study of the atmosphere of the sun and planets; that minute quantities of substances would be detected by it in mineral waters and rocks; that steel would be manufactured by watching the light produced by burning gases; that an instrument called the spectroscope would become one of our most important adjuncts in the study of astronomy, in technical researches, in the detection of new bodies. And thus the ray of light passed through a hole in a shutter becomes, in the contemplation, of future men of science, the starting-point in a great array of discoveries."

Another discovery, of apparently not the slightest practical importance, was that of polarized light. This has been developed, till now "the value of glass for optical instruments, the extent to which glass has been annealed, the testing of stone jewels, and the detection of paste diamonds, are accomplished by the use of a polarizing apparatus. But the most important application of the power of rotation possessed by different substances is seen in the apparatus employed to determine the quantity of sugar contained in any solution. The crude sugar of commerce is bought and sold on a polarized test.

"Hans Christian Oersted observed the deflection of the needle produced by an electro-magnet, and the needle telegraph was the natural growth of the observation, and afterward, by further research, we arrive at the telegraph in its present form. A little deposit of copper on one of the poles of a battery, when seen by De la Rive and Jacobi, soon develops into electroplating and galvanoplastic operations. Gold, silver, copper, nickel and other metals, thrown down from solutions by battery currents, offer an occupation to a large number of persons, and enable publishers of illustrated papers to furnish their readers with prints for electrotype plates in a manner far superior to what was formerly accomplished in this line.

"Prof. Tyndall's observations on haze and dust have for their practical result improvements in ventilation, and the discovery of the precautions to be observed to insure good health.

"Pasteur's researches on the germs of fermentation have revolutionized our former notions on this subject. The same theory carried further in its consequences points out the probable origin of epidemic diseases, and thus indicates the best remedies to be applied."

Faraday discovered a substance called benzole, which was seemingly worthless, except as a curiosity. But out of this substance has sprung a long line of important industries. From it we have the most magnificent colors; we prepare sweet perfumes; we concentrate the light of illuminating gas; we dissolve resins, and make varnish.

When glycerine was first discovered no use was found for it. Now it is in demand in immense quantities, for the most diversified uses—for making soap, in medicine, in perfumery and confectionery, and as an essential ingredient in the most powerful explosive compounds.

So gutta-percha was first brought to the United States as a curiosity. Without it we could not have ocean telegraphy. The list of practical adaptations of "useless" discoveries might be indefinitely extended.

MEN will never know us by our faith, for that is within us; they know us by our works, which are visible to them.

AN OLD THEORY DEMOLISHED.—It has always been supposed that illiteracy and crime went together, but statistics gathered from the official report upon the condition of Blackwell's Island Penitentiary show a different result. The great majority of those confined in that institution during the past year were not illiterate persons. The total number of committals during the year was two thousand one hundred. Out of this aggregate no less than one thousand five hundred and twenty-three could read and write well; one hundred and nineteen were able to read and write imperfectly, and only four hundred and sixty-seven were entirely uneducated—that is to say, fifteen out of twenty criminals who were sent to the penitentiary from New York for offenses against property or person had received an educational training sufficient to lift them, if they had been inclined to be so lifted, into the ranks of the honest and intelligent workers.

SCHOOL BOOKS—SCHOOL BOOKS.

"Southern Books for Southern Schools."

School-Books which are Unsectional, Unpartisan, and Unpolitical.

PREPARED BY THE MOST EMINENT SOUTHERN SCHOLARS, AND

ENTIRELY ACCEPTABLE TO SOUTHERN TEACHERS AND PARENTS.

The University Publishing Co.,

An Association composed of many of the most eminent citizens of the several Southern States, feeling the necessity for a series of School Books which should be entirely unsectional, unpartisan, and should not be offensive to the people—which should present only the unpolitical, and in their teaching are now issuing a complete series of School and College Text-books by the eminent Southern scholars and the spirit and feeling of the Southern people, and in their teaching the facts of history and science—are the

Cheapest, Best, and Most Beautiful School-Books

Now published. The "University Series" embraces

MAURY'S GEOGRAPHICAL SERIES,

By Commodor M. F. MAURY, of the Virginia Military Institute. A series of books which mark an era in the study of this science, and which, in the words of a well known and accomplished Southern teacher, "are characterized by a felicity of arrangement and simple freshness of style which must ever render them attractive to the young, and which will be used by all who wish to teach Geography as a science, as something to make pupils think, and not merely as an enumeration of dry facts."

Holmes' Readers and Spellers,

By GEORGE F. HOLMES, LL.D., Professor of History and General Literature in the University of Virginia. A series of Readers unequalled in cheapness, excellence, and typographical beauty. They are steadily progressive in character, bright and fresh in their selections of prose and verse, and illustrative of Southern scenes, incidents, and history.

Venable's Arithmetical Series,

By CHARLES S. VENABLE, LL.D., Professor of Mathematics in the University of Virginia. These books are received everywhere by intelligent teachers with the highest satisfaction, as being most admirably adapted for mental drill, as well as for business education. Their methods, rules, and reasonings are clear, distinct, logical, and comprehensive, and the series is carefully graded throughout.

Holmes' History of the United States,

By GEORGE F. HOLMES, LL.D., of the University of Virginia. It is enough to say of this admirable work, interesting, impartial, and truthful, as well as pure and graceful in style, that it is the only History of the United States which is acceptable to Southern teachers and parents. It comes down to the present date.

THE "UNIVERSITY SERIES" OF SCHOOL-BOOKS

COMPRISES, ALSO,

De Vere's French Grammar, Readers, etc.,

By M. SCHELE DEVERE, LL.D., Professor of Modern Languages in the University of Va.

Gildersleeve's Latin Series,

By B. L. GILDERSLEEVE, Ph.D., LL.D., of the University of Virginia.

Carter's Elements of General History,

By Rev. J. P. CARTER, A.M., of Baltimore, Maryland.

Holmes' English Grammars,

By GEORGE F. HOLMES, LL.D., of the University of Virginia.

LeConte's Scientific Series,

By the Professors LECONTE, late of the University of South Carolina.

Johnston's English Classics,

By R. M. JOHNSTON, A.M., late Professor of Rhetoric and Belles-Lettres in the University of Georgia.

BRADLEY'S PATENT CROQUET.

WE DESIRE TO CALL THE ATTENTION of our friends, and the public generally to our large and well-assorted stock of CROQUET from the celebrated manufactory of MILTON BRADLEY & CO. The increasing demand for out-door games at this season of the year, combining exercise with harmless amusement, induced us to adopt this branch of business in connection with others; and to enable our friends to have the best of the kind, containing all modern improvements, we have made arrangements with this well-known house to supply the demand from their manufactory.

THE PATENT CROQUET

has many valuable improvements, among the most important of which is the PATENT BRIDGE, and to which we desire to call especial attention. It belongs to each set of Croquet, and the accompanying cut shows plainly the relative condition of the ordinary bridge and

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

BROWNSVILLE, TEXAS, April 2.—The United States sloop-of-war Wyoming is cruising off the mouth of the Rio Grande. As this is the first war vessel which has visited these parts for some years, its presence, taken in connection with the expected visit of the secretary of war and General Sheridan here, is supposed to indicate a lively interest on the part of the government in frontier affairs, and is regarded by the people of this outlying border as favorable to their interests.

SAN FRANCISCO, April 5.—The latest information from the lava beds is that the opinion prevails that the difficulty can never end without fighting. A number of squaws and Shock Nasty Jim returned to camp with the commissioners. The former were loaded with presents and food, and then went back to Captain Jack's cave. It is reported that the Modocs intend to make the first attack, and the troops in consequence have doubled their pickets. Company commanders have been ordered to hold themselves ready to receive the enemy at any moment.

A dispatch from Eureka to-night says: On March 27 three hundred troops broke camp and marched to the upper end of Little Klamath lake. The Indians refused to come out and talk that day, but promised to come next Sunday.

On March 22 Hooker Jim and a party of Indians were seen at Alkali lake, where they corraled seventy-five horses. On the following Tuesday the same Indians were seen at Yainox reservation, where they talked all night.

The Modocs and Klamaths urged them to join Captain Jack. Hooker Jim said that five tribes of Indians were ready to join Captain Jack whenever he could get out of the lava beds. Hooker Jim told the reservation Indians that it would not be safe to remain friendly with the whites. During the night he sent two squaws to a white man named Jordan to buy powder, but the latter refused to sell any. The people on Sprague river are greatly excited and are leaving the country near the reservation of the Modocs. The Klamath Indians are also seriously alarmed. The people living near Gooso lake have petitioned to the governor of Oregon for protection.

MARION, ALA., April 5.—Governor A. B. Moore is dead, aged sixty-eight years. He was governor when Alabama seceded, and was universally beloved and honored.

PHILADELPHIA, April 5.—The Supreme Court decided against Miss Bronham, who claimed the right to vote.

MACON, GA., April 5.—B. A. Wise, a prominent merchant, is dead.

LITTLE ROCK, ARK., April 5.—A bill passed the House making the pay of all teachers, regardless of sex, the same.

NEW YORK, April 7.—The strike of the gas men continues, and every effort to fill their places with Italians from Ward's Island has proved futile. The city below Grand street was last night in total darkness, and the newspaper offices and places of business were forced to resort to candles. No disturbances are reported in the vicinity of the gas works, which are guarded by a large number of policemen, with reserves in readiness.

The men employed to fill the places of the strikers seem totally unfit for the work; they cannot speak English and do not know what is required of them. The receiving tanks are level with the ground, and unless other than Italians are substituted the strikers must win.

ATLANTA, GA., April 7.—Governor Smith to-day issued a proclamation calling a convention of the governors of the Southern and Western States to meet on the twentieth of May, in Atlanta, to consider the Atlantic and Great Western canal matter. He writes the mayors of the cities in Georgia to attend, and the incorporated towns to send delegates.

SAN FRANCISCO, April 8.—The troops are closing around Captain Jack, who persists in either remaining in the lava beds or having a reservation in that vicinity.

The peace commissioners think that Jack is frightened.

HARTFORD, CONN., April 8.—The returns from every town in the State give Haven (Republican candidate for governor) 39,200; Ingersoll (Democratic) 41,000; Smith (Temperance) 2,191; Ingersoll's majority, 3,609.

FRANKLIN, LA., April 8.—The office of the Attakapas Register, Kellogg's official journal in the parish of St. Mary, was entered last night by unknown persons, who threw the types into pi and broke the press.

The Kelloggites installed parish officers yesterday.

The courthouse was entered last night and the records abstracted.

FOREIGN.

LONDON, April 3.—The steamship Atlantic was insured in London companies for $150,000. There were 960 steerage passengers on board. The passengers and crew of the Atlantic, as she sailed from Liverpool, were classified as follows: English—198 men, 74 women, 28 male children and 21 female children; Scotch—7 men and 4 women; Irish—13 men, 18 women and 3 children; other nations, 150 adult males, 32 women, 10 male children and 18 female children. A large number of emigrants embarked at Queenstown, making the total number of souls upon the steamer when she sailed from that port 952.

VIENNA, April 3.—The emperor has given his sanction to the electoral reform bill. The announcement was made in the Reichsrath to-day, and was received with prolonged cheers.

MADRID, April 5.—Twenty-five Carlists were captured yesterday, near Barcelona, and taken to that city. The government troops had great difficulty in preventing a mob of citizens from lynching them.

Most of the churches in Catalonia have been closed or turned into barracks.

PARIS, April 5.—At a recent federal democratic demonstration in Barcelona the red flag, surrounded by a Phryglan cap, and bearing a death's head, was raised.

ST. PETERSBURG, April 6.—A dispatch from Baker, on the western coast of the Caspian sea, dated April 2, announces that Tchikischlar's column would take the field against Khiva on the fifth instant.

The expedition against Khiva is in three detachments. The first, starting from Orenburg, concentrates at Unbapoaa and proceeds over the table land of Ucljustulrich, and begins six hundred versts to the south of Orenburg, at the river Tchaidjau. There it will take six days' drinking-water, because a supply will be unprocurable until they reach the spring of Aktzchahkutuk.

The second or Ateck valley detachment will move through Astrachan, and must overcome the Turkomans before reaching Khiva.

The third detachment, starting from Turkestan, will probably avoid the desert in the neighborhood of the sea of Aral, and will march along the Syr Diria river to Petrovsk; thence it will take the bank of the Djani Daria river to the frontier of Khiva. The Khiva force is insignificant, and its armament poor, their rifles being particularly defective.

BRUSSELS, April 6.—A Madrid correspondent of the Independance Belge says the reports published in French and English papers of popular disturbances and military insubordination in Spain are greatly exaggerated.

HALIFAX, April 7.—The divers at work on the wreck of the Atlantic report the vessel as most awkwardly placed. The passengers and the cargo are so mixed that the bodies cannot be got at. Two girls were found lying in their beds in the after-steerage.

Holes will be blown into the ship to facilitate the recovery of the bodies and cargo. Eleven bodies were obtained to-day, of which five were grappled. Up to to-night two hundred and twenty-six have been recovered. None of those recently found were cabin passengers.

BAYONNE, April 8.—It is reported that Menotti Garibaldi has arrived at Barcelona and offered the republicans his services against the Carlists.

The Carlists have received batteries of artillery and resumed active operations in Navarre. They destroyed with gunpowder an arch of the railway bridge at Puebla, interrupting communication between Miranda and Victoria.

LONDON, April 8.—The exhibitors at Vienna will be divided into groups according to the character of their contributions. Each group will have a president and two vice presidents. A fine display is promised. England sends paintings valued at £2,000,000. France will contribute five hundred paintings, and Italy three hundred statues. Carpenters are at work on the American building. Many buildings devoted to other nations are already completed. Elaborate showcases have arrived from all parts of Europe.

Letter from Tuskegee, Alabama.

MR. EDITOR: We have had a good revival going on for four weeks. A large number have professed conversion, and there are still penitents at the altar. So far as I can ascertain there have been about seventy conversions. Up to date thirty-nine have joined the church by application, or, as I prefer to say, by profession of faith in Christ, and twenty have joined by certificate.

The pupils in the Alabama Conference Female College have shared largely the benefits of the meeting. Every boarder in the institution that was not converted before has been converted during the meeting, and a large number of the resident pupils.

Bro. Moore, the president of this college, is eminently qualified for the responsible position; for, notwithstanding severe affliction in his family, he has contributed largely to this result, not in and at the church only, but in the recitation-room also. He conducts the whole school on strictly religious principles. He is not only a good religious man himself, but he has a faculty or corps of assistants that shine as lights in the land. A brother said to me at Conference that we ought to take our schools into the church. Well, here is one almost literally in the church. Bro. Moore and corps can and do kneel with mourners at the altar, in college, or anywhere they need help. They labor to form character—the highest order of intellectual, social and religious character; and they are, in the full sense of the term, doing well.

Don Carlos.

BY GEORGE M. TOWLE.

In view of present events and possible eventualities, it may be interesting to know who and what this Don Carlos is, whence he derives the claim he so energetically presses to the Spanish throne, and what manner of man he is who can inspire devotion so steadfast, and can keep Spain in a state of chronic unrest and desultory civil war. Don Carlos is the great-grandson of Carlos the Fourth, who reigned from 1788 to 1808, and was descended from Philip the Fifth, the first French-Bourbon King of Spain. Carlos left two sons, Ferdinand and Carlos. Ferdinand, seventh of his name, ascended the throne in 1808, to be ousted from it within a year, when Joseph Bonaparte succeeded. Joseph was deposed in 1814, after the abdication at Fontainebleau; and Ferdinand returned under the protection of the allies. This weak-bodied and feeble-minded King was the Blue Beard or rather the Henry the Eighth of Spanish royalty. Within a period of twenty-eight years he led five successive queens to the altar—a Portuguese princess, two Neapolitan princesses, and two Saxon princesses. He continued childless until he wedded the handsome Christina, sister of Ferdinand the Second, or "Bomba," King of Naples, by whom, in 1830, he had one daughter, Isabella. Christina was as remarkable for her spirit, courage and ambition as for her swarthy Italian beauty. She ruled the imbecile King with a rod of iron. As the Salic law excluding females from the throne prevailed in Spain, Ferdinand's brother, Don Carlos, was the legitimate heir; but Christina was determined that little Isabella, her daughter, should succeed, whereby she herself would secure a long lease of power as regent. She accordingly cajoled, threatened and teazed poor Ferdinand into causing the abrogation of the Salic law. This was the more easily accomplished as Ferdinand had long had a bitter quarrel with Don Carlos. The Salic law was abolished, Isabella proclaimed as the heir of the monarchy, and upon the demise of the King, in 1833, Christina was duly installed in the Palacio Reale as regent until the infant queen came of age. She resigned the regency in 1840; but was long afterward the real possessor of the regal power, and continued to advise Isabella till her fall from the throne in 1868. Don Carlos, thus unceremoniously cheated of his rights, was by no means content to submit tamely to the loss of a crown. For eight years he engaged in a ferocious civil war with the regent; but the active sympathies of France and England were against him, and he at last gave over in despair. He retired to France, in 1839, and took up his residence at Paris, where he lived until his death. In 1845 he resigned his pretensions to the Spanish crown in favor of his son, Don Carlos, the energetic young Count of Montemolin, by whose sudden death, in 1861, the claim to the throne passed into the hands of his brother, Don Juan. But Don Juan did not possess the enterprising spirit of his father and elder brother; his tastes were indolent and luxurious. Happily for the Carlists, he had a son who united military predilections with an attractive person and adventurous zeal. Don Juan, the day after the involuntary abdication of Isabella, in 1868, made over his rights as the Carlist representative to his son; and a third Don Carlos appeared upon the scene as the contestant for the prize. Thus the present Don Carlos is a grandson of the first pretender of that name, and symbolizes the traditional cause of the old Salic monarchy. When endowed with the leadership he was only eighteen years old; but he at once entered vigorously into the schemes of his partisans, and for the past five years has almost constantly hovered about the frontier, occasionally passing it, to return, pursued by the troops of the Savoyard sovereign.

Don Carlos is a thorough Bourbon, by blood, temperament and connection. Descended on the paternal side from Henry the Fourth of France, he traces his lineage to the same great monarch through his mother, who, being the Archduchess of Este, was a daughter of the Duke de Berri and a granddaughter of Charles the Tenth of France. Don Carlos also married his cousin, the daughter of the Duke of Parma and granddaughter of the Duchess de Berri. It would seem as if the Bourbon blood were concentrated in this young prince, who is the only descendant of that race who is actively struggling for a crown in Europe; and he is struggling for the last crown worn by a Bourbon on that continent. He was reared with a definite view of his one day undertaking the task in which he is now engaged. He passed the greater part of his childhood and early youth in Styria, under Jesuit tutelage; and the two principles most carefully instilled into him were that the Bourbons possess a divine, consecrated right to the Spanish throne and that the church should hold the supremacy over the State. Isabella represented, although she did not adhere to, a sort of mongrel constitutionalism. Don Carlos represents absolutism pure and simple—the unfettered authority of Rome over the faithful and the utter subordination of peoples to thrones. In his person, as in his character, he seems well fitted for his mission. His features are rather Italian than Spanish, being square and thick, rather than long and narrow. His very dark complexion, his jet black, stubby hair and whiskers, his stern, almost melancholy black eyes, his heavy, dark brows, his short, thick nose, his low but well-shaped forehead, and his firmly-pressed lips give him the air of one in whom narrowness of mental vision is blended with intense earnestness, sincerity of conviction, courage and grim determination. He wins the devoted enthusiasm of his followers rather by his bravery, his fortitude in hardship, his perseverance in action, than by any easy sociability of manner or flow of good nature. Don Carlos, should he reach the throne, would be a tyrant on conviction and by creed. He would crush the foes to his dynasty with the same cruel vigor that he seeks now to establish it. He would involve Spain in an utterly futile crusade on behalf of the temporal power of the Pope. The return of the Bourbon would be the signal for the return of priest-rule, and priest-rule has done more for three centuries to degrade Spain than all other elements put together. The struggle between Don Carlos and the republic is a struggle between the forces of an intrusive past and those of an impatient future. The bonds which bind the Church to the State, or vice versa, are even now loosened; the republic would sever them altogether; Don Carlos would draw them so tight that the State, at least, would be all but strangled. And Don Carlos is at this time all the more formidable since he alone represents an active principle hostile to the republic. Isabella has few adherents; her son, Alphonso, Prince of the Asturias, is still a child, and a revolution to enthrone a child would be hopeless folly. Montpensier is the most unpopular man in Spain, and betrays his incurable weakness by his silence; and no German (if, indeed, any) prince can be found to accept the crown contemptuously cast aside by Amadeus. Serrano, discouraged, has placed his sword at the service of the republic; Sagasta and Zorilla refuse to oppose it; the army manifests no alarming measure of discontent; but the priesthood is so hot in the Carlist cause that cassocked colonels are found leading Carlist bands, mitered recruiters summon the peasants to arms almost from the altar-steps in Catalonia, and secret conspiracy is nourished in the crypts and cloisters of the capital itself.—Independent.

Statistics of Christianity in India.

One good result of the recent General Conference of missionaries, held at Allahabad, is the collection of accurate statistics of the number of native Christians in India. Mr. Sherring, a missionary, appointed to prepare a paper on the progress and prospects of Protestant Indian missions, reported a native Christian community of a quarter of a million—an increase in ten years of sixty-one per cent. The following summary, which we take from the Friend of India, contains most important intelligence:

"Ten years ago there were 138,731 native Christians in the whole of India. This number has since then increased to 224,161—that is, to the extent of 85,430 persons, which is at the rate of 61 per cent. During the preceding eleven years, or from 1850 to 1861, the rate of increase was about 53 per cent. Considering the several provinces of India, the increase has been as follows: at the end of the year 1861 there were in Bengal, including Behar, 20,518 Christians. At the close of 1871 there were 46,968, while the communicants advanced from 4,620 to 13,502. In the north-western provinces the Christian community has nearly doubled. In Oudh the increase has been at the rate of 175 per cent.; in the Punjab, of 64 per cent.; in Central India, of nearly 400 per cent.; and in Bombay, of 64 per cent. The greatest aggregate increase in all India has been in the Madras presidency, where there are 100,955 Christians, in contrast with 110,078 ten years ago. In Burmah the Christian community has continued almost stationary, the numbers being 59,366 in 1861, and 62,729 in 1871. In Ceylon the increase has been about 15,000. Altogether the increase in the three countries has been upward of 100,000.

"In several missions the increase has been very remarkable, and is worthy of special attention. For instance, at the commencement of the last decade, the American Baptist missions in the Telugu country had only 21 converts. They have now 6,418. In Chota Nagpore the increase has been from 2,531 to more than 20,000, a little more than two-thirds of whom are attached to Gessner's mission, the remainder being associated with the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel. The Christians of the American Episcopal Methodists have advanced from 305 to 1,835, or at the rate of 500 per cent. The converts of the American Reformed Church have increased from 796 to 2,478, or more than 200 per cent., and of the American Lutherans, from 367 to 2,470, or upward of 500 per cent. In the two provinces of Tinnevelly and South Travancore the Christian community has increased from 72,652 to 95,963 persons. Generally speaking, a greater proportional increase has taken place in smaller mission stations—that is, those which, in 1861, contained only a few Christians—than in the larger and older stations. It is a healthy sign of progress that in the ten years the number of central mission stations in India has increased from 319 to 423; of native ordained ministers from 97 to 224, and of communicants from 21,976 to 52,813. Of the entire number of converts added to the Protestant Church in India during the decade, three-fourths, at the very least—that is, considerably more than sixty thousand persons—are from low-caste and aboriginal tribes, which everywhere, for the most part, show themselves much more susceptible to Christian influence, and much more free from prejudice, than pure Hindoos."

It will be seen from the above that the record of our own church in India is highly honorable to the laborers we have sent there. In the work of general education also the fruits of Christian missions are most cheering. In the year 1861 there were, in all the missions in India, 75,975 pupils under instruction; in 1871, 122,372, an increase of 46,397. Of these pupils, 1,621 have passed the entrance examination in the Indian universities, 154 have taken the degree of bachelor of arts, 18 the master's degree, and 6 the degree of bachelor of laws. In this work of higher education the Free Church of Scotland has taken the lead of all the other churches.

As to the mission presses in India, Burmah and Ceylon, here are some facts:

They have published, in the course of the last ten years, no fewer than 3,410 separate works, mostly of a Christian and educational character, in 31 languages and dialects. The number of copies of books and tracts printed amounts to 12,317,172, as follows:

|---|---|
| Number of copies of the entire Bible in the vernacular languages | 28,000 |
| Number of copies of the New Testament, Old Testament and other portions of the Bible | 1,161,003 |

Massacre of the Janissaries.

On a quiet summer afternoon a select body of men, chosen deputies of the terrible Janissary Guard, appear before Sultan Mahmoud and peremptorily demand the concession of terms, the least extravagant of which is the instant declaration of war against "all the unbelievers of Western Europe." Very quietly and courteously does he receive them, that smooth, impenetrable man, who has already in his secret hearing doomed them to die. Their demands, he says, are undoubtedly just, but they require consideration; let his brave Janissaries assemble on the following day in the El Meidanu, and refresh themselves at his expense, while he prepares his answer. Next morning, at sunrise, the famous guardsmen, in all their power and splendor, march gallantly into the square whence they are never to return. In the fatal confidence of overweening strength, they have left their muskets and bayonets in their barracks, and carry with them merely the long pistols and yataghans which never leave them, and for awhile make merry in the anticipation of certain triumph, murmuring only at times that the promised answer of the Sultan tarries so long. Alas for them! the Sultan's answer is already prepared, and about to be given, in language that none can mistake, from the mouths of innumerable cannon and the muzzles of forty thousand muskets. All through the dim hours of early morning the slayers have been preparing, with deadly speed and silence, for the work which they have to do. Every street is barricaded, every outlet commanded by powerful batteries; and behind the guns lie regiment upon regiment of armed infantry, and squadron upon squadron of ready sabers, and all the rabble of Constantinople, burning to revenge the long-continued insolence of the life-guards. The wild beasts are trapped at last; but, in the pride of their unquestioned might, the doomed host still remain unconscious of danger, till a red glare and a thick cloud of smoke, blotting the clear morning sky, startle them from their fancied safety. Their barracks are on fire!

At that fatal signal the work of death begins in earnest. To right and left, before and behind, the silent streets are one roar of cannon and one crackle of musketry, converging upon the living target that fills the square. At every glare and crash that breaks through the whirling smoke a fresh chasm yawns in the serried column; death comes blindly, no one knows whence or how. Already long swathes of dead lie like corn leveled by the hail, and their blood is running red over the smooth, white pavement; but all is not over yet. Blinded by smoke and fire, falling at every step, with sword and pistol against grapeshot and musketry, the doomed men rush fiercely on. Once reach the guns and there shall be vengeance for all! And here at last (praise be to Allah!) appear, through the billowy smoke, red caps and blue uniforms; here is something that can feel—no longer senseless cannon shot, but living flesh, which can be wounded and killed. Above all the awful din rises their yell of triumph, as they charge into the batteries, hewing right and left at everything which, in that blinding whirl of smoke, seems to wear the semblance of man. Down go the gunners like mown grass before the slash of the fatal yataghans; and the infantry who rush to support them fall, man upon man, beneath the swords of their old comrades until the narrow streets are all one great shamble, from which the blood splashes up like rain upon the walls on either side. One struggle, and the entrapped tigers are free once more; but it is not to be. The man who devises this day's work is not one to leave his task half finished, and he has left no chance unprepared for. In the very crisis of the fray, just as the iron circle begins to yield, the dull roar of an advancing multitude is heard from behind; and through the smoke appear the green standard of the Prophet and the white horse of Sultan Mahmoud, and Ibrahim Pasha, with forty thousand fresh troops, armed to the teeth, and burning for vengeance upon the hated Praetorians. They all give way. The Janissaries, fighting to the last, are overwhelmed by numbers, shot, stabbed, hewn down or flung into the sea, till the clear, smooth water of the Golden Horn is dyed purple from Seraglio Point to Galata Landing. For three days the few faluting survivors of the once formidable brigade are hunted down like wolves through every lane of Constantinople; and the long debt of vengeance is paid with every accumulated horror which Eastern ferocity could devise.—Cassell's Magazine.

New Orleans District Conference.

The District Conference of the New Orleans district, Methodist Episcopal Church South, was held at Baton Rouge, beginning on the fourth of April and adjourning on the seventh. The ministerial brethren were, with one or two exceptions, present; the lay delegates absent, excepting those of Baton Rouge. Business was dispatched, but not without care and full discussion. The condition of the church, its spiritual needs, causes of weakness, remedies and means proper to insure a more healthful state were searchingly discussed. Education and missions received careful attention. The former was ably presented by President Andrews, of Centenary College, and lucidly exhibited by Prof. Magrader, of Baton Rouge. The latter, after an interchange of views, was expressed in the following resolutions:

Resolved, That we have noticed with great admiration, interest and thankfulness to God the establishment of a mission in the City of Mexico by Bishop J. C. Keener.

Resolved, That we will make extraordinary efforts to increase the contributions of our charges for missionary purposes, this year, above any former period.

Church literature, and its importance in training the mind into a love of holy things, was considered and the following resolutions passed:

Resolved, That we hereby express our hearty approbation of the editorial and business management of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, and recommend to the publishing committee, soon to meet, to perpetuate, if possible, the same management.

Resolved, That we yet more diligently exercise ourselves to promote the circulation of the ADVOCATE by making it an invariable question of families in our pastoral visits, "Do you take the ADVOCATE?" and by endeavoring to place the paper gratuitously in families who may not be able to pay the subscription price.

Educational interests and their claims were thus expressed:

Resolved, That we are exceedingly gratified and our hearts encouraged by accounts of the growing prosperity of Centenary College.

Resolved, That we can and hereby do most heartily commend the college to all who have sons to educate.

Resolved, That we shall feel it to be our duty yet more faithfully hereafter to urge the subject of a finished education upon those who may be within the range of our speech and influence.

Monday morning, the closing day of conference, was spent with dear Christian friends in sweet spiritual communion; and during the session of the conference the religious exercises were interesting and productive of good. Our Presbyterian friends joined with us, and the fellowship of the godly was precious. The heart of every member of the conference has been deeply impressed with the kindness evinced by the brethren and citizens of Baton Rouge.

By order of the conference,

THOMAS MULLETT, Sec.

SPECIAL NOTICE.—The chairmen of the board of finance of the following Conferences have not forwarded to us the receipts of the Bishops who presided at their respective sessions for the money paid by the Conferences for their support. Will they please do so at once? Western, Illinois, North Mississippi, Indian Mission, North Alabama, Texas, Baltimore and Los Angeles. Will the brethren who hold these receipts please forward them at once?

A. H. REDFORD, Agent.

IMMENSE EMIGRATION.—Mr. Anton Sontag, of New Orleans, has memorialized Congress to establish a line of steamers to some port on the Black sea, for the purpose of promoting emigration to this country. He says there are eight millions in Italy, two millions in Servia, six millions in Bosnia, two millions in Hungary and about fourteen millions in Austria, able-bodied, industrious, long-lived, hard-working people anxious to come to this country.

A GREAT FRAUD.—The Bank of England has been defrauded of about $2,000,000 by skillful forgeries on several great financial firms of London.

TRUST IN GOD AND DO RIGHT.

BY NORMAN M'LEOD, D. D.

Courage, brother! Do not stumble,
Though thy path be dark as night;
There's a star to guide the humble—
Trust in God and do the right.

Let the road be rough and dreary,
And its end far out of sight—
Foot it bravely! Strong or weary,
Trust in God and do the right.—

Perish policy and cunning!
Perish all that fears the light!
Whether losing, whether winning,
Trust in God and do the right.

Trust no party, sect or faction,
Trust no leaders in the fight;
But in every word or action,
Trust in God and do the right.

Trust no lovely forms of passion—
Fiends may look like angels bright;
Trust no custom, school or fashion;
Trust in God and do the right.

Simple rule and safest guiding,
Inward peace and inward might,
Star upon our path abiding—
Trust in God and do the right.

Some will hate thee, some will love thee,
Some will flatter, some will slight;
Cease from man and look above thee—
Trust in God and do the right.

Methodist Finance in Louisiana.

MR. EDITOR: From the date of Paul's epistle to the church in Corinth to the time of "Post Oak Circuit," addressed "to the Methodists and to the Jonathan that is in them," we have had essays and articles without number on the subject of church finance. And from the date of "Post Oak" until the time of this present writing the church papers have literally teemed with plans and schemes and methods by which to raise money to carry forward church operations. That "member of the Red River Conference," whoever he be, laid bare the fact that the church could no longer dispense the "gospel on tick." Since then almost every scribbler has turned Elihu on this important subject, and stood up and said: "Hearken to me; I also will show mine opinion." This writer is inclined to think some of them resemble Elihu in another thing: "They speak that they may be refreshed." Now, Mr. Editor, I do not wish to show "mine opinion," however good that opinion may seem to me, but I desire to show the result of all those essays and articles and epistles, which commenced with Paul and culminated in "Post Oak." I have before me the published "Minutes of the Twenty-seventh Session of the Louisiana Annual Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, held in New Orleans, Louisiana, January 8–13, 1873. Bishop George F. Pierce, presiding; Charles F. Evans, secretary." How much benefit the church has reaped in a financial way, from those various writings, is, as far as Louisiana is concerned, plainly published to the world in these "Minutes." These "Minutes" show the financial operations of the Methodist Church in Louisiana for the year 1872. I apprehend there have been some collections and expenditures made by the church, particularly in the cities, which are not reported here. We have to do now only with the published report of the Conference. In order to make everything plain and easy as we go along, we take the liberty of putting down our figures in round numbers. This will not much alter the general result.

From these "Minutes," then, we learn that the whole amount of money collected for various purposes reaches the large sum of over $88,000. The amount of allowance for preachers is over $58,000, which gives the average salary of $830. The amount of this, collected and paid over to preachers, is over $41,000, of which the average receipts are $580. In the matter of preachers' salaries there is a deficiency of over $17,000—that is, as any accountant would say, the Methodist preachers in Louisiana paid over $17,000 last year for the privilege of preaching the gospel to Louisiana Methodists! Oh, for a few more chapters added to "Post Oak!" I find that out of sixty-five circuits and stations one paid more than it was assessed, nine paid the assessment fully, and the remaining fifty-five came out deficient. Can anybody assign a good reason why so many circuits were deficient? In the matter of Sunday schools there is reported collected over $4,900. The average amount to the school, $43. In the matter of church-building and parsonages there was raised over $31,000. There was collected for the poor over $1,700. And it is peculiarly gratifying to learn that the claims of the superannuates, widows, orphans and Bishops were fully met.

The next item in our finance I approach not with temerity, but with timidity. Under the question, "What has been contributed for missions?" we find the answer $4,115. This includes what was collected on the circuits and what was raised at the missionary anniversary in Carondelet Street church. If we take out what was raised at the anniversary, the amount collected on the circuits during the year is about $2,500—that is to say, the Methodists in Louisiana, in the year 1872, contributed for the cause of missions the sum of less than twenty-five cents apiece. Now if we take out the New Orleans district, whose membership contributed about $1.10 per member to this cause, we find the entire church, outside of that district, contributing the sum of $800. Making the average, we find nine thousand six hundred and sixty-five members contributing 800, which is about eight cents apiece. Again, we find out of sixty-five circuits and stations that twenty contributed nothing at all to the cause of missions—and that is about as cheap as they could desire. On those twenty circuits there are two thousand eight hundred and thirty-five members.

Mr. Editor, statistical tables contain some very curious things, if we only take the trouble to pry into them. For instance, here is a circuit, in one of the wealthiest portions of the State, numbering nearly one hundred members, and in the report of the missionary treasurer that circuit is credited with $2.50. Those brethren have now the gratification to know that in order to help the grand army of Jesus in its conquest of the world they have contributed two and two-thirds cents apiece! As this is a private matter between us Louisianians, I do hope that Dr. McFerrin won't make a fuss about it in the "great central," and thus call the attention of the whole church to our unparalleled liberality! Looking at this missionary matter by districts, we have this result:

|---|---|
| New Orleans district paid | $1 06 |
| Lake Providence district paid | 16 |
| Shreveport district paid | 15 |
| Opelousas district paid | 5 |
| Ouachita district paid | 5 |
| Minden district paid | 4 |
| Alexandria district paid | 3 |

Mr. Editor, if Louisiana Methodists don't believe in a "cheap missionary gospel" it is hard to tell what these figures mean. I wonder if our people have transposed Paul's words so as to read: "The abundance of their joy and their deep riches abounded unto the poverty of their liberality." If Paul were now on earth and had to send us an epistle, would he not leave out Second Corinthians ix, 1? Looking at these figures, we see some of the fruits of the many essays and articles on church finance. This is what those essays and articles have done for Louisiana. I expect they have done equally as much for the other portions of the church. Brother scribblers, "suffer the word of exhortation." Quit excoriating the church on the subject of finance. "Husband your resources." Save your paper and your time. Have some regard for the editor's patience and the printer's eyes and the people's feelings.

OUTIS.

Ministerial Support.

MR. EDITOR: This subject seems to be the all-absorbing one in the quarterly conference, district meeting, Annual and General Conference. It was the troublesome question in the Jewish Church. The Apostle Paul was not appreciated by his brethren and supported. Think of an apostle working with his needle to get bread while preaching at Rome, the metropolis of the world. If the church was enlightened on this subject certainly she would act more consistently. It certainly would be a very great relief not only to the real wants of the preachers, but to their feelings. Humility is a great virtue, but to be humbled by those who ought to hold us up is degrading. God has in all ages of his church made special arrangements for the support of his ministers, and given specific directions to the church to take care of and support their preachers. The Jews were made an example to mankind by receiving the law, service and ministry of God. They were required to give a definite part of their labor to the priest—one-tenth. If the crop was full the preacher fared as the people; if the crop was short the priest had to live on short fare, as well as the people. One-tenth seems to have been settled from the beginning as the share of the preacher. Abraham gave it, Jacob vowed it. But there is no statute requiring that amount in the New Testament, nor is there any express statute requiring that men should give one-seventh of their time to rest. The Old Testament is the Christian's common law, and what is not repealed by statute in the New Testament is of full force in the Christian church. Who ever doubted the force of the Ten Commandments? No one ever doubts Abraham's faith as a proper example in the Christian church. Then why ignore his support of the priest as a good example? No one doubts Jacob's agonizing effort in prayer as a good example. Then why doubt his vow to God to give one-tenth of his income as a good example under the Christian dispensation? If the faith and prayer of those ancient lights in the church are held up to us as proper examples of imitation, why ignore their example when they give, under all circumstances, one-tenth of their income to God? The Christian dispensation is superior to the Jewish dispensation in all respects, except in giving. To the patient Bible student the history of God's dealing with his church affords abundant information for our guidance, "furnished entire." When the Jews kept their law, and acted honestly with God, they were the richest and most prosperous people in the earth. The Lord never gave the Jews a title in fee to the land of Canaan. The Lord said: "The land is mine." God took them in as partners, and clearly defined the contract. He was to furnish seed, land, seasons, etc. They were to cultivate, fertilize and rest the land, and give God one-tenth of all they made. The earth is the Lord's; and what was his law then, unrepealed, is his law now. Nearly all the troubles of a temporal character that cursed the Jewish Church grew out of their thieving propensities. The Almighty labored with them for two thousand years. He cured them of idolatry, but he never cured them of stealing, and at last drove them off of his land and out of his country. Read the third chapter of Malachi, etc.

And now take your seat as presiding elder in quarterly meeting. "Question.—What has been collected for the support of the Levites and their families?" Call the churches, beginning at Hebron; nothing from Hebron. Mount Zion; nothing from Mount Zion. Eighty members at Hebron, and over one hundred at Mount Zion. Why no collection? Land and stock all mortgaged; the caterpillar has eaten up the cotton. Will men rob God and prosper in their theft? They did not in the days of the Prophet Malachi. Now, brethren, bring all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in my house, and prove me herewith, saith the Lord. It is useless to move to the West, for a man who is dishonest in the East will steal after he gets even to Texas. Stay here in Alabama, and be just with God, and he will open the windows of heaven, and barns and storehouses shall be filled. How can God prosper a people who are enlightened and live under the benefits of the gospel, and starve their preacher? I saw a noble man going to his circuit, crying and weeping, and when asked what was the matter he said: "I am called to preach, and have been sent to that circuit. No parsonage; the preacher and his family get less than $400, and it will cost nearly half that amount to move."

Now, Mr. Editor, I am sick and worn out on the subject of finance—the many plans, envelopes, assessments, etc. The church ought to support their pastors, and do it at once, and like Christian men and women; not in balls and parties and auctions. God save the mark. The church needs the truth of God, enlightenment from the Bible, driven by the Spirit home to the conscience and life. The ministry complain too much and preach too little. Our circuits are generally going down all over the country—I mean comparatively. We must do something to keep on the advanced line. We change too often the boundaries of our circuits. We need more permanency. Parsonages, better churches, school-houses, etc., would go far to make our circuits more permanent. We need staves in the churches. Souls will be lost all over this land for want of fire in the churches. The people have money to purchase snuff, tobacco, and some members even whisky, and then let their Sabbath school die out in winter for want of a stove. Much remains to be done.

Very truly,

S. P. RICHARDSON.

GREENVILLE, ALA., March 18, 1873.

Who Art Thou?

"Where art thou, God? Who art thou?" Drearily, amid the din and strife, the cry wells up from the depths of despairing hearts. From poverty-stricken dens of wretchedness, where body and soul are famishing; from hearts bowed down with unmerited agony of shame; from hearts vainly seeking truth, alone, helpless, drifting wearily toward an unknown, unseen futurity, with none to stretch out an aiding hand—ah, how bitterly the soul cries: "Where art thou? Who art thou?" Art all-powerful, all-beneficent? Why, then, permit so much misery? All love? Why create and preserve capability for suffering? Where is the soul that has not vainly striven to grapple with these mysteries? Alas! how many have sunk, with white, despairing faces, beneath the cold, silent waters of speculation.

Life's problem can only be solved by the development of years. With the incarnation of Christ as the key, these baffling mists will be purged away in the furnace of affliction, the soul-vision becoming clearer as it rises, step by step, up the painful steep, until it attains the nobler life for which it is destined, and with clear, reverential vision beholds the wisdom of the Infinite unfolded in all its grandeur.

The union of the divine and finite, as demonstrated in the life of Christ; the inconceivable love that cheerfully endured a suffering life and shameful death; the reason why God, in his knowledge of all future events, permitted the creation, fall and redemption of humanity, and the evils arising from sin's influence, are unfathomable mysteries beyond the conception of finite nature. Enough for us to know that God is all purity and truth; that in Christ and through him all sin is eradicated, and perfect peace and love creating a heaven in the believer's heart.

Is the incomprehensibility of divine life an excuse for unbelief? "Every one believes that somewhere and somehow all things are justified, contradictions reconciled, mysteries explained, and the upward path made clear and straight. The soul reports faithfully of its own transcendent origin and destiny, and at times her voice is heard above the noise and din of the conflict on the battle-field of this outer world. There are intervals when the pursuit of fame, wealth, pleasure, or any merely selfish end, seems the cheat it really is—when men would give all that they promise or can bring for the priceless pearl of a soul-satisfying good. At least he thinks he would. Yet how many of us can bear the test, voluntarily accept the sacrifice, and rise to the level we aspire to? Not many. Trial, disappointment, failure—these are the golden gates through which the soul escapes her bondage to nature, and draws the whole being up into a higher, purer atmosphere."

Therefore, O man, face thy soul. In that stern presence thou knowest thy Redeemer liveth; that divine love is yearning to encompass thee. "Who art thou?" The embodiment of a love which encircles the universe. "Who art thou?" Lord of all—right worthy to be praised. Holy, holy, holy; heaven is full of the majesty of thy glory.

LITTLE BEVERLY.

Golden Wedding.

MR. EDITOR: We had the pleasure, a few days since, of attending the celebration of the golden wedding of Mr. and Mrs. William Griffin, two of our most respected citizens. For fifty long years this worthy couple have traveled together life's varied journey, and now in the evening of their days they enjoy a competency which their own prudence and care has accumulated. They have reared a large family of children, among the most honorable and honored in our State. This joyous event was celebrated as an occasion of family reunion and congratulation, and without pomp and parade. Unknown to the aged father and mother, the daughters had prepared a bountiful and elegant repast, and to the wondering surprise of the old people they were suddenly surrounded by their sons and daughters, and troops of grandchildren, full of joy and glee—one family, living at a distance, alone being absent. It was amusing to witness how much the little ones enjoyed the perplexity of dear old grandma. For days her good things had mysteriously disappeared, and the good lady could give no possible account of the way they went. The quiet, serene smile resting upon their countenances told full well how deeply their hearts had been touched by the delicate compliment thus offered them. The occasion was made delightful by the dedication in baptism to almighty God of three of their little grandchildren. This ordinance was most feelingly and impressively performed by the pastor, the Rev. P. H. Napier.

We retired from the happy circle feeling how beautiful it is, in our times of rejoicing, to acknowledge that the universal Father is the bestower of every blessing.

A FRIEND.

BEYOND.

BY H. WALTER FEATHERSTON.

When day begins to fade away before the gloom of night,
And twilight robes the world in gray,
And sunset's glow best reeks the western sky with amber light,
And writes there, 'thwart the doom of day,
A glorious thought comes sweeping 'cross my mind on fairy wings,
And lifts my soul with high delight;
As Sol, beneath where earth meets heaven, his flood of luster flings
Back 'ward the fast-approaching night,
And tells us of a land of light beyond the hazy line
Where his effulgencies all beam,
So heaven-glories 'gainst the Christian's moral sky oft shine
From 'cross the line—Death's darkling stream;
And tell us thus that, far out there, there is a land of light,
Where Jesus, from his burnished throne,
Sheds forth such ceaseless floods of luster that there is found no night,
But day eternal rules alone.
How oft athwart our gloom-wrapt souls, in times of sorrow, beams
A sunset-like reflected ray
Of heaven's light, reminding us that there forever streams
The luster of a darkless day!

Regeneration and Baptism of Infants.

The Methodist Quarterly Review for January contains an interesting discussion, from the pen of its learned and able editor, of the topic above indicated, to which we wish to call the attention of our readers. The occasion of the discussion to which we allude was the publication of an article in the Bibliotheca Sacra for October, in which the writer affirms that "infant baptism" and "a regenerated church-membership" are irreconcilable. The theory of that writer is, that the practice of baptizing infants must be unscriptural and wrong, because none but regenerate persons can be members of the visible church, and infants are not regenerate. The editor utterly rejects as the "most unscriptural, most dangerous and most un-Methodistic of all the views proposed," that of the late Dr. Nadal, who sustained infant baptism "on the ground that the church did not require regeneration in her membership." The editor adds:

"The Christian church, in our view, aims, however imperfectly the aim is accomplished, to be the church of the regenerate. Dr. Nadal's view, we think, contradicts our thirteenth article of faith, which declares that 'the visible church of Christ is a congregation of faithful men.' In regard to which it may be affirmed: 1. That the unregenerate are not 'faithful' men; 2. That in the view of the church, the baptized infant is a 'faithful' man. If 'seekers' have in former times been admitted by our church to the 'class,' it is not properly as members of the church. We never knew a 'seeker' to be baptized; he can be dropped by the pastor without trial; and all such should be, so soon as they cease to be sincere 'seekers.' They are received into the 'class' simply in order to receive the aid of a spiritual adviser so long as they feel the need of advice and are disposed to profit by it. The present reviewer, as a Baptist, of course agrees with us in rejecting the doctrine of an unregenerate church. He differs from us in inferring therefrom the impropriety of infant baptism."

The indefiniteness of opinion in regard to the relation of infants to the church, and consequently in regard to infant baptism, is accounted for on the ground that a majority of our church-members have "unconsciously varied from our own standards. A large majority have, if we mistake not, contrary to Arminius, to Wesley, to Fletcher, to Fisk and to our articles of faith, come to hold that the living infant is neither justified nor regenerated, and becomes so only on condition of death." The editor thus states the theory of infant baptism, which, in his opinion, most nearly accords with our best standards: "Infants are to be baptized because, under the atonement, they are born regenerate."

It is not to be inferred from this statement that the "standards" referred to—Arminius, Wesley, Fletcher and Fisk—held that infants are not born into the world depraved; but rather, in the language of Dr. Fisk, "that the atonement meets them with its provisions at their entrance." This point Dr. Whedon thus elaborates:

"Their justification or regeneration, so far as it exists, is not congenital, but post-genital. The atonement fills this probationary world with its influence, and the human being receives his atoning justification consequent upon his having entered into it. It is as if a room were filled with a purifying influence, and a leper is cleansed by entering within its walls. The question is not as to the genuineness or the depth of the depravity as derived from Adam, or from the immediate parent. That depravity is done up in all the elements of the fetus man. Nor does regeneration, infant or adult, absolutely remove it until completed at the glorification; for both infant and adult still retain susceptibility to temptation and sin, mortality, disease and death, until the final renovation. * * * * * *

"Our inherent depravity is not entirely removed by regeneration until the regeneration is completed at the resurrection. For the best of us, the maintenance of our saved or regenerate state is a work of care, skill and firm volition. These qualities the unnurtured child does not possess, and hence falls an easy victim to sin. The nurtured child may retain an unforfeited Christian character. It is at this age, indeed, that docility to truth, conscientiousness and simple piety often unfold themselves."

The words congenital and post-genital, in the foregoing extract, must be understood as used not in relation to physical birth, but to the period of generation, or mere fetus existence. As Dr. Whedon says in a note now before us: "There must be an instant when an immortal person has come into existence, so that if both mother and child should die, the child's spirit is as deathless as the mother's. That, I think, is the true birth in question." Whatever element has, prior to that time, been wrought into the child's nature, is congenital; and whatever is added to or wrought upon it, either forthwith upon or subsequent to its taking a complete, an immortal existence, is post-genital. The justification or regeneration of the infant's spiritual nature is necessarily subsequent to generation and to a more fetus existence; it is therefore post-genital. According to our best theological writers, and, in their opinion, according to Scripture teaching, it is prior to physical birth, and forthwith upon the coming of a new immortal—personality—into existence and into the moral government of God.

Whoever will turn to "Fletcher's Checks," volume 1, page 461, will find the proof that he held the doctrine of the justification and regeneration of all living infants. He also insists that this is a doctrine of the Church of England, in accordance with which her clergy are directed to say in the baptismal service: "We yield thee hearty thanks, most merciful Father, that it has pleased thee to regenerate this infant." In his view this regeneration is prior to baptism, is not contingent or conditional, and is universal. The baptismal Scripture lesson (Mark x, 13, etc.) is explained by Mr. Fletcher to teach this doctrine. Judging from his comment on this passage, Mr. Wesley held the same view. Dr. Fisk says: "Through the grace of the gospel all are born free from condemnation;" and then he immediately adds, "So the Apostle Paul: 'As by the offense of one, judgment came upon all men to condemnation, so by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon all men unto justification of life.'" On the language of Fisk the Quarterly thus forcibly comments:

"Here we are told that all are born 'free from condemnation;' and this freedom from condemnation is identical with the 'justification' named by St. Paul. And this freedom from condemnation or justification (not merely a title to contingent prospective justification) is at birth upon each living individual infant; and universal, being in spite of our depravity derived from the atonement. The infant does not wait for death before he is justified. Death, actual or approaching, is no condition of salvation."

That the infant dying is justified and made regenerate, while the one living remains unjustified and unregenerate, seems to us wholly absurd. It is the grace of God, through the atonement, which determines for all infants their moral relation and condition. That grace deals with all alike; it is all-comprehending and impartial.

In regard to Mr. Fletcher's doctrine of infant regeneration the Quarterly remarks:

"1. No one affirms that the regeneration of an infant, as taught by Fletcher, is psychologically absurd, or contrary to human or Christian consciousness. The doctrine of infant regeneration, either unconditional or conditional upon baptism, is no new doctrine, but has been a dogma in all the great sections of the church, whether Greek, Roman or Protestant. * * * The regeneration of the infant is nothing different in nature from that in the adult, except as modified by its subject; and the use of the term is, in both cases, equally proper, involving no innovation in theology of either thought or language. If an infant can be depraved, it can also be undepraved; if it can be positively unregenerate, it can also be regenerate. In the infant nature, as truly as in the adult, there may exist all the potencies, predispositions and predeterminate tendencies, natural or gracious, for an actual though not responsible moral nature, good or bad.

"2. The doctrine of depravity is neither invalidated in nor modified by the doctrine of infant regeneration, whether unconditional or conditional upon birth, baptism or death, actual or approaching. In either case the depravity comes from Adam, is by nature, and is equally complete; and in either case regeneration comes from Christ and is by grace, being extra to and above nature. The unborn John the Baptist was "filled with the Holy Ghost" (Luke i, 15,) and "leaped" at the approach of the mother of the unborn Savior. The unborn Jesus was "that holy thing." And such cases at once explode the objection of the "manifest absurdity" of "regeneration between conception and birth." Nor is there any more absurdity in the infant being regenerated between conception and birth than in his being depraved at conception, or between conception and birth. And this would seem to finish, too, all the argument about the absurdity of regeneration and regeneration being simultaneous."

If this doctrine of infant regeneration be true, all adult sinners have "fallen from grace." They have sinned away the justification they once had; they have made "the depravity of their nature the object of their choice," and consequently sin is imputed to them. They are guilty and condemned.

Moreover, if this doctrine is true, it is also true, as is well stated by Dr. Whedon, that "the state of the saved living infant is essentially the same for an infant as the state into which regeneration brings the adult. And so infant justification is, for the infant, the same as that justification into which faith brings the adult believer."

If we accept this view the baptism of infants is, in our opinion, placed on an impregnable basis. They have as valid a claim to that ordinance as adults. The latter are entitled to it because of their acceptance and reception of justification and regeneration on the condition of faith in Christ. The former having, through the grace of God, been placed in the same state of salvation, are also to be baptized. Since "of such is the kingdom of heaven," who can forbid water?—Western Christian Advocate.

THE TINKER'S CRY.—The American Bibliopolist gives the following:

OBITUARIES.

EMELINE HAWKINS, daughter of Pleasant and Mary Hawkins, was born in Smith county, Mississippi, April 3, 1872, and departed this life February 16, 1873, aged ten months and thirteen days.

The deeply-afflicted parents have our sympathy. They buried their oldest son in December last. Now they are called to deposit their youngest daughter in the cold grave. O may God sustain them and may they meet in heaven.

R. A. SIBLEY.

TRENTON, Miss., March 24, 1873.

WILLIAM S. WESTBERRY was born in Colleton district, South Carolina, January 28, 1832. In the second year of his age his father moved with his family to Rankin county, Mississippi, and settled in the neighborhood of old Shiloh church and camp ground, at which place, during a camp meeting in October, 1857, he was converted and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South. From the time of his conversion he advanced in divine life, even up to his death. He was a member of Lodi church, one of the leaders and a licensed exhorter.

Bro. Westberry was married to Miss Renoa Myers, December 7, 18[illegible], who, with six children, survive him. He called his family to his bedside just before he departed, and said to them that the time had full come and he was ready; told them not to weep for him. Bro. Westberry was a very useful man to the church and to the neighborhood in which he lived. His seat in the church militant is now vacant (it was rarely so during his lifetime;) but he now occupies a seat in paradise. Our brother departed this life January [illegible], 1873, in the forty-first year of his age. May God sanctify this afflictive dispensation to the good of the heart-stricken widow, children, friends and neighbors of our departed brother. May they all so live that they may meet him in heaven.

R. A. SIBLEY, Pastor.

TRENTON, Miss., March 24, 1873.

CAROLINE D. DUDLEY was born February 7, 1830, and died January 13, 1873. Sister Dudley was the daughter of Rev. Jacob Crumbly, local preacher in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, who died some years ago. Sister Dudley was the wife of Bro. John M. Dudley, who survived her only fourteen days, for on the twenty-seventh of January, 1873, he also departed this life. He was born in Putnam county, Georgia, February 14, 1831. They were married January 23, 1851. Bro. Dudley was the son of Bro. E. and M. Dudley, who still survive, though old and ripe for heaven. Bro. and Sister Dudley enjoyed the advantages of an early religious education and training. They were brought up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. In their youth they united with the church of their fathers, in which they lived acceptably until summoned to join the church triumphant. Bro. Dudley held for years the office of steward or class-leader in the church. They both died suddenly of congestion, as we suppose. The circumstances of their sickness and death precluded the possibility of giving those evidences of acceptance with God so desirable by surviving friends. We have, however, consolation in believing that, as their lives were godly, their end was peace. They left five children and many friends and relatives to mourn their loss. Their two eldest children are members of the church; three of them are small. May the Lord bless the orphans, may the church be the guardian of their morals, and at last may they, with their parents, be saved—a family in heaven.

JOSEPH M. SCOTT, P. C.

FARMERSVILLE, ALA., March 21, 1873.

THE following tribute of respect was adopted at a Quarterly Conference held at Mount Zion church, Taylorville mission, Brandon district, on the fifteenth of March, A. D. 1873:

It has pleased almighty God to take from our midst our dearly-beloved brother, EBENEZER HAYS, who departed this life on the twenty-fourth of November, 1872, in the full hope of a blessed immortality. The subject of this obituary was born in Marion district, South Carolina, on the eleventh of June, A. D. 1[illegible], joined the Methodist Episcopal Church in 1833, and obtained a license to preach in 1836. He was married to Miss Nancy Lowe in 1[illegible], by whom he had seven children. He removed to the State of Mississippi in 1837, and located in Smith county. He lost his wife, and married Mrs. S. A. Jones in 1851, by whom he had one son. After losing his second wife he married Mrs. Martha Young, by whom he had one son. She survives to mourn her irreparable loss. Bro. Hays, as a minister of the gospel, was close, earnest and heart-searching, and decidedly popular. To know him was but to love him, for he had the meekness of the Christian and urbanity of the gentleman. Bro. Hays was long apprised of his approaching dissolution, and kept his inner man swept and garnished, to welcome his Lord and Savior's mandate from high heaven. While languishing upon a bed of sickness he was ever cheerful and resigned, and ever ready to counsel, advise and exhort those around him. A few hours before his death he sung a hymn in a sweet, dulcet and melodious voice, and continued to shout praises to God for his redeeming love until his happy soul took its everlasting flight to the mansion where God and the Lamb reign to receive the weary and heavy laden, that their joys may be full.

SONG OF THE SEASONS.

Gaunt Winter flinging flakes of snow,
Deep-burdening field and wood and hill;
Dim days, dark nights, slow-trailing fogs,
And blackened air severe and chill.
And swift the seasons circling run—
And still they change till all is done.

Young Spring with promise in her eyes,
And fragrant breath from dewy mouth,
And magic touches for the nooks
Of budding flowers when wind is south.
And swift the seasons circling run—
And so they change till all is done.

Then Summer stands erect and tall,
With early sunrise for the lawn,
Thick-foliaged woods and glittering seas,
And loud bird-chirpings in the dawn.
And swift the seasons circling run—
And so they change till all is done.

Brown Autumn, quiet with ripe fruits,
And haggards stacked with harvest gold,
And fiery flushes for the leaves,
And silent cloud-skies soft and cold.
And so the seasons circling run—
And still they change till all is done.

Swift speeds our life from less to more—
The child, the man, the work, the rest,
The sobering mind, the ripening soul,
Till yonder all is bright and blest.
For so the seasons circling run—
And swift they change till all is done.

Yes, yonder—if indeed the orb
Of life revolves round central Light,
Forever true to central force,
And steadfast, come the dusk or bright.
And so indeed the seasons run—
And last is best when all is done.

Dr. Guthrie's Last Days.

Dr. Guthrie left Edinburg on the twenty-ninth of January. He travelled in one day to London, and stood the journey well. The following day he went to St. Leonards, and was much fatigued by the journey. He became slowly weaker. It was not till Sunday, February 16, however, that any immediate apprehension was felt. On Sunday night he was restless, and had several attacks of fainting. On Monday he became so alarmingly ill that the different members of his family were summoned. There were five sons and three daughters present. On Tuesday morning he was pronounced sinking, and it was not expected that he could survive more than a few hours. Gradually, however, he rallied, and completely emerged out of the state of partial insensibility into which he had fallen. Notwithstanding this rally, his strength steadily decreased until the close; his voice, once so rich and powerful, became gradually reduced to a whisper. The massive frame lay helpless like a child in the arms of his attendants, and the eyes so full of expression became dim and insterless, but the mind remained clear and powerful to the close.

His conversation during the last week of his life was full of affection, wisdom and joy. He was frequently under great bodily distress from breathlessness, but he never murmured, although he often prayed that he might have a speedy deliverance. Toward the close he longed to depart, and viewed with no feelings of dread, but rather of thankfulness, the signs of approaching dissolution. One day his sight was somewhat confused, and when one of his family remarked that this was of little significance," he said: "Ah, no; it is just like the land-birds coming lighting on the mast, which presage to the weary mariner the nearness of his desired haven." On Saturday Admiral Baillie Hamilton, an Episcopalian, who visited him daily and whose kindness he greatly valued, told him he thought he was looking better. "Ah," said he, "a good man comes with evil tidings." He delighted to talk of heaven, and of the many friends gone before who would welcome him there. In particular he pictured to himself his son John, who died in infancy and whose memory he always fondly cherished, running to the golden gate to meet him. He had no doubt of the recognition of friends in heaven, and in reference to this quoted the saying of an old woman: "Do you think we shall be more foolish in heaven than we are here?" On Thursday the Rev. Thomas Vores, incumbent of St. Mary-in-the-Castle, prayed with him. Dr. Guthrie was too weak to speak directly to him, but whispered to one of his sons: "Tell him my journey is nearly ended; ask him to pray that I may have a speedy entrance into heaven, and that we may have a happy meeting there, where we shall no longer have to proclaim Christ, but where we shall enjoy him for ever and ever." Yet he never lost his interest earthward. He spoke to each member of his family with the most overflowing affection. They were all, with the exception of two, able to be present, and he often thanked God for the comfort he had had in them all without exception. To those absent he sent loving messages, saying to one of them: "Stand up for Christ in all circumstances." These words, "Stand up for Christ," he repeated twice, and very emphatically. To many of his many friends he also desired to be remembered, and always asked an interest in their prayers.

One of the most touching incidents of his illness was the affection he displayed toward one of his grandchildren, Anita Williamson, a little child of four years of age. When she was taken into the sick-room and shown to Dr. Guthrie, a smile full of the old sweetness, but such as suffering had almost banished, at once lit up his face. He flung his arms around the little child's neck, kissed her and called her endearing names. It was very affecting to see his grandchild thereafter sitting on the bed fanning him or rubbing his often chilly hands. On the day before he died she came into the room, as usual, in the morning. His eyes by this time were very much changed, but the moment he saw her he said: "Put her up;" and when lifted to the bed she crept up to him and kissed him; he nodded to her and whispered: "My bonnie lamb." His hope and confidence never wavered, and nothing was more striking than the calm way in which he expressed them. The mingling of reason with faith was as noticeable in his death as in his life; yet his trust was as simple as that of a child. During his illness he was often soothed by singing, and of no hymns was he more fond than such as are called "children's hymns," such as:

"Jesus, tender Shepherd, hear me; Bless my little lamb to-night;"

and,

"There is a happy land."

On Friday night he asked his family to sing, and on being asked what he would like he said: "Give me a bairn's hymn." He often thanked God he had not left his preparation to a dying hour, and remarked on the folly of those who leave "to the mercies of a moment the vast concerns of an eternal scene." He placed his whole confidence in Christ, and when asked on Tuesday morning, at a time when he was thought to be sinking: "You have that Savior now?" "Yes," he said, "I have none else." Even when unable to speak many words, and in bodily distress, his ejaculations showed how peaceful was his mind. On the same morning he was heard to say, "On the other side," and again, with a sweet smile on his face, "Happy, happy!"

Within an hour before death he made by signs an intelligible answer to a question put to him. He then passed into a very sound sleep, from which he never woke. About ten minutes before he breathed his last his nurse—his Highland nurse, to whom he was much attached—remarked that the wrinkles on his forehead were smoothing out. The members of the family not present were at once called, and, without a struggle or sigh, and so peacefully that it was impossible to tell the exact moment of departure, he passed away.—New York Observer.

Convictions Not to be Trifled With.

Many of you have convictions. Do not stifle them. If you do you may never have them again. To think you may yet go down to hell, and be lost forever! Yes! go to hell from a solemn scene like this! How dreadful to think of!

A sad story I will tell you. But first I will tell you of a gentleman gambler, a trophy of divine grace.

One night, as he sat at the gambling-table, the thought flashed across his mind, "If I were to die now I should be damned," and he fell. Some of you do not believe in stricken cases; but in this instance there could have been nothing said to excite his mind about eternal things. Not a word was spoken about the Lord Jesus, except it may have been that his sacred name was mixed up with the profane oath. But the strong man fell from his gambling into an alarm about his soul. His fellow-gamblers looked on affrighted. He was brought to his bed, as he thought, to die. He wished his servant would leave the room, for he felt that he must pray; but he said: "What matter about a servant, when I may die and be damned?" He prayed most earnestly; God heard him—God saved him. God has since used him in the awakening and conversion of many souls.

A young lady one day went home from the preaching of the gospel deeply troubled about her soul. She told her mother how anxious she felt; but the mother wished her to enjoy the world, and to appear at the concert and the ball. Do not suppose that I am forbidding the ball-room or the concert; all I want to say is, that if I got a watch worth thirty pounds I would not care much for the one that cost thirty pence. And just so, when a man gets Christ, he gets a golden treasure, and he will not care for the tinsel of the world.

"'Tis the treasure I've found in his love
That has made me a pilgrim below."

Why do you never find the true Christian in the ball-room, and seldom in the concert-room? There is no chain on our limbs. Why, just because he has got the golden thing, and does not want the tinsel. I repeat:

"'Tis the pleasure he's found in Christ's love
That has made him a pilgrim below."

Not that Christianity puts a man into bondage, or would have you offer a dead work to God. But I am straying from the subject. The young lady's mother tried to have Christ in one hand and the world in the other; and when her daughter told her the state of her mind, she made her think lightly of it, saying that religion was never intended to make people morbid or gloomy; that she must go into society. Accordingly into society she went. Meanwhile

"Death with his arrow soon laid her low."

As she lay on her dying bed she called her mother and said: "Dear mamma, when I am dead and in my coffin, when my coffin is put down into the grave, do not let any tombstone be placed over me; neither let there be any epitaph chiseled on my gravestone, but let me be simply buried. * * * And when I am in my coffin and covered up under the sod, and you are in this room, open that wardrobe, dear mamma, and you will see my last ball-dress; and when you look upon that dress you will see the sign of your sin and of my doom." Thus she died. Alas for the child! Alas for the mother!

Do I say that there is any harm in a ball-dress? No; go as often as you like to the ball; it is quite natural to the flesh to go after such things. But what I want to say is, that when a man gets Christ he does not care for the poor, empty things of this world. Thus Abraham could leave his country and his father's house, when the God of glory was set before him; and Rebecca could go over the desert, from her kindred and friends, because of Isaac.

Ah, my dear friend, I wonder if thou hast got Christ like that. I wonder where you are now as to eternity; for remember, the tree is growing, or perhaps cut, which is to be made into a coffin for thee; and there is the empty space in the family vault for thy coffin; and you have, for your immortal soul, either a dark, dreadful cave in the regions of the damned, or a golden mansion which Jesus is preparing for thy reception in heaven. Oh, may my God awaken you to a solemn sense of where you are for eternity!

"Lo! on a narrow neck of land,
'Twixt two unbounding worlds you stand;
Yet how insensible!
A moment's time, a point in space,
Removes you to your heavenly place,
Or shuts you up in hell."

Or shuts you up in hell!—in hell—in hell!

Ah, my friend, you are at this moment either a candidate for heaven or a candidate for hell. Do you want to be saved? I know many of you do. Well, have I not shown you Christ your Savior, and that you may be saved now. There is salvation at your feet—salvation purchased for you by another—that is, it is a vicarious sacrifice, Jesus having satisfied all demands.

Christ is now the end of the law to every one that believeth. When that poor convict now lying in jail is hung, the law of the realm will be satisfied. It will have exhausted its power, and not an atom will be left to descend further. The law has an end in the death of the offender. And thus, when man had to die, Jesus takes him to the accursed tree, and hangs him upon the cross, and there the law spent itself; and there is now no condemnation to him that believeth. "Believe in the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved," and "let God be true, and every man a liar." "He that hath the Son hath life." Believest thou this? "Verily, verily," says Jesus, "he that heareth my word and believeth on him that sent me, hath everlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation, but is passed from death unto life."

Oh, then, believe in Jesus now! He is the same now that he was when hanging on the tree; the same in love, and in his willingness and power to save. Behold him where he is—a Prince and a Savior—to give repentance and remission of sins.—Mornings in Dublin.

Luther's Childhood and Youth.

From an interesting article on the childhood and youth of Luther, which appeared in a late number of the Penn Monthly, and in which the attempt is made to let Luther tell his own story, by extracts from his various letters and biographies, we compile the following brief sketch of his very early life:

"I was born at Eisleben, November 10, 1483, between eleven o'clock and midnight, and was baptized next day, being St. Martin's day, in St. Peter's church of that town." This I do not remember, but I take it on the word of my parents, Hans and Margaretha Luther, and of my townsmen. My parents had come from the village of Mohra, my father's birthplace, near Eisenach, to that town; for Eisenach contains nearly all my kindred by the mother's side chiefly, and there I am acknowledged and known to this day, because I was at school there four years. In no town am I better known. I trust that they would not be such fools as to think me the son of Hans Luther, and to regard me—one as his nephew, another as his uncle, yet another as his cousin—if they knew that my father and mother were Bohemians, and not their own flesh and blood.

"The rest of my life, after those four years, I passed in the University of Erfurt, and then in its monastery, until I came to Wittemberg as a professor; but was first of all at school at Magdeberg a year, my fourteenth."

"Luther is indeed a very common name among us, especially in Saxony, and means a lord (Herr) of the people (Leute.) The name is rightly spelled with a u or a y, followed by a th, instead of the weak d, as was once used, and the Saxons to this day call the worthy Kaiser Lothaire Kaiser Lydher. Scaliger writes his name Lutherius or Lutherus. From this name comes Lotharingia, Ladheringen, French Lorraine—i. e., Luther's abode, so called after the uncle of Karl the Great, whom the historians call Lothaire."

"I have often, in talking with Philip about astrology, told him my whole life in its order, how one thing came after another, and how I passed it. I am a boor's son. My father, grandfather and forefathers were simple boors. Then he tells me by astrology that I would have become a head-man, magistrate, bailiff, and filled whatever other offices they have in the villages, or at any rate a man higher in place than the rest. Then I tell him my father was brought to Mansfield and became a miner there; therefore I am. But that I was to become a baccalaureus, a magister, a monk and so forth, that is not in the stars. * * * That I was to take to wife a runaway nun, and beget of her several children—who hath seen that in the stars?

"My father was a poor miner, and my mother used to carry fagots on her back, while she had us children to bring up. She led a very toilsome—bulsaner—life of it, beyond anything that we see among people nowadays."

"People should not flog their children too hard. My father once flogged me so sorely that I fled from him, and had an aversion to him, until he accustomed me to himself again."

"My parents dealt very severely with me, so that I thereby was made timid. My mother once flogged me, for a sorry nut, until the blood came. It was her severe and earnest life that was the cause of my entering the monastery. However, at heart she meant well, sed non potuerunt discernere ingynia, secundum quaecessent temperandae correctiones. Quia people should so punish that the apple go with the rod."

"She had (says Matheslus) many virtues befitting an honorable matron, and in especial she was of notable modesty and piety, and given to earnest prayer, so that other honorable women looked upon her as an ensample of virtue and propriety."

"AFTER THAT HE PRAYED."—At a certain religious service the minister said if parents had the love of God in their hearts they would teach their children of Christ—they would have a family altar in the house, or else they were not Christians. A little child who heard it went home. That night, when she sat on her father's knee, she said: "Papa, you are not a Christian—the minister told all the people that you were not a Christian!" "Why not?" "Because you don't pray with us." After that he prayed; now he has a family altar—he saves souls and awakens sinners.

How to Keep Big Boys in the Sabbath School.

The girls are not so likely to slip out as the boys. Account for it as you please, this is a conceded fact. Now what can we do to keep the larger boys in the Sabbath school? There are many other means which may be suggested, but we shall in this article only advert to four things:

1. Seek their conversion. Let us have more faith in the conversion of little children, and labor for this result. God will bless such efforts, and then we shall not mourn over the departure of the big boys. They will all stay in the Sabbath school if they are true disciples of Jesus.

2. Make all the exercises intensely interesting. Let superintendents, in the opening and closing exercises, and in the entire conduct of the school, keep their eyes upon these youths. Let teachers study to illustrate the lesson, and in every way to interest these restless, but very important people who are just entering manhood. Never ridicule them. This they cannot endure. Don't treat them like children. This they regard as an unpardonable offense. A little effort may keep them in school, and thus, perhaps, secure their future welfare and usefulness. But let the effort be very easy and natural. These big boys require effort, but they don't want to see you put forth a special effort to interest them. The truth is, no one relishes this.

Talk to them about reading. Recommend to them some good book. Draw out their knowledge. Ask them occasionally to come and see you, and be sure, when they do come, to receive them cordially. When you meet them in the street or elsewhere recognize them, and give them a real hearty shake of the hand.

3. Give them something to do. This is a very important injunction, and it is not easy to say just what the work should be. This each teacher or superintendent must determine for himself. Some of the manly boys can do good service in the library. One might be secretary. Each class should have a treasurer, and the most restive boy in the class, perhaps, could fill this office efficiently. There is nothing like work to sober fractious horses or fast-growing young men.

4. Not forgetting the other points, let us add a fourth. Every church should have an adult department. There is very much in a name. The word adult is small, but it represents a large thing. It means grown up. It is true the boys are not mature in mind, but they are large in body. Their voices are changed. They are strong and active, and it is as well to encourage them in their reaching out to manliness as to put a stone on their heads and try to keep them back in their boyhood. The Bible class does not always attract these young men. The fact is, all the classes in the Sabbath school are Bible classes. Even in the primary department the children who cannot read are taught the Bible, and in the intermediate department the Bible is the great text-book. So, to distinguish the older ones, let there be an adult department.

In our church school we have about one hundred persons connected with the adult department. They hold their session in the body of the church. One of the best teachers in the intermediate department lately informed the superintendent that his big boys were getting very restless. They liked him, but they did not like their surroundings. The fact was they felt that they were among little people. So we had them transferred to the adult department. Now they are quite contented, and the class of six or seven has increased to twelve, and will very likely soon roll up to twenty.—Sunday School Times.

Life—A Spring.

Let us look at spring as the emblem of human life. The Bible so regards it. "He cometh up like a flower," etc.

1. Both in spring and human life there are vast capabilities of improvement. Spring is the season when Providence submits to the agriculturist what sort of harvest he shall have. With skill and industry he may, during the spring days, make nature yield him wonderful results. The cloud, the sky, the dew, the shower, the soil of spring, have special powers for the future. So is human life. Out of the human soul now seraphic powers and forms and faculties may grow.

2. Both in spring and human life there is remarkable changeableness. No season so changeable as spring; alternate cloud and sunshine, storm and calm, cold and heat, "make up the April day." What a sense of vicissitudes! What an emblem of human life!

3. Both in spring and human life there are many fallacious promises. Spring is the season of promise. The rich bud and blossom of fruit-trees, the strong green stalks of the cornfields, have often created bright hopes, which in autumn have been terribly disappointed. So in life. Look at youths, etc.

4. Both in spring and human life there is nothing that can substitute for the present. No other season can do the work of spring. The man who neglects his field in the spring may toil on it to the utmost in summer in effect. So it is with life. There is no period that can be substituted for the present.

IN THE American Journal of Science Prof. Gray quotes Karl Koch as authority to show that the Garab, upon which, according to the psalmist, the captive Jews at Babylon hung their harps, is not the weeping willow named Salix Babylonica by Linnæus, in view of the current tradition; and is not a willow at all, but a poplar. Indeed, Rauwolf had long ago concluded that it was not a willow. And the Salix Babylonica, the hardiness of which attests a cooler climate than that of Mesopotamia, is now regarded as of Chinese or Japanese origin; so that its Linnæan specific name gives place to that of Salix pendula, Mœnch.

Religious Intelligence.

BAPTISMS.—In 1872 there were in round numbers 100,000 additions to the Baptist churches.

MINNESOTA has eight Protestant Episcopal churches composed of Indians, and four of the rectors are Indians.

DR. STUART ROBINSON'S congregation in Louisville, Kentucky, are building a new church edifice to cost $30,000.

RICHMOND, VIRGINIA.—At the Grace Street church there have been more than 125 professions of conversion, fifteen restorations and 100 baptisms.

A BAPTIST congregation in Philadelphia have put up a tent of canvas to worship in. It is provided with cushioned pews for 500 people, and cost $1,500. It is crowded every week, and is the scene of a revival.

AMHERST COLLEGE, and the Congregational church of the town, have generously undertaken to support Rev. Mr. Constantine at Athens, Greece, where he has been laboring for many years as a missionary for the American Board.

A CONGREGATIONAL PASTOR in New Hampshire has tried the Methodist plan of a six months' probation for young converts, and believes in it. The Christian Union favors some such disciplinary method before admitting young converts to full membership.

A ROYAL DECREE has been issued formally taking possession, in whole or in part, of the property of sixteen convents in Rome for purposes of public utility, and placing the equivalent of the value of the property in the great book of the Rente at five per cent.

WOMAN'S WORK.—The Woman's Baptist Missionary Society of the West, which is now in the second year of its enterprise, has sent out four missionaries, and has also assumed the support of two others, and is supporting three Bible women, and rendering aid to two schools.

THE founder of Methodism in America, Rev. Philip Embury, who died a hundred years ago, is to be gratefully remembered by the denomination, through its National Association of Local Preachers, which is now taking steps to erect a suitable monument over his grave in Cambridge.

THE Swiss Council of State has stopped the salaries for three months of all priests who read from their pulpits an unauthorized papal brief establishing a separate bishopric for Geneva. The Conference at Basle has determined to create a grand Swiss bishopric of dissidents from Rome.

THE mission of the American Board in Ceylon, two years ago, committed the care of their common schools to a board of education, composed chiefly of natives. Since that time the schools have nearly doubled, and the number of scholars has more than doubled. There are now eighty-eight schools, 109 teachers and 4,797 scholars.

DEACONESSES.—There are now forty-eight training-houses for deaconesses in Europe, thirty of which are in Germany. From 1863 to 1871 the number of inmates had increased from 2,056 to 2,659, and the institutions where they labored from 474 to 648. More than 3,000,000 florins were disbursed in charity in 1871 by these Christian women.

THE Sunday school museum-room of the Methodist Episcopal Church, 805 Broadway, New York, is pronounced one of the coziest, most tastefully arranged, most complete in Sunday school material, of any room of the kind, either in Great Britain or America. "Once in," said a pastor the other day, "there is such a charm in the surroundings that you scarcely know how to tear yourself away."

A MAN whom Dr. Chalmers engaged to manage a disorderly Sunday school kept his eyes wide open during praying, and, when one boy thrust a pin into another, he marched up the aisle, still praying, and cuffed that boy's ears, and went back again, praying all the way. After that he was master of the situation, for the boys thought that a man who could watch and pray like that was not to be put down.

ONE of the Brooklyn papers says the receipts of Plymouth church, Rev. H. W. Beecher, pastor, last year were $76,000—$60,318.46 from pews. Of this sum $14,000 went to the Navy mission. The ordinary expenses of the church for the ensuing year are thus stated: Mr. Beecher's salary, $20,000; Mr. Halliday's salary, $3,000; Mr. Weld (first sexton,) $3,500; Mr. Raynor (second sexton,) $1,200; music, $8,000; Insurance, $500; current expenses, $7,000; Plymouth library, $7,000.

THE Working Church tells of "a church in New York city with 135 families without a single child," and thinks it a pity that "God would not from its stones raise up children unto Abraham.'" It may be added that another church with a large number of children appropriates never a dollar from its large revenues for the religious culture of its little ones; but leaves the Sunday school workers to pay their own expenses. It is sad to see a childless church. It is not less sad to see the children of a church neglected.—Independent.

IN 1842 the English treaty with China opened the five ports of Canton, Amoy, Fah Chau, Ningpo and Shanghai to merchants as a residence. Immediately missionary societies in Europe and America sent out missionaries to all of these five cities. In 1845 the Emperor issued an edict abolishing death as a penalty for professing Christianity in China. Now the treaties with Western nations are such that missionaries may reside at seventeen of the most important cities of China, including the capital of the empire and the capitals of six of the provinces. Missionaries can have passports by which they can travel throughout the empire, under the protection of the Western treaty powers. These treaties virtually open the whole of China, an area of 5,500,000 miles, to missionaries. Out of the Chinese population of 400,000,000 there have been gathered into Protestant Christian churches 9,000 communicants. The various Protestant religious societies are represented in China by less than 150 ordained missionaries. There are eight provinces where no missionary is yet at work, the laborers being concentrated upon a few important points, such as Canton or Peking. The principal centers thus occupied by various British, American and German societies are only about twenty. In the Canton province, whose population is over 20,000,000, there are fifteen missionaries and four lady teachers, employed by six different societies, making less than one foreign teacher for a million natives.

JAPAN.—Most important and interesting intelligence reaches us from Japan. Christianity is rapidly advancing, and the prospect is that at no distant day the nation will become Christian. The Bible is being translated into Japanese. The gospel by Mark is completed and published, a copy of which has been received by the American Bible Society at New York. The other three gospels will soon be published. This is the first attempt to print any part of the Bible in that language. Rev. S. R. Brown, who, with Dr. Hepburn, is engaged in this noble work, writes to the Bible Society Record that he had had opportunities for thirty years to observe the progress of events in Eastern Asia, "and I am persuaded that no heathen nation at the present day offers more encouragement to the friends of Christ as a sphere for evangelistic operations. It looks as if the set time had come, God's set time, for the nation to be brought to Christ." In speaking of the law of the government against Christianity, he says: "Although the government has not revoked its old law against Christians, nor granted religious liberty to the people of Japan, yet there does appear to be a hesitation to proceed further in the policy of persecution. Doubtless the officers of government near the throne feel that it would be impolitic to persecute men for their religious opinions. To persecute Christians now might be detrimental to the hopes of the government."—Zion's Herald.

AS AN Italian work on Assyrian antiquities, lately reviewed in the Academy, repeats the mistake based on Oppert's erroneous translation, in 1857, of the inscription of Nebuchadnezzar, that the confusion of tongues is mentioned by Nebuchadnezzar as the cause of the reason why the Tower of Babel was not completed, it may be well to give a translation of that portion of Nebuchadnezzar's inscription based on the latest authorities. Nebuchadnezzar is speaking of the great tower or temple of seven spheres in Borsippa, west of Babylon, which is generally identified with the Tower of Babel. He says: "I built and completed the temple of the foundation of the earth, the tower of Babylon. With tiles and copper plates I covered the top thereof. Thus saith the king: The temple of the Seven Lights of the Earth, the tower of Borsippa, which an early king had built to the height of forty-two cubits, but had not set up the top of it, had been from ancient days in ruins; and there was no proper drainage of its water. The showers and thunderstorms had washed away its unburned bricks, the tiles of its roof were broken through, the unburned bricks composing its mass were reduced to rubbish. The great god Merodach moved my heart to rebuild it. I did not change its place or alter its foundation. In a month of peace, on an auspicious day, I renewed the unburned stone of the body of it and the tiles of its roof. I raised its walls and renewed its timbers. I inscribed the writing of my name on the cornice of the rebuilt walls. I lifted up my hand to complete it and place upon it its summit. As it was of old, I built its foundation and I set up its summit." This inscription proves that the tower must have had the appearance of an incomplete and ruined building as late as the time of Nebuchadnezzar. But there is no reference to the early builders "without order uttering words," as Oppert once imagined. The ruins are now 153½ feet high.

THE London Times' correspondent at Rome writes: "On the last page of the first number of La Roma Evangelica, a semi-monthly periodical just started, I find advertisements of no less than ten evangelical churches of various denominations now open in Rome. These are the evangelical church in the Vicolo Soderini, with a supplementary establishment in the Piazza Firenzi; the Evangelical Methodist church, the Italian Evangelical church, the Apostolic church of Christ in Trajan's Forum, the Free Christian church, at which Conti and Gavazzi officiate; the Evangelical Conferences in the Via Borgo Vecchio, where Mr. Von Meter had his principal school, which he hopes soon to reopen. The ministers of all these establishments seem to be Italians. Then we have the Chiesa Apostolica di Christo, at which Mr. James Wall officiates; another of the same name, where Messrs. Nelson, Cote and Giojia are the ministers; a Presbyterian church, and a new English church. From a fly-sheet that has been sent to me, and which I am requested to read and pass on, I learn that a 'free social parlor' has been opened in the heart of the foreign quarter of Rome, where English, American and other strangers are invited to pass their evenings, and where 'informal social Christian conferences' are daily held. The Evangelical Methodist committee has purchased a palace in the immediate vicinity of that of the cardinal vicar, and its representative, Mr. Piggott (now in Rome,) has written a letter to a newspaper disclaiming an aggressive or defiant intention, which it seems had been attributed to his society on account of the choice of the situation. Finally, Admiral Fishbourne, also in Rome, and in his capacity of president of the Italian Bible Society, has just published, in a small pamphlet, an address to the Christians of Italy. There are now at least three shops open in Rome for the sale of Bibles in a great variety of languages, and of Protestant religious publications."

By Faith.

If we look at the frequent mention of faith in the Bible we shall find that nearly all great achievements are set down to its account. In that record of notable persons given in the Hebrews, what each one did was by faith. Thus over and over again is it written of the elders, of Abel, Enoch, Noah and the rest, "by faith." Whatever it was that they did or suffered, or whatever they are represented as undertaking or accomplishing, it is, in every instance, "by faith." This faith had direct reference to God. There is a lower aspect of faith as popularly apprehended, in which men are strong in themselves, believe in themselves and in their enterprises, and seem to reach success by dint of a courageous and confident spirit. Frederick the Great and Napoleon were in this sense men of faith, so was Stephen Girard and thousands of other successful men in different pursuits. Self-reliance, natural energy and the promptings of avarice and ambition, when connected with talent, will lead to great achievements. There is, therefore, something very powerful in that confidence which men may have in themselves and in their undertakings, even where, in a religious point of view, they are no better than infidels or atheists.

But the faith of the patriarchs, and of all the illustrious characters celebrated in holy writ, was faith in God. In this it differed from the natural energy and self-reliance which the world understands and appreciates. There is this difference between what men are pleased to call faith and the faith of the Bible: the one has self, nature, circumstances for its object, and self supremely for its end; the other has God for its object, while the end embraces principles which are spiritual and eternal in their nature. Abraham believed God, and it was counted to him for righteousness. So of the entire list of heroes and heroines, of whom the world was not worthy. They did grand things, they lived most sublime lives, they suffered, conquered, died; but not as natural men have lived, suffered, succeeded and triumphed. It was by faith in God, in a personal God, and "as seeing him who is invisible."

Out of their faith in God flowed every stream of influence, and out of it branched forth and blossomed everything which faith embraces. Grace and glory unfolded from it as the tree comes out of the root and stem, and as the flower opens out of the bud. Faith in God is the genus, and all specific forms and objects are embraced in it. Precisely how much of Christ was apprehended by Noah and Moses we cannot tell, but the faith which was in them would have received him when manifested to the world. And when Christ came it was the same faith that took in the divine Son with the Father, and looked savingly to "the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world." In its Christian aspects faith is the same principle of power and of life.—"And the life of faith of the Son of God, who loved me and gave himself for me."

It is noticeable, however, that as Christ comes into prominent view as the object of faith, the love element is constantly associated with it. There may have been much love in the faith of Abraham and of Moses, but it does not appear in the mention of their wonderful faith, nor is it once alluded to in any other instances of faith belonging to the old-time dispensation. When we reach the period of faith in a manifested and crucified Christ, love stands out prominently. Now it is faith which worketh by love, and love constrains to the highest activity and deepest sufferings in the service of God. Always the condition of justification, even as far back as Abel's time, the ground and cause in the death of Christ is clear to the Christian, as it might not always have been to the Old Testament saints. Love is therefore more intense in our faith, or it should be, because we have before us the greatest expression of the divine love to us, and the more active should our faith be because of the love connected with it. Still is all work, all true religious enterprise, all godly living by faith—faith working in a loving way, and from that highest impulse which love supplies. And this direct faith in God and in Christ touches and consecrates all the common affairs of the Christian's life. It is by faith that he stands, by faith that he is pardoned, by faith that all is consecrated, and by faith that he plans, undertakes and labors for Christ.

Ignorance of the Future and Spiritual.

BY J. B. WALKER, D. D.

The prophets and apostles were only officially inspired. They had to pass through a probation and walk by faith, just as other men. St. Paul had desires which God did not grant, because he did not see it best for Paul, or because the desires could not be granted without interfering with the moral freedom of others. It is noteworthy that no interventions of divine power ever take place to invade the laws of spiritual being. Paul was ignorant of his personal future, save that the Spirit gave general intimations that he might expect from the ignorance, the bigotry and malevolence of men, bonds and persecutions in every city. He tells the Philippians that he was waiting to see how his trial at Rome would terminate, and he tells Timothy he did not know whether he would go to Ephesus "shortly," or whether he would "tarry long." No doubt there are various reasons, and good, why a knowledge of the future of this life and of the spiritual state is withheld.

A knowledge of the future of this life would make us most unhappy, unless miraculous power was communicated with the knowledge. If we knew that at such a time we should sustain some great injury to our estate, our health or our reputation, we could not shake off the thought of the impending calamity; it would throw a shadow upon our lives. If we knew the day some loved one would die, how it would haunt and oppress. If we knew that our plans would fail, that losses great and irreparable would befall us, how it would dampen the ardor of enterprise and blight the pleasure of pursuit. Blindness to the future has been kindly made our lot.

A knowledge of the future of our present life would go far toward defeating the great end of our probationary relation. The great purpose of the gospel is to recover our alienated affections. Man's constant aim and constant sin and peril is to be independent of God. This was the sin and ruin of Adam and Eve. To come back to God we must walk by faith and continually trust in God; but absolute knowledge of our future would be incompatible with a life of reliance upon God.

Another reason why, in the present state, a knowledge of spiritual things is not communicated is that in our present state we cannot comprehend spiritual things. Without some analogous apprehension we cannot understand new revelations. If we write our views of the various harmonies of sound to one totally deaf, we give him no idea—he cannot comprehend. If we talk to a blind man of blueness, brownness or grayness, we give him no idea whatever. What is spirit? Who can tell? Who has the slightest conception? To attempt to tell us in our present state would be clearly vain and impossible. Paul, whether in the body or out of the body, could not tell what he heard in paradise—unspeakable, impossible things for man to utter. Now "we know in part; we see through a glass darkly; it doth not yet appear what we shall be;" because in our present state it cannot be otherwise.

Another reason why more information has not been given in regard to the future and the spiritual is, that God has already revealed amply sufficient for all our present needs. In regard to our present state the laws that govern our physical and spiritual being are fully revealed, either in God's works or in his word. And in regard to spiritual things we have Moses and the prophets—the Scriptures; and if we hear not them, neither will we be persuaded though one rose from the dead. No man can conceive or add a new perfection to God. No man can imagine a higher standard of virtue or a brighter example of goodness than we have in the life of Jesus. No man can conceive of stronger motives to prompt to virtue or deter from sin. The Bible is already so large that many will not read it all; and, no matter how much it might be enlarged, it would leave countless possible questions unanswered.

A search into the unrevealed future and spiritual state has been forbidden, because it is an act of distrust toward God, and because it leads from the Creator to the creature, who can neither instruct nor save us.

The Great Question.

Man is a complex being—the physical and intellectual, the material and spiritual. These are closely joined, yet essentially distinct. His one business is to subordinate the lesser to the greater. Now it is abnormally in the ascendant. His first wants are physical, not intellectual; his first assays material, not spiritual. This ascendency of the material over the spiritual was attained in the garden. Appetite was gratified at the expense of principle. Obedience to the essential law of higher being became irksome in the presence of tempting fruit temptingly presented. This first man was representative—a type of man in all ages. In the same way does the material retain the mastery now—through the appetites and passions. The cravings of the lesser, lower are gratified in the presence of and at the expense of the higher nature; nay, more—against its vehement appeals. Yet the physical rules the intellectual, the material the immaterial, the lesser the greater. "And when the woman saw that the tree was good for food, and that it was pleasant to the eyes, and a tree to be desired to make one wise, she took of the fruit." The fall is complete. The unnatural antagonism between the material and spiritual comes to the birth. Now man has appetites. They are natural and necessary to his state. He must eat wholesome food; he must drink pure water. He has intellectual appetites. So he has spiritual appetites. They are normally co-ordinate powers, each to act in its sphere. When the lower is subordinate to the higher there is no antagonism—there is harmony. But when he seeks the lower, to the neglect of the higher, the enmity begins, the conflict rages; and that which was designed a blessing becomes a curse. The material and spiritual cross blades. The animal nature is to be fed, but not at the expense of the spiritual—not on illegitimate food, as in the Garden of Eden. Such feeding may give temporary ease and prosperity, but it is only temporary. Pain, disgust, cupty satiety eventually succeed. Therefore the appetite demanding forbidden pasturage is an unhealthy one. There is food sufficient to meet all legitimate demands, and more easy of access too, for the forbidden fruit is "in the midst." "Of all these trees thou mayst freely eat." Now the eating of this forbidden fruit is irreligion, unbelief, the neglect of spiritual things—is the giving of time, thought, energy, talent to worldly considerations. It is the seeking and enjoying worldly, purely material things supremely. In a word, it is exalting the temporal and perishing over the spiritual and eternal—the subjugation of the higher to the lower nature. Here begins the antagonism. That even which is absolutely necessary becomes the occasion of sin; for the rule is: "Whether you eat or drink, it is to be done with an eye single to the glory of God." The unspiritual fall short of this line. When the animal predominates the eating will be simply to the maintenance of the animal—simply because the grosser nature (animal appetite,) held in common with other animals, demands it; and not that the body may continue a healthy, strong abode of the spirit, for the soul to labor in and glorify God. We ask: Where is the difference, then, between man, thus living by his animal appetites, and the ordinary animal upon which he looks down? The only difference is this: Man becomes the more complete animal, as he has intellect and reason, far above instinct, to direct him in animal acquisitions. Herein the antagonism continues. The temporal burdens, pains and curses; whereas, if properly subjugated, it would be as great a blessing in its kind as the chiefest of spiritual gifts. Hence "the great question:" "What shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul?" What? A strong negative! Not only no profit, but brings an incalculable loss. In one sense the world is gained when the animal appetite is satiated. In slumberous ease digestion proceeds. But what gain, what profit?

Oh! there is supreme, consummate folly in thus animalizing life—seeking the perishable to the neglect of the imperishable; in gratifying the mortal and dwarfing the immortal; rejoicing in a moment's uncertain, transient light, and gaining an eternity of darkness.

"What profit?" This is jumping from a precipice for a mite, when glittering diamonds lie at the feet.

Temperance.—No. II.

The position the present writer occupies in life enables him to see a good deal of all kinds of society. From this position I see a disturbing element at work—an element whose disturbing qualities are continually growing and spreading. The thing is at work and doing mischief everywhere. We see the disastrous effects in the legislative enactments of the country's law-makers, in the clouded intellect of the barrister, in the biased ruling of the judge. We see this evil putting a grave suspicion upon the opinion of the physician, and placing errors in the ledger of the merchant. We see it unsteadying the brawny arm of the smith, and dimming the correct eye of the mechanic. Wherever we go, to whatever point we look, there stands this evil spirit, breathing into the faces of young and old a breath more withering and deadly than the hot siroccos of Sahara. We shall look in vain to find any good in this thing. We see that its tendency "is evil, only evil, and that continually."

We will look at some of the workings of this spirit. Here is a beautiful family circle. The current of love flows around that hearthstone without a ripple to disturb its surface. Under that roof domestic happiness waves her scepter without a rival. Family peace cements the bonds of confidence. The father is noble, generous and kind. The mother is patient, cheerful, trusting and hopeful. The children are happy and contented. This evil spirit is introduced into this family. He brings the best of references. Legislators and lawyers, physicians and merchants, farmers and mechanics, teachers and clergymen, secular and religious newspapers, all indorsed him. He came as the panacea for trouble—as the curer of heartaches, as the balm for physical ills, as the bearer of joy! But what a blight came over that happy home! Soon unkind words began to grate harshly on ears accustomed only to "love's soft tones." Strife and divisions broke the bands of confidence. Domestic happiness took her flight. Family peace was frightened from the hearthstone. The bitter, unavailing tear scalded the cheek of the once happy mother. The father reeled home from the tippling-shop, full of the spirit of the infernal regions. Here is a beautiful home in ruins. Here is a family whose prospects have been blighted, whose hopes have been crushed, whose love has been consumed, whose happiness has been destroyed! Here is a loving wife upon whose heart has been laid the burden of an unbearable woe! Here are children who can never look back into the past without shame! Here is a noble man being dragged to the pit by this spirit who came under his roof so well recommended! We see no good in the workings of this evil.

Look at another life-picture. See the life-painter putting it upon the canvas. The first touches of the pencil are as beautiful as the blushes of aurora when she opens the dawn by unveiling her glowing cheek. There are hues as brilliant as those in which nature dips her brush when she gives the finishing touches to her magnificent sunsets. There are colorings as soft as tints of moonlight on a bank of roses. There are bright lines pointing to fame and glory. But as the picture progresses the pencil begins to tremble, and the crooked lines begin to appear. The shadings grow darker and heavier and more dismal. Clouds of blackness chase each other, and now overtake each other and commingle their dark dyes, and the picture is finished, with not one ray of light to relieve the gloom. Let me explain this picture. I saw a young man start out in life. He was my personal friend. He started poor, but by the generosity of a friend he was enabled to start as a lawyer in a neighboring State. Endowed by nature with an intellect of the first order, and possessed of popular and winning manners, and an affability that could adjust him perfectly to any circumstances and to any circle, he rose rapidly in public favor. With an eloquence seldom equaled at the bar or on the hustings, he was listened to by all classes with rapt attention. All the avenues to public favor were open to him, and by the force of his intellect and legal lore in a few short years he pushed himself up to the position of vice-chancellor of his State. But this evil spirit, in one of its most beautiful disguises, crossed his path and he was enamored—charmed, bewitched, poisoned to death. He did not turn away his eyes from the fascinating tempter, and he "bit like a serpent and stung like an adder." We see no good in the workings of this evil.

New Orleans District Conference.

In another column will be found some account of the New Orleans District Conference, which convened at Baton Rouge on the fourth and adjourned on the seventh instant. The steamer Pargoud took the brethren up from the city at half fare, and the Robert E. Lee brought us back at the same rate. Many thanks to the gentlemanly officers of the Pargoud and the Lee. The District Conference was a very pleasant one. This was the universal testimony of the entertainers and the entertained. It was a time of refreshing, and it was hard to break up and separate when the time came to adjourn. President Andrews, from Centenary, was with us, and contributed not a little to the interest of the occasion by his talk in conference and by his Sunday labors. The district owes Centenary College at least a dozen new students for this visit. The laymen in attendance were few, but the quality of those who were there in some sort compensated. Such men as Magruder, Fuqua and others are a host in themselves, and to be weighed rather than counted. There were large congregations and unctuous preaching. The social intercourse with this delightful people was pleasant exceedingly. Bro. Goodwyn, the pastor, seemed to enjoy the meeting, and helped to make it enjoyable to the rest of us. The church appeared much revived. The chief regrets were that the conference could not continue, or at least come back again next year. Never did Baton Rouge look brighter or more beautiful than in this season of flowers, and never was a more graceful hospitality dispensed.

Delegates elect to the Annual Conference—J. O. Fuqua, W. H. N. Magruder, W. H. Foster, J. L. Dunnica. Alternates—S. K. Russ, W. H. Goodale, Rev. J. C. Miller, Edward Booth.

The next District Conference is to meet at the Carondelet Street church, New Orleans.

The following persons were elected trustees of the Lake-shore camp ground: W. H. Foster, J. L. Dunnica, R. L. Moore, Philip Hallaran, Dr. J. J. Lyons, Dr. J. W. Adams, J. H. Keller, Benj. O. L. Rayne, Christian Gerdlug.

IT IS WITH GREAT SADNESS that we announce the death of Dr. B. H. Moss. He died, at his residence in this city, on the seventh instant, aged fifty-five years. He was a native of South Carolina, and came to New Orleans twenty-five years ago. He has been for many years one of our first physicians, and among our most prominent and influential citizens. From the time of his arrival he has been identified with the Southern Methodist Church, and especially with the Carondelet Street charge of New Orleans. He was most efficient as trustee and steward, and the interests of the church were ever near to his heart. Although a physician of very extensive practice, he was rarely absent from the regular weekly meetings of the official board, and nearly always in his seat at the hours of service in the church. A most urbane gentleman, he was a Christian of great purity of character and most exemplary in his life. His career as a professional man was eminently successful, but in the midst of prosperity and wealth his uniform kindness, benevolence and generosity abounded. Nearly two months ago Dr. Moss sustained an attack of paralysis, under which he finally succumbed. A suitable obituary will be prepared for publication as soon as practicable.

THE General Conference of the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church in America, which recently convened in Augusta, Georgia, elected three new bishops, to wit: Joseph A. Beebe, L. H. Holsey and Isaac Lane. The Chronicle and Sentinel gives the following items concerning them:

Joseph A. Beebe was born in Fayetteville, North Carolina; ordained deacon by Bishop J. J. Clinton, of the A. M. E. Zion Church, in 1865; ordained elder in 1866, and joined the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church in America in 1871. He is at present presiding elder of the Edenton district. Age, forty years.

L. H. Holsey was born in Sparta, Georgia; ordained deacon by Bishop Pierce, of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, in 1869, and ordained elder in the latter part of the same year. He is a bright mulatto, quite intelligent, and aged thirty-three years. He is at present pastor of Trinity church in this city, and is widely popular among his race.

Isaac Lane was born in Madison county, Tennessee; was ordained deacon by Bishop Paine, of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, in 1866, and ordained elder in 1867. His age is thirty-nine years, and he is at present pastor of Jackson station, Jackson, Tennessee.

A STARTLING INNOVATION.—A party of gentlemen, by favor of the official authorities at Pekin, have left China for England to purchase the rolling stock and all necessary material for the construction of a hundred miles of railroad in the celestial empire.

Our Work in Mexico.

We are gratified to note that the movement to establish missions of the Methodist Episcopal Church South in Mexico is receiving the hearty approval of our people. We take the following letter from the Richmond Christian Advocate:

OUR WORK IN MEXICO.

DR. BENNETT: Bishop Keener telegraphed from the City of Mexico to the Baltimore Conference, then in session: "I have bought a church in this city," etc. When this was stated by Bishop Pierce, five brethren gave $100 to help to pay for it. I doubt not the sum would have been much larger if it had been put to the Conference and pressed. The Conference was thrilled with this intelligence, for there is much more in it than the mere fact of the purchase or erection of a church. It is a grand fact to know that in the capital of a nation, hitherto inaccessible to us as Protestants, we have gone. Not only so; but we have, under the very eaves of their great cathedral, and surrounded by churches and priests, convents and nuns, monasteries and all the vast machinery of Roman power and propagandism, planted a Southern Methodist church, and, in the name of God, set up our banners. The announcement should send a thrill through every Christian heart. Why? Because it is another added link in the grand chain of God's great purpose to rule the nations of the earth in righteousness. It is "the handful of corn in the top of the mountain." It must and will spread and germinate until the whole land shall be covered with the knowledge of God. Here is a chance, brethren, for "revelling" around, if not "in the halls of the Montezumas." I tried once, years ago, the inside "revelings," and found it a very poor business, and not by any means what it was supposed to be by those who remained on this side of the Gulf of Mexico. But I am now ready to rejoice at the prospect of an invasion of Mexico of a very different character from any that has preceded it—an invasion of peace and good will, of light to the benighted, of life to the dead.

Some of our people seem to be alarmed lest the poor old man of the Vatican should come or send and take this American continent for himself and his, and bring us under the iron rule of popery. I doubt not he is very willing for such an arrangement. But there is a lion in the way. Liberated mind is across the path. Enlightened conscience, quickened by the Spirit of God, confronts his emissaries. The spirit of inquiry after truth, that now pulsates in every Roman Catholic country, and that is causing the very foundations of error to tremble, stands before him. In a word, God and his church are here. God must withdraw and his church must die before the powers of darkness can prevail. But, on the contrary, while they plan, let us work, and while the Pope sends one emissary here, let us put ten Christian ministers in the home field, and send ten into his own dominions. And to no better place can we send, and at no more vital point can we strike, than at the very heart of this sister American republic. Bishop Keener means business, and so do others of our Bishops with whom I have conversed on this subject. They will want men and means. They say they must have both, and when they say they are fearfully in earnest. You know the temper of our preachers and people. Can they get them?

We have one appointed to this work from Texas—Bro. Hernandez, a Mexican, educated, converted and preaching. Bro. John, of the Texas Christian Advocate, urges that each of the other four Conferences send one and support him. How do you like that plan? Very good, so far as it goes. If Texas can do this, and she can, why cannot Virginia send one at least, and Tennessee one or more, and North Carolina one or more? And, so of all the Conferences. But stop, say some, these men must be educated in the language before they go. That sounds well, but I hope we may not make the mistake being made by our Northern brethren, of educating men in New York and Massachusetts for duties in Mexico. After they have learned in college to read the Spanish language, as there taught, they will find it of but little service to them when they come in contact with the provincialisms of Mexico. Besides, the manners and customs of the people with whom we are to be associated are almost as important as the language. I believe a man fitted for this work will learn more solid, useful things to the furtherance of his purposes in six months, by studying there on the ground, than he can learn in three times six away from there. I do hope, if we found a school for the prophets, it will be in the land where they are to prophesy, and in the spoken language of the people they are to bless. This is my notion. AMIGO.

MARCH 17, 1873.

THE EXCELLENT ADDRESS of Rev. W. E. M. Linfield, made to the Sunday school during the meeting of the Mississippi Conference at Brandon, last December, will appear in next week's ADVOCATE. Bro. Linfield, in a private note, speaks most hopefully of the work in the bounds of the Brookhaven district. He says:

"Church work on our district is advancing. A general improvement is everywhere apparent. The spirit of the preachers is good, and a 'smile is on the face of the church.'"

ANOTHER CABLE.—The Great Eastern has on board two thousand five hundred and sixty-seven miles of telegraph cable, to be laid across the Atlantic between Great Britain and Halifax in June. It is expected to be in working order in July.

FLORIDA ships weekly to Cuba a thousand head of cattle.

Books and Periodicals.

AN AMERICAN DICTIONARY OF THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE. By Noah Webster, LL. D. Thoroughly revised, and greatly enlarged and improved, by Chauncey A. Goodrich, D. D., late professor of rhetoric and oratory, and also professor of the pastoral charge in Yale College, and Noah Porter, D. D., LL. D., president of Yale College. Springfield, Massachusetts: Published by G. & C. Merriam, 1873.

From the publishers, through R. J. Harp, of our Depository, we have received a copy of "the great unabridged," with name, date and everything handsomely put on the back in gold letters. This is the latest and completest edition, pictorial, and contains everything that a dictionary well can. Our old dictionary, about worn out by twenty-five years' use and abuse, though the best in its day, is not comparable to this of 1873. By pleeing them side by side we are surprised to find how immeasurably superior is this last edition. The appendix, containing explanatory and pronouncing vocabularies, pictorial illustrations and other valuable matters, is a most important feature of the work. Every professional man should have it ever at his elbow, and every family should have a copy. No one can afford to be without it as a constant companion for reference and consultation. Nothing short of the latest unabridged will do. R. J. Harp, of the Depository, 110 and 112 Camp street, keeps a large stock, and can supply the work on the most reasonable terms.

BAPTISM IN A NUTSHELL; by Charles Taylor, M. D., D. D., is a sixteen-page tract, issued by our Publishing House at Nashville. It is first-rate, and about as much as we should ever cure to read on the subject if it were not for the Philistines. We do wish that baptism might be put in a nutshell, instead of some other hard shells, and kept therein world without end.

WE HAVE RECEIVED the Southern Methodist Home Altar, devoted to Christian perfection, published at McMinnville, Tennessee; the Sunday Magazine and Good Things for March, both excellent numbers of these popular magazines; the American Sunday School Worker, the American Educational Monthly, Morton's Monthly Home and School, Philips' Southern Farmer and the Southern Cultivator for April; Good Health and Mental Bliss for April contains the usual amount of valuable information on medical topics.

OLD AND NEW for April contains the following: Old and New; Scrope, or the Lost Library; What the Oak Thinks; Concerning Language and Gold; Country Sights and Sounds; My Time, and What I've Done with It; Red Tape; The Abuse of Reading; Murray's Little Sister; The Two Monks; Some Cats I have Known; Spain a Republic; Before Westminster. The Examiner—American Journalism; Germany and France as Military Powers; Other New Books. Record of Progress—General Di Cesnola's Cyprian Antiquities; Better Government for Ireland.

"God's Men" Wanted in China.

A Mr. Cooper, an English gentleman of culture and enterprise, undertook, in 1867, to go from Shanghai westward through China to India. But he found the people of Thibet so hostile that he turned southward to the headwaters of the Irrawadi, hoping to reach Prome, eight hundred miles distant. At the first village to which he came on the Irrawadi he was brought to the chief, a noble, athletic and almost gigantic specimen of the mountaineers of that region. The chief at once said: "You are a white man. Are you one of God's men?" Mr. Cooper, astonished to hear such a question asked in such a place, replied a little evasively; he was not, he acknowledged, in any evangelical sense, a Christian. The chief went on to say: "If you are one of God's men I want you to tell me and my people about God. Some of my people have heard from white men down the river about the great God, and I want to know about him myself, that I may become one of God's men." Mr. Cooper told him, as well as he could, the general truths of Christianity, though painfully conscious that he was not himself familiar with them; but the chief did not seem fully satisfied, and, finding that the traveler was desirous of descending the river, he sent him in a boat, with a delegation of his own people, liberally supplying his needs, to Prome, and forwarded an urgent request, both by Mr. Cooper and his own people, to our missionaries there, to send him a teacher who could tell both him and his tribe how they might become "God's men."—Christian Intelligencer.

BEST AND OLDEST FAMILY MEDICINE.—SANFORD'S LIVER INVIGORATOR, a purely Vegetable Cathartic and Tonic, for Dyspepsia, Constipation, Debility, Sick Headache, Bilious Attacks and all derangements of liver, stomach and bowels. Ask your druggist for it. Beware of imitations mh27 1yeow

BUSINESS NOTICES.

PHYSICIANS all admit that quinine only effects a temporary suspension of the attacks of Fever and Ague, unless its use is accompanied by a reliable anti-bilious medicine.

The testimony of grateful thousands establishes beyond a doubt that Dr. TUTT'S LIVER PILLS, followed by quinine, are a positive and permanent cure for Chills and Fever and all bilious diseases.

COMMON SENSE.—Our bodies need repairing and strengthening as much as the houses we live in. Constant use gradually wears them out, and we must renew them when they exhibit signs of decay. In Dr. Tutt's Liver Pills the dyspeptic, the bilious, the debilitated and the nervous will find the most genial restorative ever offered to the suffering invalid.

Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Headache, Pain in the Shoulders, Dizziness, Sour Eructations of the Stomach, Bad Taste in the Mouth, Bilious Attacks, Palpitation of the Heart, Pain in the region of the Kidneys, Tightness of the Chest, despondency and gloom and forebodings of evil are all the offsprings of Dyspepsia. For these complaints Dr. Tutt's Liver Pills have no equal. A single dose will convince any one. ap10 1t

The Child's Corner.

LITTLE LUCY.

BY DR. WILLIAM H. HOLCOMBE.

Little Lucy, sweet and mild,
Half a fairy, half a child,
Slowly, softly laid away
Underneath the fearful clay:
Kisses on her little brow:
Ah, the angels kiss her now!
Roses on her little bosom—
Her sweet sell a broken blossom!

Oh, the world is cold and lone!
Little Lucy dead and gone!
Little playthings put away—
Things for tears, and not for play;
Little cradle rocked no more—
All the little prattling o'er.

Kiss her—leave her, fold away
Underneath the fearful clay:
Leave the roses on her bosom!
Kiss and leave the broken blossom!
Anee—Lucy, sweet and mild!
Beauteous angels, love my child!

The Ship of the Desert.

This is the name given in the East to the camel, which is one of the greatest blessings the bountiful Creator has bestowed upon the oriental nations. Designed for a country where it can find little nourishment, it is extremely spare in the whole of its formation. The head is small; the body covered with a soft and rather long hair of a reddish color. Its legs and thighs seem to be deprived of every muscle but such as are wanted for the purposes of motion; and its withered frame seems furnished only with the vessels and tendons necessary to hold it together. The camel is provided, moreover, with a strong jaw, that he may grind the hardest food; but, lest he should eat too much, his stomach is contracted, so that, like cows and sheep, he is obliged to chew the end. There are two toes on his hoof, which, however, is not fully divided. He has often to cross deserts of loose and deep sand, in which a hoof quite divided would have sunk too far, while the one which he has, being entire in the under part, enables him to move over the surface with more ease. His foot is lined with a lump of flesh, which fits him only for a dry, level and sandy soil.

Without any sort of defense against his enemies, the camel is obviously intended for a domesticated state, like that in which the sheep and some other animals live; but the wise Creator has placed his home in the depth of vast deserts, where the want of vegetation can attract no game, and where, in consequence, voracious creatures, such as lions, tigers, leopards and wolves, can have no inducement to prowl. The fugitives from Babel found this invaluable beast of burden wandering on the edge of the wilderness, and by its assistance peopled the most barren regions on the face of the globe. No animal employed by man for the purposes of traffic equals it in size, in strength, in activity; and in docility, patience and power of endurance it is surpassed by none. Like the ass, it is pleased with the coarsest food, and a very little even of that satisfies its moderate appetite. The labor and fatigue which it is capable of enduring, on the poorest and scantiest means of subsistence, almost exceed belief. It will travel four or five days without water; while half a gallon of beans and barley, or else a few balls made of the flour, will sustain it a whole day. Before drinking it disturbs the water with its feet, and then, after the manner of pigeons, takes several successive draughts.

In traveling over the deserts of Arabia a full-sized camel will carry a weight of more than a thousand pounds; he receives this load kneeling, but if his driver lays more on him he refuses to rise till the burden is lessened.

The animal has sometimes been yoked to a chariot, and forced to contend in the race. The Emperor Nero sent to certain games chariots drawn by four camels; and another Roman Emperor, Heliogabalus, is reported to have amused himself in his private circus with chariots drawn by the same number. To this custom the Prophet Isaiah alludes, in his prophecy of the fall of Babylon: "He saw a chariot with a couple of horsemen, a chariot of asses and a chariot of camels."

In time of war, too, these useful creatures have been pressed into the service of conflicting hosts; they then groaned under the cumbrous baggage of oriental armies, or mingled in the tumult of battle. Many of the Amalekites, who burned Ziklag (First Samuel xxx, 1,) were mounted in this manner, for we are told (verse 17) that not a man of the whole army escaped the furious onset of David, "save four hundred young men, which rode upon camels and fled." The Arabians used to set two warriors upon each animal, back to back, of whom one opposed the advancing enemy, and the other repelled the pursuer. All the Arabians in the army of Xerxes, the ancient historian Herodotus says, were mounted on camels that equaled in speed the swiftest horses. The people called Bactrians, from the name of the province in Persia in which they lived, also fought in the same manner; and the Parthians, in their wars with the Romans, threw incessant showers of arrows from their horses and camels on the legions of their terrible foe.

Mounted on this "ship of the desert," the traveler in the East pursues his way over vast and trackless regions with ease and safety. For his convenience a couple of round baskets are slung on each side with covers, which hold all his necessaries, and between which he is seated. Sometimes two long chairs, like cradles, are hung on each side, with a covering, in which he may sit, or, stretched at his ease, resign himself to sleep, without interrupting his journey. These covered baskets or chairs are the "camel's furniture," where Rachel put the images which she stole from her father.—Genesis xxxi, 34.

That species called the dromedary is chiefly remarkable for its swiftness; the Arabs say that "it will run over as much ground in one day as one of their best horses will do in eight or ten." No doubt this is an oriental exaggeration, but the Prophet Jeremiah had good reason (Jeremiah ii, 23) to call it the "swift dromedary." Dr. Shaw, who traveled much in the East, had several opportunities of verifying the estimate of the Arabs in relation to the speed at which their "ships" can perform a journey. The sheik, or chief, who conducted the party to Mount Sinai, rode a camel of this kind, and would often favor them with a display of its abilities—"he would leave their caravan, reconnoiter another just in view, and return to them in less than a quarter of an hour." The dromedary has but one hump on its back; the common camel has two.

These creatures are not only of great importance in the East as beasts of burden, but also as a means of subsistence in the inhospitable desert. Their flesh and their milk supply their owners with food, and their hair is woven into stuffs for his clothing. This hair is not shorn off, but is plucked off about the time it is naturally shed. It was raiment of this kind that John the Baptist wore, made of the shaggy hair of which we have above spoken.

When a caravan of camels arrives at a resting or baiting-place they kneel, and, the cords sustaining the load being untied, the bales slip down on each side. They generally sleep on their bellies, crouching beneath the bales they have carried; the load is therefore easily replaced when they recommence their journey. Those which are used for speed alone are capable of traveling sixty or even ninety miles a day.—New York Observer.

The Boy that Could not Afford to Swear.

A boy stood near the entrance of a large hotel with a box of blacking and a pair of brushes in his hand, thus showing to the passers-by that he was ready to black their boots for a copper. Patiently he waited, as one after another passed by without heeding his proffered services, until at last two young men, fashionably dressed, and each with a cigar in his mouth, stopped before him.

"Here, Boots," said one rudely, "let me see if you are master of your trade;" and he put his foot on the boy's knee. Charlie, the bootblack, worked with a will, and soon the polish grew under his skillful touch. The two young men amused themselves meanwhile by trying to frighten the boy, urging him to hurry, threatening to cane him, and swearing profanely at every other word. Charlie stood it as long as he could; one boot was finished, and the other blacked, preparatory to polishing, when he quickly rose and prepared to put up his brushes.

"What now?" asked the young man.

"I would rather not finish them, sir," replied Charlie.

"Not finish them!" said the gentleman, with an oath; "then you don't see the color of my money."

"I don't want your money, sir, and I will not stand here and listen to your swearing;" and he turned to move away.

"Let the boy alone, and have him finish his work," said the other youth.

"Very well! Here, boy, finish this boot, and tell me what you mean. A bootblack afraid of swearing! This is a good joke!"

"I am afraid of it, sir; I don't want to hear it, or go where it is, and I won't work for a man who swears at me."

"And you want to make me believe that you don't swear? Why, there is not one of your trade that wouldn't both swear and steal."

"O, you are much mistaken; many of the boys neither steal nor swear. I am sure nothing could make me steal, and I cannot afford to swear."

"Cannot afford to swear! Come, now, do you mean to say that it costs anything to swear?"

"Yes, sir; it would cost me more than a million of pounds."

"What, a million of pounds! In what way is your money invested?"

"In the pearl of great price. If I lost it my soul would be the forfeit; so, you see, I cannot afford to swear. My Sunday school teacher teaches me that it is wicked, and my mother forbids me to do it. I should disobey all of them if I did it, and lose my soul; so, you see, sir, I cannot afford to swear."

"The boy is right," said the young man who had listened to the conversation in silence. "But how happens it that you are different from your companions? They do not think it a sin to swear; and I suppose some of them go to Sunday school too."

"Perhaps they have no mother," said Charlie, "or not such a good one as mine."

"Well, here's your money, Boots. I suppose I do swear a little, but I am only one out of many."

"But always one more, sir. And then the little boys hear you, and they see you dressed up so fine they think it must be smart, and they learn to swear too. I thought so myself at first. Thank you, sir," as he took the money, which was silver instead of copper; "and please, sir, do not swear any more."

"I will think of it," said the youth as he passed on; and he did think of it, though he felt rather sore at learning his duty from a shoeblack.

HOW TO BECOME A CHRISTIAN.—Hattie and Donald were looking one day at some silk-worms which were feeding on some mulberry leaves in a little box which they called "Silky's work-room." Their mother had told them that, as the pretty golden-winged butterflies came from the crawling caterpillars, so their new bodies would one day come forth bright and beautiful from their dead ones, which would first molder in the grave. Donald said:

"It's very wonderful, Hattie; and O! I do wish I were a Christian."

Hattie earnestly gazed into his eyes as she replied:

"Donald, it is very easy to become a Christian. A great many little children come to Christ. All you have to do is to knock, and the door opens."

Hattie was right. It is easy for a child who really wishes to be a Christian to be one. Jesus says to all: "Ask and it shall be given you, seek and ye shall find, knock and it shall be opened unto you."

Try it, my dear child. Knock. Jesus listens, and waits to open the door—that is, to make you his disciple.

Farm, Garden and Household.

Thoughts for the Month.

COTTON-PLANTING.

The yield of a crop is very largely dependent upon the stand secured. Again, success often depends upon getting a stand at a particular time. A difference of a few days or a week, in time of planting, often makes a wonderful difference of results; especially is this true in the case of cotton, and as this crop will be planted during the present month, we venture a few suggestions as to time and mode of planting, for the benefit of young farmers more especially. First—time for planting cotton. The earlier the better. Plant just as soon as the danger of frost is over. Our observation is that taking the average of seasons early-planted cotton fruits better than late-planted. A certain degree of maturity (which age alone can give) is a condition precedent to fruiting. A stalk must be formed before the fruit can be. At first the forces of the plant are all directed to making weed; afterward these are diverted into fruit-making channels. But nature will have its course, and time must be given for the first to complete its work ere the tide turns.

Certain peculiarities of our climate must also be considered in this connection—drought rarely fails to occur in July or August. The result is a suspension of vegetable activity—growth and fruiting are both arrested. Previous to this the conditions for making fruit are generally favorable. With an early start, therefore, a good "bottom" crop is almost certain, much more so than either a "middle" or "top" crop. As young plants are not so much affected by drought as old ones, a very late-planted crop may sometimes pass unchecked through a drought and make a good late crop, but the chances are inferior to those of an early-planted one.

MODE OF PLANTING.

Two dangers to be avoided—lack of sufficient moisture to make the seed germinate, and the formation of a crust which may prevent the young plant from getting above the surface. April is often very dry, and unless the seed is planted immediately after a shower it frequently fails to come up well. The old plan of opening a furrow with a plow, sowing seed and listing on them with two furrows, and afterward knocking off the top of list with a board, just as the seed is ready to come up, is one of the surest methods of securing a stand in dry weather. The objection to it is the large amount of time and labor involved. As formerly practiced it required four hands and three mules to each row—one to open the furrow, one to drop the seed and two to cover. Few can afford to adopt such an expensive process. The "cotton-planter," which opens the furrow, drops the seed and covers it, makes one hand and one mule do the work of four hands and three mules under the old plan described above. But, while thus saving labor, it does not insure against drought.

To remedy this defect we made the suggestion in a former number, and repeat it here, to cut off the top of the bed with a drag or smoother just in advance of the "planter," so as to have a moist, fresh surface in which to plant. Seed will rarely fail to come up if thus planted, and the increase of labor required will be quite small. A smoother five feet wide will dress off two beds at a time, and, not weighted, can be drawn by one horse. The whole labor, therefore, under this plan, would be one hand and a half and one horse and [illegible] each row.

A suggestion in the connection was made by a correspondent last year which struck us so favorably we beg to repeat it here. It is, where the top of the bed is not cut off, to place a board behind the plow-hoe—that is, between the plow-hoe and the helve, having the point of the former project just enough beyond the board to open a furrow of desired depth. This arrangement not only secures uniformity and gauge of depth (very important matters,) but frees the top of the bed from clods and removes the crust, if one has formed. It also throws on each side the dry top earth, and leaves fresh, moist earth with which to cover the seed.

ROLLING THE SEED.

For reasons discussed above, it is highly desirable that cotton should come up quickly after being planted, otherwise the ground might dry off too soon for it to appear above the surface until it rains again. Wetting the seed and keeping it in moderate bulk for a day and then rolling it facilitates greatly its germination. Rolling is so easily done with the "barrel-roller," described in former volumes of the Cultivator, that no one need be deterred from doing it by the labor required. In addition to making the seed come up before the ground can dry off, rolling economizes the seed and insures regularity of distribution. The addition of some fertilizer, while the rolling is being done, is also of great value in giving an impetus to the young plant. Peruvian guano is the best for this purpose. It may be mixed with some plaster—say two of guano to one of plaster—and just as much used as will adhere to the seed. The addition of superphosphate would be desirable were it not for the danger of killing the seed thereby. Quite small quantities of an acid phosphate in contact with cotton-seed will entirely destroy their germinating power. Bear that in mind. Pure Peruvian guano used in rolling will not kill cotton-seed, but superphosphates will.

Cotton-planting being finished, and corn hardly ready for its first working, time will be afforded to look after the "side" crops, such as sweet potatoes, drilled corn, millet, etc.

MILLET.

Millet stands drought and neglect better than corn, but, like it, requires rich soils to produce best results. Sow in drills the same distance apart as corn—a half bushel to one bushel of seed per acre will be ample. The "cat-tail" is one of the best varieties. Southern Cultivator.

COTTON GINS, TIES, ETC.

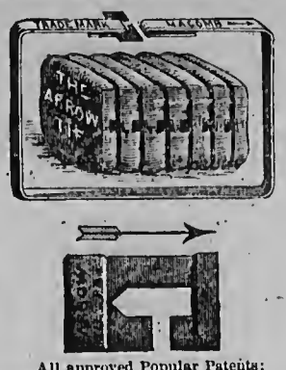
THE DUROIS FLANGE COTTON GIN.

By the Flange the Cotton is kept in contact with the teeth on each side, until the fiber is taken from the seed, without allowing them to be taken up by the return motion of the roll, as in other Gins.



The Flange prevents hulls, stems, sticks and hard substances from being cut, consequently making a better sample out of roughly-picked cotton than other Gins.

We have sold more from this point than any agency of any other Gin for the crop of 1872-73; consequently we can furnish more and better references, and they are warranted to come up to all that is said of them.

We keep constantly on hand all sizes, from 40 to 80-SAW STANDS, left or right. Price, $7 per Saw.

IMPROVED

EAGLE COTTON GINS.

The great popularity of the EAGLE COTTON GINS is established from the well-known fact that they are the most reliable, strongest and best built Cotton Gins ever made. The Eagle Cotton Gin runs lighter than any other gin, thus having a great advantage for planters who wish to run by horse power. All the numerous planters who use the Eagle Cotton Gin will certify to the fact that when their cotton is sent to market it always brings the highest market price, as no other gin can produce a finer or a better sample of cotton than the Eagle Cotton Gins. Over seventeen thousand of the Eagle Cotton Gins have been made and sold. During a period of twenty years the undersigned has had the agency of the Eagle Cotton Gin in New Orleans. He has never had a gin returned or rejected out of the immense number sold. The saw cylinders of all the Eagle Cotton Gins are twelve inches in diameter, which is two inches larger than most other kinds of gins, thus giving our forty-saw gin more teeth, and they are more than equal to the fifty-saw gins of other makers, who use only a ten-inch cylinder, and the same great advantage of the twelve-inch cylinder in larger-sized gins can be easily estimated. Planters who wish a reliable cotton gin, with an established reputation, can purchase an Eagle Cotton Gin with a certainty that they are not making an untried experiment, but will obtain a cotton gin which is indorsed by the oldest and largest planters in the country as the best in use. A large stock of the Eagle Cotton Gins are always kept on sale in New Orleans, ready for immediate shipment. Planters should be particular to state if they want right or left-hand motion gins.

WASHING MACHINES, PORTABLE ENGINES, ETC.

J. C. TILTON, PITTSBURG, PA.

WOMAN'S FRIEND AND STEAM WASHER

ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND SOLD.

WILL CLEANSE YOUR CLOTHES WITHOUT RUBBING.

EVERY ONE SOLD IS FULLY WARRANTED.

NO FLUIDS OR EXTRA SOAP USED.

IT CONSUMES LESS SOAP, LESS TIME AND LESS FUEL THAN THE USUAL method. It saves Labor, Wear and Tear, and the Annoyance of Wash-day. It requires no attention while the process of cleansing goes on. It will do the Washing of the Family while you are eating breakfast and doing up dishes.

Steam has long been known as the most powerful agent in removing dirt, grease and stains from clothing, and bleaching them white. Paper-makers have for many years used steam in cleaning and bleaching their rags, and they succeed in making, by its agency, the whitest picking from the gutter perfectly pure and white. Until the invention of the STEAM WASHER or WOMAN'S FRIEND, although often attempted, no method had been discovered of applying Steam directly to the clothing, which could be used in a portable manner for domestic purposes. The WOMAN'S FRIEND washes without labor. It will do the washing of an ordinary family in from thirty minutes to an hour. The STEAM WASHER is superior to all other devices for the following reasons:

1. It does its awo work, thereby saving a large portion of the time usually taken in a family.
2. It uses much less soap than is required by any other method.
3. It requires no attention whatever while the process of cleaning is going on. A lady can do her washing while she is eating her breakfast and doing up the breakfast dishes.
4. Clothing wears double the time, washed in this Washer, that it will washed by a machine, or by hand-labor or a washboard.
5. Lace Curtains and all fine fabrics are washed in a superior manner. For Flannels this Washer is most desirable, as it will not full them, as a machine or hand-rubbing does. All fabrics, from the finest lace to a bed-blanket, can be washed perfectly and with ease without the rubbing-board.

IT IS TRULY A LABOR AND CLOTHES-SAVING INVENTION.

READ THE FOLLOWING TESTIMONIALS:

NEW ORLEANS, LA., January 16, 1873.

This is to certify that I have used the Steam Washer sold by E. B. Hayes, General Agent, and fully indorse all he claims for it, having used it four or five weeks.

NEW ORLEANS, LA., February 5, 1873.

MR. E. B. HAYES: After a thorough test of your Steam Washer, or Woman's Friend, I pronounce it the most wonderful invention of the age. It was with much difficulty that I succeeded in getting my washerwoman to try it, being opposed to washing machines generally; but she is perfectly delighted with this, and I can cheerfully recommend it to every family.

(Signed) MRS. W. W. CARRE, 360 Rampart St., corner Clio.

NEW ORLEANS, February 4, 1873.

MR. E. B. HAYES, NEW ORLEANS, LA.—Sir: I take pleasure in testifying to the superior merits of your Steam Washer, or Woman's Friend. From the use I have made of it I feel sure that all you claim for its performance is a success. Every family ought to have one.

(Signed) MISS E. C. WINGATE,

Principal Trinity Church Girls' School, Jackson street.

NEW ORLEANS, February 4, 1873.

This is to certify that I have purchased from Mr. Hayes the Steam Washer known as the "Woman's Friend," and must say I consider it the best Washing Machine I have ever seen. In fact there is nothing equal to it. It saves labor, soap, fuel and clothes, and I fully recommend it to every family as the best and most perfect Washing Machine inside. (Signed) MRS. S. P. RUSS.

NEW ORLEANS, February 5, 1873.

I have used the Steam Washer, or Woman's Friend, sold by Mr. Hayes, general agent, and fully indorse all he claims for it. Every family ought to possess one.

WANTED—MEN WHO WANT TO MAKE Money. Here is an opportunity for making money rarely presented in a lifetime. We have got the best and surest-selling article ever invented, that every housekeeper buys on sight. It is a small Furnace, weighing only six pounds, that can be used with or without a stove. It will fit in the holes of any sized stove or range, and will do as much work with one quart of fuel—charcoal, chips, coke, corncobs, wood or soft coal—as can be done on any stove with one-half bushel. It will boil, broil, roast, toast, bake and stew. It is the best draft-iron heater in the world. Its economy in saving fuel is marvelous. You have no smoke, gas or heat in the room. It sells the year round. Retail price only $2. Thousands are sold every week. Any man with a small capital can clear from $50 to $80 per day by owning the right of any good county, and a whole state is of incalculable worth to a man of enterprise. We will send a sample Furnace to any part of the United States on receipt of $2. Address, for circular,

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the fourth instant:

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Louisiana and Mississippi | bales... | 7,980 |
| Lake | | 149 |
| Arkansas | | 653 |
| Mobile | | 1,095 |
| Florida | | 5 |
| Texas | | 479 |
| Total | | 10,361 |

On Saturday the market opened with a moderate demand but a poor assortment, with small supplies of the better qualities, which checked the movement, and only a limited business was done during the morning, at about previous rates, and although later in the day, under an improvement at New York of ⅛c. in spots and 3 16@¼c. in futures, buyers came forward with more spirit, and the advantage was more on the side of the factors, without their being able to establish a quotable improvement. The sales summed up 4,900 bales, not including 250 bales omitted in Friday's report. Strict ordinary, slightly dusty, sold at 14½c., do. clean and of good style, 15c., strict ordinary to good ordinary, dusty, at 14⅞@14¾c., good ordinary at 16⅛c., strict good ordinary at 17⅛@17⅜c., strict good ordinary to low middling at 17⅝@17¾c., strict low middling to middling at 18¼c., and middling at 18@19¼c. On Monday the movement was less active, and the business was confined to 3,300 bales, at firm prices for desirable lots of all grades, while other descriptions were irregular and rather easier, without any quotable falling off. On Tuesday the market opened with only a moderate inquiry and continued inanimate throughout the day, the demand being checked by a decline of ⅝ cent. in sterling exchange, 1-16d. at Liverpool, and 1-16@⅛c. in futures at New York. Factors, however, although willing to meet the demand freely on the general run of the stock, were reluctant to make sufficient concessions to bring out buyers, and while prices were weaker, and in exceptional cases offers were accepted a fraction under Monday's figures, yet the closing rates showed no quotable variation. Cottons with good staple, being scarce and in request, commanded full prices. The sales were confined to 2,650 bales.

The above makes an aggregate for the past three days of 16,850 bales, against 18,050 for the corresponding time last week and 19,681 the week before.

The receipts proper at this port since the first of September, exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas, are 1,045,427 bales, against 868,674 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 599,416 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 140,424 to Great Britain, of 56,778 to France, and of 110,619 to other foreign ports. SUGAR.—The market has shown very little animation since our last review, and the sales on Saturday and Monday were confined to a few small lots, comprising 50 hhds., at 7c. for common, 8¾c. for good fair, 9¼c. for strictly prime, and 10¾c. for yellow clarified.

MOLASSES.—The receipts of Louisiana consist of small and irregular lots, which were sold on Saturday and Monday at 35@40c. for common fermenting, 54c. for prime fermenting, and 60c. for strictly prime fermenting.

CORN.—On Tuesday 3,700 sacks sold at 55c. for yellow mixed, 56c. for mixed, and 58c. for white.

OATS.—On Saturday 900 sacks sold at 47@48c. On Monday 1,100 sacks sold at 45@46c. ₱ bushel.

HAY.—On Saturday 1,710 sacks sold at 75@77½c. for inferior, 82½@89c. for choice. On Monday 750 sacks sold at 80c. ₱ 100 lbs. On Tuesday the supply was fair, but the sales were confined to 200 sacks at 85c. ₱ 100 lbs.

PORK.—The market is very dull, but the stock on hand is small. Mess is held in round lots at $17.50 ₱ bbl. It is retailing at $17.75 ₱ bbl. On Tuesday 200 bbls. mess sold on private terms, and 50 bbls. at $17.50 ₱ bbl.

BACON.—On Saturday there was quite a fair demand, and 279 hhds. sold, in lots, at 7¼@7¾c. for shoulders, 9¾c. for clear rib sides, and 10@10¼c. for clear sides. But on Monday the sales were confined to 81 casks at 7¼@7¾c. for shoulders, and 10@10¼c. for clear sides.

MONETARY.

Gold opened on Tuesday at 117¾@118 (against 118¼ at New York,) and, after a moderate business, closed at 117¾@117¾ (against 118¼ at New York.)

The sales of silver have been confined to recall transactions. American half dollars are quoted at 110@111, and Mexican dollars at 2¼ ₱ cent. premium in gold for new and 5 ₱ cent. for old.

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

ALBANY, N. Y., April 9.—The flood on the Central railroad west of here is causing much damage to business interests. No trains have reached this city since yesterday morning.

NEW YORK, April 10.—The insurance on Horace Greeley's life, amounting to $100,000, has been collected. The policy was the largest paid within the last decade.

ST. LOUIS, April 10.—The Lawrence (Kansas) Journal learns that the Kiowa, Cheyenne and Arrapahoe Indians are preparing for war, and that the government is reinforcing all the forts in western Kansas and south of that section, and that extra troops are ordered to the front. Two companies of cavalry have already arrived, and two more are on the road. There is every prospect of Indian troubles on the frontier this spring.

GALVESTON, April 10.—Telegrams and private intelligence from twenty-three counties report heavy frosts, which have killed the crops and fruit. Replanting has commenced. The following is a list of the counties heard from, which embrace a large portion of the cotton-growing district: Fort Bend, Colorado, Dallas, Washington, Brazos, Grayson, Navarro, Harris, McLennan, Robertson, Grimes, Liberty, Bexar, Collin, Lyon, Anderson, Houston, Cherokee, Walker, Trinity, Falls, Limestone and Ellis.

WASHINGTON, April 11.—The official returns received at the Bureau of Statistics show that during the quarter ended March 31, 1873, there arrived at the port of New Orleans 1,521 immigrants of various occupations, the greater number being laborers. Of the total number arrived 482 hailed from Germany; England and Wales, 110; Ireland, 67; France, 213; Spain, 63; Italy, 121; Austria, 76, and all other countries, 50.

NEW YORK, April 11.—Mr. Sparks, agent of the White Star line, announces that in conformity with the wishes of the contributors to the fund of $2,000 collected in Chicago, a sum is to be set aside for the purchase of suitable rewards for the officers and crew of the Atlantic conspicuous in saving life; also for rewarding Rev. Mr. Ancient and the fishermen who so nobly assisted.

The Warren Street Methodist church of Brooklyn refuses to receive the new pastor, Mr. Saunders, who has just been appointed by the New York East Conference, claiming to have the promise from the presiding elder to appoint Mr. Johns, who has been preaching since the death of Mr. Hadley, and have decided to close the church on Sunday and notify Mr. Saunders that he is not wanted. The official board say that in the event of Mr. John's removal they will sell the church or make a Congregation church of it. It is rumored that another church is threatening to adopt a similar course.

A World special from Rome says: "The pope is suffering from rheumatic fever and ulceration of the leg."

A factory in Rome was destroyed by fire during. Forty were buried in the ruins. Five killed and seventeen wounded.

PHILADELPHIA, April 11.—Brigham Young telegraphs to a paper that his resignation of the secular offices does not affect his position as president of the Mormon Church, in which capacity he will still exercise the control.

SAN FRANCISCO, April 12.—A courier has arrived here from the lava beds and reports that Major General Canby and Dr. Thomas were murdered by the Modocs yesterday, while holding a peace conference.

NEW YORK, April 12.—City of Mexico advices say that the Juaristas and Portiristas parties have formed a powerful opposition to the government, and have adroitly seized upon the general dissatisfaction at the administration for its railroad policy.

Kerlio Hirnsawa, a young Japanese nobleman studying in Brooklyn Polytechnic Institute, died on Wednesday, and will be buried in Greenwood Cemetery, at his own request.

SAN FRANCISCO, April 13.—On the eleventh of March a huge band of Apaches killed three men. Troops followed them. Lieutenant Rice reports killing seventy-nine warriors and capturing twenty-six women and children. Captain Ramhill reports killing seventeen warriors and capturing seven women.

WASHINGTON, April 14.—The President leaves on Wednesday for St. Louis.

General Jeff. C. Davis succeeds General Canby.

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., April 12, 1873.

To General Gillem, Modoc Camp, via Yreka, California:

Your dispatch announcing the terrible loss to the country of General Canby by the perfidy of the Modoc band of Indians has been shown to the President, who authorizes me to instruct you to make the attack so strong and persistent that their fate may be commensurate with their crime. You will be fully justified in their utter extermination.

W. T. SHERMAN, General.

FOREIGN.

CITY OF MEXICO, April 1.—The country is quiet. The revolution in Tepic is rapidly subsiding.

The epizootic prevails to an alarming extent, the fowls, horses and cattle being all affected.

MADRID, April 9.—General Saballes, the Carlist chieftain, with a force of insurgents, is within six millometers of the town of Puigcerda, in the province of Gerona. An attack was expected, and the women were fleeing from the town. The men were preparing to defend the place against an assault of the insurrectionists.

The inhabitants of Salamanca have expelled the Jesuits from that city.

There has been rioting at Port Mahon, in Balearic Islands. The rioters demand the release of a number of soldiers who have been placed under arrest.

BRUSSELS, April 10.—The quarrymen of the Enghien district, in Hainila, to the number of two thousand, have struck for higher wages. They attempted to make a demonstration, but the gensd'armes dispersed all their gatherings.

TRIESTE, April 10.—The United States steamer Brooklyn arrived today, with the storeship Supply in tow. The Supply brings the American contributions to the Vienna Exposition.

ASPINWALL, via Havana, April 11. The city of San Salvador, the capital of the Central American republic of that name, has been destroyed by an earthquake, causing terrible loss of life. Eight thousand persons perished, and property valued at $12,000,000 was destroyed. The earthquake was followed by a conflagration, and many buildings were burned.

PERPIGNAN, April 11.—A dispatch from Puigcerda, dated at noon to-day, says: "After the failure of their final attack, last night, the entire Carlist force withdrew before daylight, leaving three hundred dead and wounded on the field. We lost eight killed and have many wounded."

MADRID, April 12.—The force of Carlists under Saballes, which attacked Puigcerda, was one thousand strong, while the defenders of the town numbered five hundred, of whom only fifty were soldiers, the remainder being citizens. After a fusilade of twenty-four hours the ammunition of the Republicans became exhausted, and the alcalde of Puigcerda sent for reinforcements, which arrived too late to participate in the fight, as the Carlists ceased their attack, and had withdrawn from before the town. The insurrectionists carried their wounded with them and buried the bodies of their dead.

ROME, April 13.—A World special says the pope, after suffering many hours of great pain, is now in a lethargic state. His physicians have forbidden the issue of bulletins, and clerical papers have been ordered to abstain from making reports. It is feared his recovery is impossible. It is believed his death will be kept a secret until the conclave has elected a successor, to avoid the interference of Germany and Italy. All cardinals save two are now at the Vatican. There are four hundred papal troops inside, and orders have been given to allow none to enter.

ROME, April 14.—The condition of the pope has so far improved that his holiness was able to-day to give audience to several visitors.

ROME, April 15.—The condition of the pope is unchanged to-day.

Cardinal de Anglis, chamberlain of the Roman Church, has been summoned to Rome.

Serious Riot.

Riot and bloodshed at Colfax, Grant parish, Louisiana, are reported. It appears that the negroes took forcible possession of the courthouse and claimed the parish offices. They were armed and committed many outrages upon the people, and, fortifying themselves, bid defiance to the legitimate authorities. Colfax is on Red river, we believe, about midway between Alexandria and Natchitoches. On Sunday, the thirteenth, a body of white citizens gathered from the surrounding country, attacked the negroes, dispersed them and took possession of the place. The Picayune gives the following statement of Captain Jacobs, of the steamboat Southwestern:

We arrived at Colfax on Sunday evening, about eight o'clock, and found that the white people, and the sheriff, I suppose, at their head, had captured the town, after having had a conflict with the negroes. It was reported to me that about one hundred negroes had been killed and many others wounded.

We saw from the boat about eighteen or twenty lying around on the banks dead. One white man was reported killed, whose name I did not learn, and two very seriously wounded, Messrs. Hadnot and Harris. Mr. Hadnot was shot through the bowels, and it is supposed that he is mortally wounded. We brought Messrs. Harris and Hadnot down from Colfax to Alexandria. Three or four other white men were slightly wounded.

About one hundred negroes escaped, but it was reported that the whites were still pursuing them. All of the leaders of the riot escaped, especially the white men. The negroes ambuscaded themselves in the courthouse, and the whites, finding that there was no other mode of attack left them, set fire to the building. The whites numbered in the neighborhood of one hundred and fifty men. The fight lasted from about twelve o'clock M. until nearly five o'clock P. M. The whites are now in possession of Colfax, and when I left, late last Sunday night, everything was very quiet.

AN IRISH PAPER concludes a biography of Robespierre with the following sentence: "This extraordinary man left no children except his brother, who was killed at the same time."

The General Minutes.

We have had no little trouble in procuring returns from the Annual Conferences to make up the General Minutes. We have taken great pains to secure correctness—writing letters to procure statistics—adding up, correcting and verifying all the figures, so that they may be depended upon as far as the returns are trustworthy.

We are sorry to say that some of the reports are imperfect—e. g., those of baptisms, especially of infants; we hope our pastors will pay more attention to this subject; and report not only all they baptize themselves, but all who are baptized by others within the bounds of their respective pastoral charges. There were moneys contributed to the cause of missions which passed into the treasury, besides what went through the Annual Conferences, which are not reported in the General Minutes. We hope the figures will be tripled next year. We must put forth greater efforts in the cause of missions. We hope all our friends—especially all our ministers—will procure copies of this highly suggestive annual. We thank God most devoutly for the gratifying increase in the ranks of the ministry and membership of the church. We append

There are defects in the Minutes of some of the Conferences, which the editor vainly endeavored to supply. The number of Sunday school teachers in the White River Conference was not reported this year; we take the figures of last year, though they are absolutely too low. The reports of baptisms, especially of infants, are very imperfect. The transferred preachers are reckoned with those of the Conferences to which they now belong. The preachers who located this year (57) are not counted; on the other hand, the preachers who were admitted on trial (214) and those who were readmitted (38) are counted among the traveling preachers, though many of them are also reckoned with the local preachers. The colored members, for the most part, have left our connection for the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church in America, organized by our Bishops under the authority of the General Conference. They are reported in their own Minutes; hence the apparent decrease in that department.—Nashville Christian Advocate.

RAYMOND, MISSISSIPPI.—Mr. Editor: Let me say to you and to all the lovers of our Lord Jesus Christ that the Lord has met with his people in Raymond.

Bro. A. B. Stewart, our pastor, came to his appointment on the first Sunday in March, and concluded, as he intended to spend a few days with his charge at this place, to preach at night and have prayer meeting every day at eleven o'clock. From the very first of the meeting God manifested himself most graciously. In the prayer meetings showers of blessings came down upon the members. Every time an invitation was given some of the children of the Sabbath school came forward to the altar for the prayers of God's people. Nor did they come in vain; for there were some as clear conversions as I ever witnessed.

On the Friday night of the week the meeting commenced the sacrament of the Lord's Supper was administered, previous to which Bro. Stewart formally received into the church fifteen persons, all members of our Sabbath school, from the ages of seven years and eight months to fifteen years, many of whom had found the pearl of great price. All of these partook of the sacrament.

While I looked on their bright and beaming faces I thought of a sermon I heard preached some twenty years ago in Felicity Street church by—I will not say whom—from these words: "Those that be planted in the house of the Lord shall flourish in the courts of our God. They shall still bring forth fruit in old age. They shall be fat and flourishing." O that this were the motto of every Christian: "Plant them in the courts of our God."

Bro. Stewart thought it best to go up to Clinton on the second Sabbath and fill his regular appointment at that place. He requested us at eleven o'clock on that day to hold a class meeting. We accordingly did so, conducting it on the general class style, making the speaking voluntary. We had a feast of fat things. After a few of the old members had related their religious experience, several of the young converts spoke, who had mothers in glory whose prayers had been heard. Allusion to these facts by these young persons brought tears from many eyes.—Among others an orphan girl (one of those brought over from England by Miss Rye, and who was happily converted during our meeting) spoke. With tears of joy she said: "I thank God that I was brought to this Christian land, and although I have no father or mother to pray for me, I have found those who have prayed for me." And, as it were, to crown all, a dear little girl, eight years old, rose up to testify that she loved Jesus and was going to heaven. No wonder a sister praised God and said: "Out of the mouth of babes and sucklings has God perfected praise."

The meeting was continued from the first Sabbath in March until Monday night after the third Sabbath in the same month.

During this time five very interesting sunrise prayer meetings were held by Bro. Stewart, more particularly for the children, as they were attending school during the week. It was a most interesting sight to see the children of our town pouring out to the church at that early hour in response to the ringing of the bell. These sunrise prayer meetings will never be forgotten by the children.

The Methodist church at this place has been wonderfully strengthened and revived. There were between fifteen and twenty conversions before the close of the meeting.

The Presbyterian preacher, Bro. Bingham, assisted greatly, part of the time, by his sermons, talks and prayers. Bro. New preached once, and was with us several times.

Two persons who joined during the meeting were received into the church last Sunday night. Two more are to be received on the third Sabbath.

Very affectionately, yours in Christ,

T. J. HUNTER.

Protestant Episcopal Mission in Mexico.

The Register says: The first congregation that the executive committee of the American Church Missionary Society has resolved to aid in Mexico is the congregation formerly ministered to by that faithful, holy, earnest, prayerful and most eloquent Christian preacher, the late Manuel Aguas, for some time Bishop-elect of the Church in Mexico. This congregation now meets in a beautiful but small chapel adjoining the grand church of the ex-convent of San Francisco. It is now proposed to make an effort to raise the funds needed to finish the repairs on the large church of San Francisco, in order that the congregation now meeting in the small chapel by its side may soon move into that grand and beautiful church of San Francisco, and there press forward in their work for Jesus and his precious gospel.

That large church of San Francisco needs a floor; it also requires to be painted and furnished. What now remains of that grand church are its massive walls and magnificent stone domes. This property is now owned by Protestants for the preaching of the pure gospel, and has been placed at the disposal of the American Church Missionary Society for their work. This church is two hundred and fifty feet in length, and can accommodate over three thousand persons. It is expected to cost at least $10,000 to put a floor in this church, and to paint, repair and furnish it so as to make it ready for Christian worship.

THE circulation of Methodist periodicals (North,) as officially stated in the last exhibit of the Book Concern, is: Christian Advocate, 40,000; Western Advocate, 22,032; Northwestern Advocate, 15,873; Central Advocate, 13,967; Methodist Advocate, 3,100. The circulation of the Northern and Pittsburg Advocates is not included in the exhibit. According to these figures, the Methodist is the second weekly in point of circulation, 25,000. This, for not quite thirteen years, is rapid progress. The circulation of the Quarterly Review, we are glad to see, is 5,029; of the Ladies' Repository, 26,850.—Methodist.

A SPECIAL DISPATCH from Salt Lake City says that Brigham Young has made a will dividing his immense property equally among his sixteen wives and sixty children, and carefully stipulating the method of division. It is believed that the old Mormons will follow the changed fortunes of their self-deposed leader, and that so far as Utah is concerned the Mormon problem may be considered solved.

FUNERAL NOTICE.—The funeral and memorial sermon of Mrs. Mary A. Brewer will be preached by Rev. J. A. Ivy, on Sunday, April 27, 1873, in the church at the corner of Louisiana avenue and Magazine street, at eleven o'clock A. M.

KEROSENE is said to be more fatal than smallpox.

Bible Meeting in Rome.

On Monday, the seventeenth of February, the first public meeting in behalf of the British and Foreign Bible Society was held in Rome, the right honorable the Earl of Chichester presiding; and the sight of placards on the Porta del Popolo announcing the meeting was a striking proof of the new state of things now prevailing in that venerable city. The noble earl, in opening the business of the meeting, expressed the gratification he felt in presiding on so interesting an occasion, and urged upon those engaged in evangelistic work in Rome to labor in a spirit of love and forbearance, avoiding needless and irritating controversy, and seeking rather to displace error by the earnest and loving enunciation of the great truths of the gospel and the spreading of the word of God.

Mr. Edwards, one of the district secretaries of the society from England, gave an interesting account of the work now carried on in every country on the continent, especially illustrating the remarkable way in which the recent wars and revolutions of Europe have opened fresh doors for the entrance of the sacred Scriptures—Rome itself having been opened by the late Franco-German war. Admiral Fishbourne, Rev. T. Hamilton, chaplain of Trinity church, Rome; Rev. Dr. Bacon, of New York; Rev. Dr. Macgregor, of the Established Church of Scotland; Rev. J. Burchall, of the London Jews' Society, laboring among the Jews in the Ghetto; and Rev. H. J. Piggott, of the Wesleyan mission, Padua, took part in the proceedings, which will long be remembered by all present as marking a new era in the history of the Bible Society's work in Italy. It was stated that since 1860 nearly half a million of copies of the word of God have been circulated over the Italian peninsula—good seed, which it may well be hoped will bear fruit in years yet to come.—New York Observer.

ST. JAMES.—The opening services in the basement-room of St. James church, Galveston, March 30, were conducted by Rev. N. A. Cravens, of the Louisiana Conference, who preached from First Chronicles xxix, 5. The congregation was very large, and deep and serious feeling was manifest under the earnest words of the preacher. In the afternoon an experience meeting was conducted by Rev. J. W. Whipple, and at night Dr. Alexander preached. It is the purpose to protract the services for some days, and it is to be hoped that the deep feeling manifest at all the opening services of St. James may develop into a glorious revival of religion.—Galveston Christian Advocate.

THE services at the Elm Street church, Nashville, have been protracted during the past week. The religious interest has increased from the beginning. The visible result of the first week's labor was the addition of fourteen members to the church. Preaching every evening this week. We hope the work will go forward without abatement of interest. The pastor is greatly encouraged.—Nashville Advocate, April 12.

THE Missionary Advocate, published monthly by the Methodist Episcopal Church, is a handsome little sheet, and filled with the latest intelligence and all matters pertaining to missions. The engravings and maps are particularly interesting and instructive.

THE Southern Baptist convention will be held at Mobile, Ala., May 8.

Vanderbilt University.

The board of trust met March 25, and was in session until A. M. of the twenty-seventh. Much work was done and many valuable suggestions brought out. Colonel L. Q. C. Lamar, a new member of this board, with us for the first time, we found a most opportune and valuable addition. The proposition of Mr. Vanderbilt, with the action of the board upon it, is as follows:

COMMODORE VANDERBILT'S OFFER.

"NEW YORK, March 17, 1873.

"To Bishop H. N. McTyeire, of Nashville: I make the following offer, through you, to the corporation known as the Central University of the Methodist Episcopal Church South:

"First. I authorize you to procure suitable grounds, not less than from twenty to fifty acres, properly located, for the erection of the following work:

"Second. To erect thereon suitable buildings for the uses of the university.

"Third. You to procure plans and specifications for such buildings and submit them to me, and when approved the money for the foregoing objects to be furnished by me as it is needed.

"Fourth. The sum included in the foregoing items, together with the endowment fund and the library fund, shall not be less in the aggregate than five hundred thousand dollars ($500,000); and these last two funds shall be furnished to the corporation so soon as the buildings for the university are completed and ready to be used.

"The foregoing being subject to the following conditions:

"First. That you accept the presidency of the board of trust, receiving therefor a salary of $5,000 per annum and the use of a dwelling house, free of rent, on or near the university grounds.

"Second. Upon your death or resignation the board of trust shall elect a president.

"Third. To check hasty or injudicious appropriations or measures, the president shall have authority, whenever he objects to any act of the board, to signify his objections in writing, within ten days after its enactment, and no such act is to be valid unless, upon reconsideration, it be passed by a three-fourths vote of the board.

"Fourth. The amount set apart by me, as an endowment fund, shall be forever inviolable, and shall be kept safely invested, and the interest or revenue only used in carrying on the university. The form of investment which I prefer, and in which I reserve the privilege to give the money for the said fund, is in seven per cent. first mortgage bonds of the New York Central and Hudson River Railroad Company, to be "registered" in the name of the corporation, and to be transferable only upon a special vote of the board of trust.

"Fifth. The university is to be located in or near Nashville, Tennessee.

"Respectfully submitted,

"C. VANDERBILT."

ACCEPTANCE BY THE BOARD OF TRUST.

Action of the board of trust, taken at a meeting in Nashville, Tennessee, March 26:

"WHEREAS, Mr. C. Vanderbilt, of New York, has offered, through Bishop McTyeire, to the Central University of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, the magnificent sum of $500,000; AND WHEREAS, The Bishop has this day presented to this board, duly convened, the offer of Mr. Vanderbilt in writing; therefore,

"Resolved, first, That we accept with profound gratitude the donation, with all the terms and conditions specified in said proposition.

"Second. That as an expression of our appreciation of this liberality, the Hon. Milton Brown, Judge E. H. East and Rev. Dr. Keiley be and they are hereby authorized and requested to ask the honorable Chancery Court to change the name and style of our corporation, from the Central to the Vanderbilt University; and that the institution be henceforth known and called by this name.

"Third. That we instruct the above-named committee to obtain such modifications of our charter as will enable this board to conform its future operations to the conditions aforesaid.

"Fourth. That the secretary is requested to convey to Mr. Vanderbilt the sincere thanks of this board, with a copy of these resolutions.

In the afternoon session of the same day the board adopted the following resolutions:

"Resolved, That the munificent contribution of Mr. Vanderbilt to the university ought to stimulate the liberality of our brethren and friends throughout the Annual Conferences in its behalf.

"Resolved, That as Mr. Vanderbilt's offer of $500,000 accepted by the board contemplates the location of the university in or near Nashville, we earnestly hope that the citizens here will promptly signify their appreciation of this fact by giving largely to the university—as largely as it is reasonable to suppose would be given by any other city for the location.

"Resolved, That our agents now in the field are hereby urged to renewed diligence in their work, and to special efforts with the view of obtaining a fund for the support of the university of young men studying for the ministry.

THROUGH LIFE.

We slight the gifts that every season bears,
And let them all unheeded from our grasp;
In our great eagerness to reach and clasp
The promised treasure of the coming years;

Or else we mourn some great good passed away,
And, in the shadow of our grief shut in,
Refuse the lesser good we yet might win—
The offered peace and gladness of to-day.

So through the chambers of our life we pass,
And leave them one by one, and never stay,
Not knowing how much pleasantness there was
In each, until the closing of the door
Has sounded through the house, and died away,
And in our hearts we sigh: "For evermore."

The Sunday School Address

Made to the Sunday School in the Presbyterian Church in Brandon, on Sunday, December 15, 1872, and Ordered to Be Published by the Conference.

BY REV. W. E. M. LINFIELD.

The proper place in Christian regard the Sunday school should hold is the subject we propose to present. The value we place upon the Sunday school must depend upon the use we can make of it. If we take it for what it is not—an educational institute, which its name seems to indicate—we shall misuse it, be disappointed in its results, and eventually lose all interest in it. It cannot rank high for educational purposes when either its facilities—one hour in every seventh day—are considered, or the literary results produced. No contrivance will ever heighten its educational importance. One hour in every seven days, however economically and diligently used, is of small worth; and the course of study, with the necessary programme of instruction and recitation adapted to such a narrow space, must be unsatisfactory and of small profit. Society has outgrown the emergency of using a Sabbath hour and voluntary teachers for literary ends merely.

But if we employ it to promote the conversion of our children, and to afford a religious culture suited to their childhood, we shall not be in danger of exaggerating its importance.

But are we agreed that children require to be converted in order to become Christians and heirs of eternal life? Do we not sometimes speak of them as if they were in some essential sense good without having experienced conversion, and need only to be educated—that is, developed into genuine Christian character?

There are certain qualities of childhood which please us, and excite in us very tender sentiments toward children, but it will not do to confound those qualities with goodness. In their higher stages and most brilliant forms they are but evanescent—do not survive childhood—and are puerile after childhood is passed. Besides, those qualities are not associated always with childhood. A depressed condition of life may suppress and altogether extinguish them. A group of Sunday school children, well dressed and in the graceful attitudes of practiced behavior, may appear beautiful, and exemplify in their manners and sprightliness many traits of moral excellence. But to form a correct judgment and obtain the proper direction for our conduct toward children we must make up a view. Place in the midst of these Sunday school children a group of London city Arabs, in their habitual squalor and viciousness, and a group of Parisian Gamini, with all their hideous precocity in crime and uncleanness, or, without going so far, make up the spectacle with importations from the Five Points of New York or any other city. The romance of sentiment may not bear the disgusting confusion, the heart may sicken as the illusions of natural child-goodness fade away, but it will be all the better for us that we shall find out where to begin to inculcate goodness. Child-character in the sight of God should not be estimated by us from individual cases or select occasions, but through the ever-present exponents of restraint and coercion of family and school government, and the police regulations of municipalities. These do not proceed upon the assumption that children are naturally good. No encouragement could be gathered from these sources to employ the Sunday school to prolong to a larger growth and later age the qualities that shine in childhood. As a mere association for children, an occasion for competitive display, the Sunday school must be left behind by the natural growth of the child, which, on examination after every Sunday labor, will be found to be a true growth of nature, not a product of grace.

Conversion is the necessary start in and means to a holy life. It brings to us the help that is in Jesus toward the formation of Christian character, the endurance of allotted sufferings, and the achievement of the end for which man was created. Child-life needs this start, and can obtain it in no other way. Child-character needs the same support and quickening. Those who have gained the most advantage in conversion well know that childhood especially needs the advantage which conversion affords. The inexorable condition of life for all humanity is to overcome or perish. The long retrospect of human life-history supplies an unbroken chain of evidence that we can overcome only by the help of Christ. Conversion puts us in fellowship with Christ, and makes available to us his fullness of grace and strength.

The need of conversion being thus manifestly universal, the possibility of conversion must be as favorable to the child as to the adult. The end in conversion, whether in the view of Christ or of man, is the same—the formation of human character upon the model of Christ's. What grace can do toward this end is given for the asking. A child can ask as well as a man, is as much an individual, has a work as important as the other. In no respect can we appreciate a difference so as to destroy the equality of possibility.

The effect of conversion is as beneficent in childhood as in adult age, and for the improvement of society can in no calculation be made of secondary importance. The Sunday school, as a means to promote the conversion and religious culture of children, is commended to our gravest consideration by the report of the government Bureau of Statistics, which estimates that one-fourth of our nation consists of children of proper Sunday school age. The prospect is as exciting as the statement was unexpected. The great activity among the evangelical churches in the Sunday school cause gives ground for the supposition that a large proportion of these children are in attendance upon the Sunday school exercises. In the next fifty years our nation must show the effect of this work, for more than a full half of the people will have passed through the Sunday school. Whether the effect will compensate the labor and present outlay, and encourage future effort, may not be predicted with infallible certainty, owing to the indefiniteness of the end in view in Sunday school work. If, however, the conversion of the children was the end sought, and the methods conformed to that end, the prospect would be as assuring as it would be pleasing. We need no other picture of the future than our own imagination can supply to excite us, beyond measure, over the possible effect upon an entire nation of early conversion, habitualized, in the churches. The bare possibility of turning the common life of a people into Christian activities, charities and experiences, is sufficiently stimulating to the affections to enthrone in highest regard the means that lead thereto, and to establish it in the mind as the most practical result of Sunday school work.

The Alabama Conference and the Southern University.

MR. EDITOR: I do not propose to take part in the discussion between Bro. Shores and Kappa; but the article over the signature of Kappa contains some assertions which call for notice, and I am unwilling that they shall go unanswered.

I will quote first from Kappa and then from the Conference. Kappa asserts:

1. "Had the Conference done in the premises what Bro. Sheres says it should have done, it would have betrayed a most sacred trust."

2. "They (the funds) came into the hands of the Conference as a bequest, to be so directed by the Conference as to promote the cause of religion."

3. "As well might the managers of the American Bible Society claim the bequests made to that noble institution for their personal benefit."

4. "It was with surprise and pain that the writer heard the claim set up, at the late session of our Conference, to a personal interest in those funds—surprise that any one failed to discriminate promptly between funds held by the Conference in trust and funds held for the benefit of its members."

I will now quote from the Minutes the action of the Conference in reference to these funds. The Committee on Education submitted this resolution:

"That the Legal Conference be and are hereby instructed to invest the sum of $10,000, now in their hands, in good and profitable securities, and annually to turn over the interest accruing upon the said $10,000 to the treasurer of the Southern University, to pay for the tuition of the sons of itinerant preachers of the Alabama Conference, and of such young men preparing for the ministry as may need assistance."

Bro. M. S. Andrews offered a substitute, which was adopted by the Conference, which in part reads:

"Resolved, That the Legal Conference be and they are hereby instructed to invest the sum of $13,000, now in their hands, in good and productive securities.

"Resolved, That ten-thirteenths of the interest be paid annually to the treasurer of the Southern University, to be applied to the payment of the tuition of the sons of the ministers of the Alabama and North Alabama Conferences, and of such young men preparing for the ministry as may be prosecuting their studies there, and who require such assistance; and that three-thirteenths be paid annually to the treasurer of the Tuskegee Female College, to be applied to the payment of the board of the daughters of the members of the Conference who may attend and board in the college."

Now let us note the facts, if facts they are, which we learn from Kappa and the Conference:

1. Certain funds "came into the hands of the Conference," "to be so directed by the Conference as to promote the cause of religion." Of course, then, the Conference held these funds "in trust, and not for the benefit of its members."

2. Though this fund did not belong to the Conference, but was held in trust, to "be so directed by the Conference as to promote the cause of religion," yet one or more members of the Alabama Conference "set up a claim to a personal interest in them," and even now Bro. Shores is pressing this personal interest claim.

3. We are glad, however, to learn that these brethren who set up this personal claim did so not from any motive of dishonesty, but that they "failed to discriminate promptly between funds held by the Conference in trust and funds held for the benefit of its members." We are glad the error was not of the heart; however, that is rather a suspicious mistake. I know Bro. Shores, and I will go security that he will forever withdraw all personal claim as soon as he comes to understand that the Conference held these funds in trust, and not for the benefit of its members, but to promote the cause of religion.

4. We further learn that the majority of the Conference—that part which could discriminate between trust funds to be used to promote the cause of religion and funds held by proprietary interest—did prevent the minority from applying said religious trust funds to the benefit of the members of the Conference.

5. We further learn that in order best to promote the cause of religion, and that no member of the Conference might receive benefit, ten-thirteenths of the interest was ordered to be handed over annually to the treasurer of the Southern University, to be applied to the payment of the tuition of the sons of the ministers of the Alabama and North Alabama Conferences, etc., and three-thirteenths of the interest was "to be applied to the payment of the board of the daughters of the members of the Conference" who might attend the Tuskegee Female College. What a happy thing that these discriminating brethren saw the point promptly, and prevented the perversion of this religious trust fund to the benefit of themselves! How well they did in putting this fund so far away that neither directly nor indirectly, neither personally nor illally they should receive benefit!

Who Kappa is I know not. He may be right in his assertion that this money was held in trust for the promotion of religion. Whether he is right or no I cannot say, having never seen the will of the deceased. But I will make a statement or two:

1. It was understood by those who opposed the action of the Conference that this money was a bequest to the Conference, and not a trust held to promote religion. I so understood it, and I can discriminate the difference between a trust and bequest, if the facts are stated. I heard no one represent this as a trust, but supposed, from the representations made, that the donor, in consideration of his love for the members of the Alabama Conference, had bequeathed them this money.

2. Those who opposed the action of the Conference did so not through ill will to the university, but thought such action not the best way to carry out the purpose of the donor.

3. I feel justified in asserting that if Kappa is correct in saying the Conference held this fund in trust for the promotion of religion, there is no member of the Alabama Conference who would not scorn to receive from it benefit in the way of tuition or board for his child. The Conference is not so dull to the finer instincts as to appropriate a known trust fund in this manner. Kappa is mistaken in his assertion, or the Conference had an erroneous view of the matter.

4. I am certain there are many members of the Alabama Conference who cannot discriminate between the moral wrong involved in applying the interest of this bequest to the payment of tuition of all children of itinerant ministers, and the moral right of applying it to pay the board and tuition of those sons and daughters who may be at Greensboro and Tuskegee.

5. Though Kappa would make the impression that a claim to personal interest in these funds was set up at the late session of our Conference, I doubt if any one who opposed the action taken had any expectation of ever receiving the least personal benefit from them. I am certain it was not from selfish motives the action was opposed.

And now, as a friend to the university, I will just drop a hint in reference to a point Kappa seems puzzled at. If members of the Conference do not all see as clearly as Kappa, and understand as well the tenure by which the Conference holds its lands and moneys, let them have information, without raising the cry of "hostility to our colleges," want of prompt discrimination, breach of sacred trust, etc.

W. SHAPARD.

The Finger of God.

This is the finger of God.—Exodus viii, 19.

MR. EDITOR: The children of Israel had long been oppressed by the Egyptians. They were persecuted by the tyrannical Pharaoh, King of Egypt. Their groans had been heard by the mighty God of Israel, who had through Moses commanded Pharaoh to let them go free. Hard-hearted and unbelieving, he had seen Aaron convert a rod into a serpent, all the fish killed in the rivers, the rivers converted into blood, and the land covered with frogs. All of which being done by his own magicians, as well as by Aaron, at the command of God through Moses, Pharaoh still hardened his heart. "And the Lord said unto Moses, Say unto Aaron, stretch out thy rod and smite the dust of the land, that it may become lice throughout all the land of Egypt. And they did so, for Aaron stretched out his hand with his rod and smote the dust of the earth, and it became lice in man and beast; all the dust of the land became lice throughout all the land of Egypt. And the magicians did so with enchantments, to bring forth lice; but they could not. Then the magicians said unto Pharaoh, This is the finger of God." The finger of God is seen first, in creation; and second, in Providence.

1. In creation.—Go back to a time when there was no day, no night, no earth, no air, no water and no living creature, but all was dark chaos. God's voice said, "Let there be light, and there was light," from sun and moon and stars and all the planetary worlds. His finger held the sun in his orb to light the day, and the pale-faced moon to illume the night. His finger touched the plastic clay and Adam became a human form, in whom his Maker breathed the breath of life. His finger but moved, and lo! continents, lakes and rivers appeared below, towering mountains high above, and higher still ten-thousand stars twinkling with radiant brightness, as if to say: "The hand that made us is divine." "Truly the heavens are the work of thy fingers; the moon and the stars thou hast ordained." We may truly say there is not a star that shines, not a river that flows, not a breeze that blows, not a flower that blooms, and not a bird that sings, but what was created by the finger of God.

2. The finger of God is seen in Providence. It looks strange to see the gentle David a wanderer from home and almost a beggar for bread, yet he becomes at last King of Israel; to see the pious Joseph sold by his own brethren to Ishmaelites, carried down to Egypt, sold to Potiphar as a slave, and thrown in prison for a crime he had never committed, yet ere long he was next to the king in power, and greater than he in prosperity; to see the faithful Job bereft of wealth, houses and children, in agony from boils, scraping himself with a potsherd, ready to die from bodily suffering, yet his latter end was better than his former; to see three holy men thrown into a fiery furnace because they refused to worship any god save the only true and living God, yet they were delivered and their tormentors were destroyed. In short, to see Jesus himself, who went about doing good, causing the blind to see and the deaf to hear, the lame to walk and the dumb to sing—to see him scoffed and persecuted, beaten and crucified for the good he did, is very strange. But let us remember that the finger of God made his sufferings the only road to our salvation. Revolutions may occur in a land, driving the king from his throne; empires, powers and principalities may tremble, totter and fall; the storm-cloud of war may lay waste all that is lovely and beautiful; grim-visaged death, the king of terrors, may sweep away many of our race; individuals may rise up who shall tyrannize over their fellows, lord it over God's heritage, Herod-like exalting themselves, or desecrating their holy profession like Belshazzar desecrated the holy vessels; yet in all this we see but the finger of God, that brings changes for the best, destroys to purify. God hurls his own storm, with thunders, lightnings and dangerous breakers, upon the ship of state to test her timbers; permits her to have a weak helmsman like Jeroboam, that her crew may behold their pilot's weakness in the storm, and, turning from him to God, may cry: "Lord, save us, else we perish." Then, indeed, will "man's extremity be God's opportunity." Then pride shall be consumed as by worms, and the uplifted finger of God shall trace on the walls of falsehood, injustice and oppression: Mene, mene, Tekel. Truly does the poet exclaim:

"The Providence on high
Stretches above us like the arching sky;
As o'er the world that broad empyrean field,
So o'er the nation God's protecting shield.
Do they not tell us that his hand is seen
In all that is, in all that yet hath been?
The falling sparrow and the shooting light,
Which throws its rays across the shades of night?
With such strange splendor that we wonder how
This gem was shaken from some angel's brow?
Each follows some decree of his, some law,
Which in dead bird or shooting light we saw.
His the great will that sways the tides of earth,
His the will that giveth empires birth.
And this grand truth is written out in characters sublime,
In every nation and in every clime."

Half Fare.

MR. EDITOR: In your issue of the twenty-seventh of March Rev. James E. Bradley, in a letter from Pleasant Hill, says: "It vexed your correspondent much to meet with Mississippi preachers, on the New Orleans, Jackson and Great Northern railroad, with half-fare and free tickets, while he had to pay full fare each way."

He had reference to going to and from Conference last winter.

Now I dislike very much to see a preacher vexed; and when I find one in that state I feel it my duty to relieve him if I can; and in so doing I am only doing to others as I would have others do to me.

I think in this instance I can afford relief by a statement of facts.

It has been customary, ever since I became a member of the Mississippi Conference, for the various railroads of our State to transport members of Conference to and from the place of session at half-fare. At our last session it was generally understood that the preachers paying full fare coming would be returned free of charge on presenting a certificate from the secretary. So we passed the following complimentary resolution:

"We most cheerfully render our acknowledgments to the various railroad companies * * * who have favored us in the matter of transportation."

Obtaining our certificates at the close of Conference in Brandon, we started home. The Vicksburg and Meridian railroad honored our certificates, but when we got on board the New Orleans, Jackson and Great Northern railroad the conductor did condescend to look at them, and that was all. It was really amusing to see the preachers presenting their certificates, and then with a long breath and a deep sigh, and with evident reluctance, answering to the call for greenbacks. We all felt like taking back that complimentary resolution so far as it related to that railroad. I am sure, if Bro. Bradley could have been there, he would not afterward have been vexed.

A MISSISSIPPI PREACHER.

GREATNESS OF THE LOVE OF CHRIST.—It is an axiom of biblical truth: "Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friend;" and we have here and there a beautiful, though dim, legend of some heroic wife who, for the love which they bore to each other, did literally die for each other. There are, in the facts of profane history, a few dim, shadowy outlines, a few scanty, disheveled notices of such occurrences as these—that when the oracle gave any individual the alternative of dying for another, some such individuals have counted it a sweet and sacred thing to die, and have died for their love of another—for their wife, for their husband. Such are the tales of profane history (and there are not half a dozen of them in the six thousand years of this world's history,) such are the stories that have come down to us of the triumphs of human love, of the achievements of human affection. But there is not one recorded of a person dying for his enemy. We have instances of a person dying for his friend, an attached friend! No doubt David or Jonathan would have died the one for the other. David would have died for Jonathan, or Jonathan would have died for David, if there had been occasion; such was the love they bore one to another. But the love of Christ was not for his friends, but for his adversaries; not for his lovers, but for his enemies. "Herein is love, not that we loved God, but that God loved us."

A POPULAR DOCTOR in Oswego gave a prescription with directions to take a teaspoonful every three years. The patient recovered.

OBITUARIES.

DIED, near Brookhaven, Mississippi, on the twenty-ninth of March, 1873, of meningitis, Mrs. AMANDA M. SHARBROUGH, wife of Rev. F. M. Sharbrough, of the Mississippi Conference. She was born in Claiborne county, Mississippi, November 9, 1832; joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1851, and became an earnest seeker of religion, which she openly professed in 1866. She continued a faithful and active member of the church till her death.

She was married to Bro. Sharbrough November 3, 1852. Understanding the vows of a Methodist minister, she was never in the way of her husband, but was always willing for him to go where duty called him, never murmuring nor complaining. When asked how she could endure privations so patiently, she would reply that she had made up her mind on that point before she was married.

During her sickness, which was of short duration, Sister Sharbrough was not in her proper mind. She could not therefore speak any word of comfort, or give her dying advice to her husband and children. Still we are comforted, for, as she lived the Christian's life, she died the Christian's death.

H. F. JOHNSON.

CARON H. WOODHAM, daughter of John and Mary Riley, was born in Darlington district, South Carolina, about 1810, and was married to Ariss Woodham, in the same district, December 25, 1831.

In early life she professed religion and joined the Methodist Church. From that time forth she lived a member of the same church till death, with the exception of a few years she was a member of the Missionary Baptist Church, as there was no Methodist Church within reach; but as soon as the church of her childhood and of her fathers was within reach her membership was transferred thereto. In 1833 Bro. and Sister Woodham moved from South Carolina to Henry county, Alabama, and in 1834 to Dale county, of the same State, in which she lived till summoned to the church above, which event took place March 18, at ten o'clock P. M. Some five years before her death she and her husband agreed upon a sign—which should be given by the one who should first die—if all being well, if unable to speak. As Sister Woodham was dying, being unable to speak, and without being reminded of the promise, she raised her finger twice, and then grasped the hand of her husband, and passed to heaven. May the blessing of God rest upon the surviving husband and children.

A. DOWLING.

OZARK, ALA., April 2, 1873.

DEPARTED THIS LIFE, at about half-past six o'clock A. M., February 7, 1873, at his residence in Catahoula parish, Louisiana, JESSE P. HOLLOMAN, Esq., in the fifty-fifth year of his age.

The subject of this notice was born in the year 1818, in the State of North Carolina, where he resided until 1841, at which time he emigrated to this State and settled in the parish of Catahoula.

Bro. Holloman was possessed of a vigorous intellect and well-cultivated mind, and in his decease society has lost one of its brightest ornaments and most useful members; and, although he lived for many years out of the pale of the church, he was ever an admirer of the truly pious, and a constant and cheerful supporter of the religion of the Bible.

In 1872 Bro. Holloman joined the Methodist Episcopal Church at Castor Springs, and lived a consistent member of the same until his decease. The church and his large circle of friends and acquaintances can cheerfully agree with the writer in asserting that those who knew him best esteemed him most.

For about eighteen months prior to Bro. Holloman's death he suffered much bodily pain from cancer, yet amid all his afflictions and sufferings he ever looked with an eye of faith to that haven of rest where sickness and pain are felt and feared no more. To his bereaved companion and family we would say: "Weep not as those who have no hope, for in the inspired volume it is written, 'Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord.'" We are confident there is not one of the many who stood around the dying couch of Bro. Holloman, and heard him in his very last moments say, "Meet me in heaven," who can doubt that his departed spirit is now enjoying the rest prepared for the people of God. That all—the heart-stricken companion, the bereaved children, the mourning relatives and friends who stood around the dying couch of Bro. Holloman, and those that were absent—may meet him in that better land is the sincere prayer of the writer.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH.

DR. PEYTON KING was born at Halifax Courthouse, Virginia, on the seventh day of June, 1795. Early in life he left Virginia and settled in Franklin county, Georgia. Here he entered school, and ultimately finished his education at Athens, in that State. Soon after he studied medicine, and, passing through a regular course, was graduated by the University of Pennsylvania, and entered upon the practice of his profession in Jefferson county, Alabama. Here, by skill in his profession, and his integrity and nobility of character, he soon acquired a large and lucrative practice, and gathered about him many warm and devoted friends. His popularity soon diverted him from his profession and sent him to the State Legislature, to represent, for several years, his constituents in that law-making body. During his residence in Jefferson county Dr. King met Miss Jane E. Finley, of that county, daughter of W. B. Finley, and on the seventh of March, 1824, they were united in marriage. This was a happy union for nearly half a century, but is now dissolved by the hand of death.

Dr. King removed to Pickens county, Alabama, from Jefferson. Here he retired from his profession and devoted himself to planting. But his intelligence, integrity, moral rectitude of character and popularity were such as to indicate his suitableness for position in the highest law-making department of the State. Consequently his fellow-citizens elected him to the State Senate of Alabama, where he served them faithfully many years. Contact with politicians and public life in legislative halls is often deleterious to piety and moral uprightness; but, unlike many, Dr. King maintained an irreproachable character and led a useful life even amidst such antagonizing influences.

In the year 1835 the doctor and his wife united themselves to the Methodist Episcopal Church in Pickens county, Alabama, and became consistent followers of Christ. He served the church as steward for many years, contributed to the support of its institutions and its ministers, and loved its ordinances.

In 1854 he removed from Pickens county, Alabama, to Lauderdale county, Mississippi. In this county he spent the evening of his life—a beautiful and useful life-evening. It is said he grew old gracefully and cheerfully. The shining qualities of head and heart in earlier and vigorous manhood now ripened and mellowed into Christian virtues, and shed their fragrance upon the evening air. In social life he was genial and companionable, as a husband and father devoted and tender, in Christian character pure and guileless.

But "death enters, and there's no defense." He loves a shining mark, and his fatal shafts were truly aimed; and our beloved friend and brother has been gathered to his reward, and doubtless now rejoices with the great throng who have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb. He died on the twenty-third of October, 1872, at his home in Lauderdale county, Mississippi, and was buried in the city burying ground of Meridian. We "sorrow, but not as those who have no hope." "But in the sweet by-and-by we shall meet on that beautiful shore."

WILLIAM B. HINES.

MERIDIAN, MISS., April 2, 1873.

ON THE night of the fourth of March, while all nature seemed wrapped in sleep, the store, dwelling and warehouse—all under the same roof—of Messrs. Ring & Co., at Rolling Fork landing, near Rolling Fork, was robbed, its inmates murdered, and the building burned with the murdered bodies. The victims of the dark tragedy were Mr. Jesse Moore, a clever gentleman, about thirty-five years of age; his wife, Mrs. Martha E. Moore, about twenty-five years of age, and a member of our church at Rolling Fork; Mr. Joseph Gouchatt, a German Hebrew; Mr. Joseph Ring, a brother of Mr. Ring, of the firm above named; and little Willie Jenns, an orphan of eleven summers, or thereabout. Little Willie was a member of our Sunday school; hence the subjoined in memoriam from his school-fellows, prepared by his teacher and others, which the Sunday school wishes published in your paper, Mr. Editor. We dislike to contemplate such horrid tragedies as the above; so we turn from it—we refrain further remarks.

H. WALTER FEATHERSTUN.

IN MEMORIAM.

Since it has pleased almighty God to take unto himself, on angel wings, WILLIE JEANS, one of the little flock of God's lambs, it becomes his fellow-members of Rolling Fork Sunday school—a pleasure that renders it sadly sweet—to offer this sad tribute to his memory. And since we look upon his death as a calamity to our Sunday school, we bemoan the sad fact that ere eleven summers had stamped their signet upon his brow, and before he had arrived at sufficient age to reflect the moral training of his Sunday school from his holy works and example, the cruel hand of death had laid him low in the grave. Wishing to express our great sorrow, we render this last tribute of his Sunday school:

Resolved, That while we readily acquiesce in the will of a kind Providence, and believe Heaven's decrees to be just, righteous and good, yet we deplore the sad fact that grim death has again appeared in our midst, and claimed a victim from our little band.

Resolved, That although we believe that the dear little lamb is now on angel wings, sweetly wafting, yet it is hard to reconcile his loss, and we cannot help mourning for him, and expressing feelings of the deepest sympathy to his bereaved friends and relatives. To his dear little sister and brother we extend our heartfelt sympathy, and lend our best wishes that this sad bereavement may not seem to them a punishment or a sacrifice, but that they may reflect that little Willie "is not dead, but sleepeth"—he is eternally happy.

Resolved, That since it is the will of high Heaven that our little Willie should depart this earthly tabernacle thus soon, we would not recall him from realms of happiness to this world of misery, nor reinstate in mortal frame he who must now, in angel's garb, be reveling in bliss around the throne of God. Let it be! However hard the burden to us, let us with humble hearts exclaim: "God's will be done."

Resolved, That while we feel depressed at the thought of losing Willie, and shocked at his horrid death, yet we must console ourselves with the thought that he has fled a world of sorrow, trouble and misery; and, having ascended to the paradise of eternal happiness, is now realizing the benefits of our Savior's command: "Suffer little children, and forbid them not, to come unto me, for of such is the kingdom of heaven."

WILLIE'S BOOKS.

BY MRS. VIRGINIA FRANTZ.

"I'm in Fourth Reader now, mamma!
And I most have a book to-day;
And I have lost my spelling book;
May I not get them? Mamma, say?"
I did not answer her at first;
My thoughts went backward o'er the years
To one who now is safe at rest,
Whose eyes were almost just like hers.

"Oh, tell me, mamma! Please mamma, quick!"
Pleaded the child with earnest looks.
But I kept saying, down in my heart:
Oh, can I take out Willie's books?
But why not? If my Willie sees
And knows what we are doing here,
To have his sister use his books,
I'm very sure, he would prefer.

I must be weak about these things,
For I could only make reply:
"You have not time this morning, dear;
You see the hour for school is nigh."
In silent thought I took my keys,
And said, "Stay here," in solemn tone;
For when I open Willie's trunk
I'd always rather be alone.

In prayerful mood I went up stairs,
And slowly, softly turned the key;
For Willie's trunk and all therein
Are like to sacred things to me.
I never can look at his clothes
Unless for inward strength I pray,
And there were marbles, pencils, nails,
Found in his pocket on that day.

The upper part was full of books—
School-books and story-books and toys.
The reader and the spelling-book
Were there; but then they were my boy's!
I took them out, and turned the leaves
His childish hand had written o'er,
And fell to dreaming of my boy,
Who would no need them any more.

No, he'll no need them any more;
He's learning now from angel hands;
But, ah! my heart would always ache
To see those books in other hands.
So one by one I put them back,
And softly turned the key again,
Resolving that all Willie's things
Should sacred ever to him remain.

My little daughter does not know
The struggle I that morn went through;
But she has now the wished-for books,
Well pleased with them, so bright and new.
But most I love those half-worn ones,
Because no more those dear black eyes
Will look in them; they're reading now
Eternal words beyond the skies.

My Frozen Flowers.

I had a little tiff with one of my neighbors this morning; Everybody calls me a good Baptist sister, and here I forget and have ill-natured spells often, and that's not what would be expected of a woman professing godliness. It came about in this way:

Some of my house-plants froze last night, and it nearly broke my heart for a little while. It seemed so hard to go right on and cook breakfast in a worldly way—broil steak, bake potatoes, and have the aroma of the coffee filling the kitchen, and the loaf lying on the white cloth, and the bread-knife beside it—all as if nothing had happened, when only a dozen steps away stood my darlings, cold and still in death.

A jeweled Madame Lemoine, with dazzling flowers shooting up like red flames through the mass of green, touched me sorest. On the night before, the last thing before I went to bed, I stood with bared feet and hanging hair beside her in the treacherous white moonlight, and tenderly gathered her crowned head in my softest touch, and kissed her, saying: "Oh, you old darling, you're too beautiful!"

Yes, she was too beautiful for the fate that so cruelly awaited her.

A rose geranium, three years old, that stood beside her, was bristling like a pointed bayonet. It looked as though it meant "war to the knife."

Just after breakfast my neighbor, Uriah, came in. I kept my back toward him, and tried to talk as usual. At last he caught a glimpse of my face and blurted out: "Been a-cryin'? What's the fraction now?"

"Why, my finest plants froze—last—night—and—I—I—" and here I leaned my arm and my head on the table and cried aloud.

"Why, you old goose, you, would you bawl over a few paltry, worthless weeds, that have already lived past the season of green things? I'm astonished at you, Pipsey Potts," and he came up and laid his big hand on my head as gentle as its avoirdupois weight would allow.

Touched? I guess I was! All the blood of the Broady's was boiling.

"Go 'way, you old virago!" said I, starting up; "I only know of one green thing living past its time, and that's you. You had no right to ask me what was the matter; you're impertinent, calling me a goose, when I'm a member in good standing in the reg'lar Baptist Church. If you'd one spark o' kindness about you, you would have said you were sorry for me, and pitied me. That would have cost you nothing, and would have done me good. I don't think you have much religion, old meanness!"

I looked up at my neighbor, supposing that he would be standing there almost annihilated.

What was my surprise to see him doubling over with his hands resting on his knees, quite convulsed with laughter.

I stared at him as cold as granite.

"I declare, Pip," said he, "it does you good to get angry. I wish old Elder Nutt, over at Bloody Run church, could see you; with your bright eyes and red cheeks and scarlet lips, you'd make a conquest, sure. Let me see, you're five feet seven, ha! ha! ha! Well, I declare, if you didn't look like six feet seven!"

Would you believe it? His laugh was so full of magnetism that I got to laughing too. Uriah is such a droll fellow, one has to laugh at him.

After it was all over and he had wiped his eyes, he said: "One thing, Pipsey, I don't just know what you meant when you said I hadn't much religion. What did you mean by that?"

"I can soon tell you what I meant. I had been thinking all day yesterday that what we most need in our everyday life is more religion.

"Not that kind that shows itself in going to church regularly and wearing our Sunday clothes, and sitting up straight in our pews, and singing hymns, and dropping something into the contribution-box, and discussing regeneration and sanctification with long faces—not that kind.

"We want a religion that comes right into the heart of the family, and keeps the father from saying spiteful things if dinner is late, or his coat or boots have been moved, or if the pigs get into the grain-field, or if a neighbor's cattle throw his fences—a religion that keeps the wife from fretting over unkind words, or grease-spots or tattle or a cross baby. We want a religion that will make us speak kind words and think kind thoughts, and cherish charity instead of malice—a religion that will make us withhold unloving words, and give pity and gentle and generous words instead."

"Yes, yes; well, that's all right," said Uriah, and after telling me how to wrap up the pots and plunge the frozen plants into cold water, and partially save them, he left me with a laugh, that sounded down the path like the gurgle of a jug.—Pipsissiway Potts, in Arthur's Home Magazine.

Transmitted Alcoholism.

From an able paper on "Hereditary Physical Transmission," contributed to the Cotemporary Review, by Dr. W. B. Carpenter, we extract the following on the hereditary results of alcoholic excess:

"There is one class of cases in which a particular abnormal form of nutrition that is distinctly acquired by the individual exerts a most injurious influence upon the offspring—that, namely, which is the result of habitual alcoholic excess. There can be no reasonable question that the continual action of what have been termed 'nervine stimulants' modifies the nutrition of the nervous system; for in no other way can we account for the fact—unfortunately but too familiar—that it not only comes to tolerate what would have been in the first instance absolutely poisonous, but that it comes to be dependent upon a repetition of the dose for the power of sustaining its ordinary activity, and that the want of such repetition produces an almost unbearable craving, which is as purely physical as that of hunger or thirst. Now all these 'nervine stimulants' further agree in this, that while they excite or misdirect the automatic activity of the mind, they weaken the controlling power of the will; and this is exactly the condition which, intensified and fixed into permanence, constitutes insanity. We have a larger experience of the results of habitual alcoholic excess than we have in regard to any other 'nervine stimulant;' and all such experience is decidedly in favor of the hereditary transmission of that acquired perversion of the normal nutrition of the nervous system which it has induced. That this manifests itself sometimes in congenital idiocy, sometimes in a predisposition to insanity, which requires but a very slight exciting cause to develop it, and sometimes in a strong craving for alcoholic drinks, which the unhappy subject of it strives in vain to resist, is the concurrent testimony of all who have directed their attention to the inquiry. Thus Dr. Howe, in his report on the statistics of idiocy in Massachusetts, states that the habits of the parents of three hundred idiots having been learned, one hundred and forty-five, or nearly one-half, were found to be habitual drunkards. In one instance, in which both parents were drunkards, seven idiotic children were born to them. Dr. Down, whose experience of idiocy is greater than that of any other man in this country, has assured me that he does not consider Dr. Howe's statement as at all exaggerated. Sir W. A. F. Browne, the first medical lunacy commissioner for Scotland, thus wrote when himself in charge of a large asylum: 'The drunkard not only injures and enfeebles his own nervous system, but entails mental disease upon his family. His daughters are nervous and hysterical; his sons are weak, wayward, eccentric, and sink under the pressure of excitement, of some unforeseen exigency, or the ordinary calls of duty. Dr. Howe remarks that the children of drunkards are deficient in bodily and vital energy, and are predisposed by their very organization to have cravings for alcoholic stimulants. If they pursue the course of their fathers, which they have more temptation to follow, and less power to avoid, than the children of the temperate, they add to their hereditary weakness, and increase the tendency to idiocy or insanity in their constitution; and this they leave to their children after them. The experiences of those who, like Hartley Coleridge, have inherited the craving for alcoholic excitement, together with the weakness of will which makes them powerless to resist it, while all their better nature prompts the struggle, must satisfy any one who carefully weighs them, how closely connected their psychical state is with the physical constitution which they inherit. As I heard Robert Collyer, of Chicago, well say in an admirable sermon on 'The Thorn in the Flesh:' 'In the far-reaching influences that go to every life, and away backward as certainly as forward, children are sometimes born with appetites fatally strong in their nature. As they grow up the appetite grows with them, and speedily becomes a master, the master a tyrant, and by the time he arrives at his manhood the man is a slave. I heard a man say that for eight-and-twenty years the soul within him had to stand, like an unsleeping sentinel, guarding his appetite for strong drink. To be a man at last under such a disadvantage, not to mention a saint, is as fine a piece of grace as can well be seen. There is no doctrine that demands a larger vision than this of the depravity of human nature.' Old Dr. Mason used to say that as much grace as would make John a saint would barely keep Peter from knocking a man down.'"

FAITH acted supports. Food nourisheth not by having it, but by eating and digesting it. So it is the using and acting of faith that strengthens and comforts the soul. As there is always hunger and want, there should ever be a feeding or taking in.—Symond.

A CLERGYMAN said the other day that modern young ladies were not the daughters of Shem and Ham, but the daughters of Hem and Sham.

Advice to Young Ladies.

FOLLY ON THE WING.

First, you are perfect idiots to go on in this way. Your bodies are the most beautiful of God's creation. In the continental galleries I always saw groups of people gathered about the pictures of women. It was not a passion; the gazers were just as likely to be women as men; it was because of the wonderful beauty of a woman's body.

Now stand with me at my office window and see a lady pass. There goes one! Now isn't that a pretty looking object? A big hump, three big lumps, a wilderness of crimps and frills, a hauling up of the dress here and there, an enormous, hideous mass of false hair or bark piled on top of her head, surmounted by a little flat, ornamented with bits of lace, birds' tails, etc. The shop windows tell you all day long of the padding, whalebones and steel springs which occupy most of the space within that outside rig.

In the name of all the simple, sweet sentiments which cluster about a home, I would ask, how is a man to fall in love with such a piece of compound, double-twisted, touch-me-not artificiality as you see in that wriggling enclosity?

Secondly, with a wasp-waist, squeezing your lungs, stomach, liver and other vital organs into one-half their natural size, how can any man of sense, who knows that life is made up of use, of sense, of service, of work, take to such a partner? He must be desperate, indeed, to unite himself for life with such a fettered, half-breathing ornament.

Thirdly, your bad dress and lack of exercise lead to bad health, and men wisely fear that instead of a helpmate they would get an invalid to take care of. This bad health in you, just as in men, makes the mind as well as the body faded and effeminate. You have no power, and use big adjectives, such as "splendid." No magnetism! I know you giggle freely, "awful," but then this don't deceive us; we can see through it all. You are artificial, affected, silly; you have none of that womanly strength and warmth which are so assuring and attractive to man. Why, you become so childish and weak-minded that you refuse to wear decent names even, and insist upon baby names. Instead of Helen, Margaret and Elizabeth, you affect Nellie, Maggie and Lizzie. When your brothers were babies you called them Bobby, Dicky, Johnny; but when they grow up to manhood, no more of that silly trash, if you please. But I know a woman of twenty-five years, and she is as big as both my grandmothers put together, who insists upon being called Kitty, and her real name is Catherine, and although her brain is big enough to conduct affairs of state, she does nothing but giggle, cover up her face with her fan, and exclaim, once in four minutes: "Don't now; you are real mean."

How can a man propose a life partnership to such a silly goose? My dear girls, you must, if you get husbands, and decent ones, dress in plain, neat, becoming garments, and talk like sensible, earnest sisters.

You say that the most sensible men are crazy after these butterflies of fashion. I beg your pardon, it is not so. Occasionally a man of brilliant success may marry a silly, weak woman, but as I have heard women say a hundred times that the most sensible men choose women without sense, is simply absurd. Nineteen times in twenty sensible men choose sensible women. I grant you that in company they are very likely to chat and toy with these overdressed and forward creatures, but they don't ask them to go to the altar with them.

Fourthly, among the young men in the matrimonial market, only a small number are independently rich, and in America such very rarely make good husbands. But the number of those who are just beginning in life, who are filled with a noble ambition, who have a future, is very large. These are worth having. But such will not, they dare not, ask you to join them, while they see you so idle, silly and so gorgeously attired. Let them see that you are industrious, economical, with habits that secure your health and strength, that your life is earnest and real, that you would be willing to begin at the beginning in life with the man you would consent to marry, then marriage will become the rule, and not, as now, the exception.—Bible Banner.

The Door Test.

A correspondent of the Scientific American gives the following novel manner for measuring men's characters:

"During the last ten years, in the winter season, according to our daily record, we have noticed the manner in which one thousand persons who called for work have opened, shut or not shut our store-door. This, you may say, is a futile and useless undertaking; but we entertain a very different opinion. What are the facts, and what are the deductions?

"1. Out of one thousand persons recorded, three hundred and thirty-five opened the door and shut it carefully, when they came in and when they went out, without much noise.

"2. Two hundred and twenty-six opened it in a hurry, and made an attempt to shut it, but did not, and merely pulled it to when they went out.

"3. Three hundred and two did not attempt to shut it at all, either on coming in or going out.

"4. Ninety-six left it open when they came in, but, when reminded of the fact, made ample apology, and shut it when they went out.

"5. One hundred and two opened it in a great hurry, and then slammed it to violently, but left it open when they went out.

"6. Twenty came in with, 'How do you do, sir?' or 'Good-morning!' or 'Good-evening, sir!' and all of these went through the operation of wiping their feet on the mat, but did not shut the door when they came in nor when they went out.

"Remarks: We have employed men out of all the above classes, and during that time have had an opportunity of judging of their merits, etc. The first class—of three hundred and thirty-five—were those who knew their trade, and commenced and finished their work in a methodical manner; were quiet, and had little to say in their working hours, and were well approved by those for whom they did the work. They were punctual to time, and left nothing undone which they were ordered to do. They did not complain about trifles, and in all respects they were reliable men, and were kind and obliging in their general conduct."

IN THE Bibliotheca Sacra for January Dr. W. M. Thomson, author of "The Land and the Book," gives some fresh explanations of the figurative language of Scripture. Thus the oft-repeated petition, "Lord, lift thou up the light of thy countenance upon us," is best understood and illustrated by picturing to one's self a royal sovereign and judge in his hall of audience, seated upon a low cushion, rug or mat, according to oriental custom. In this position the accused or the suppliant, standing before him, could not see his face, especially when bent down in displeasure, as implied in the form of the petition. This relative attitude can be seen any day in the audience-room of Turkish pachas and judges. The petitioners are not allowed to sit down, but must stand, with hands humbly clasped together, and thus wait the pleasure of him whose will is law. If the petition is accepted, the favor granted, or the suppliant pardoned, the man of doom and destiny lifts up his head, and with a benignant smile dismisses the rejoicing suppliant. But to turn aside the face, look down, and thus hide the countenance, has always been and still is in this Eastern world an alarming omen, foreboding rejection, imprisonment or death, as the case may be. Moreover, these orientals can and do, when they choose, wonderfully darken the countenance. I have seen it, says Dr. Thomson, gather absolute blackness, like a portentous cloud, ready to explode in death-dealing thunderbolts. And, on the other hand, when greatly delighted, the whole face is overspread with a warm, brilliant glow, very beautiful and fascinating. This is what suggested the petition so oft repeated in the eightieth Psalm: "Turn us again, O God; and cause thy face to shine, and we shall be saved." Imagine a suppliant for mercy standing in an agony of doubt and fear before his offended sovereign, who hides his frowning face, and refuses to give one glance toward the trembling wretch, and you have the exact conditions which may have originated the peculiar costume of the prayer: "Lift thou up the light of thy countenance. Cause thy face to shine upon us."

CARICATURES OF RELIGIOUS MEN. Many are the friends of the late Mr. Dickens who have lamented most deeply the unfair representations of the religious world which are met with in his writings. Whenever any one is introduced professing to belong to a "serious" circle, we commonly find a noisy, fussy, coarse, repulsive being, selfish and false to the last degree, cunning and crafty in the accomplishment of his aims, wanting in every gentle and estimable feature—a being to be hated and abhorred. On the other hand, those that win our regard and affection, as model men or model women, have no special religious views, merely a touch of natural religion. The thing has become so common in other writers of fiction as to amount to a nuisance, even in a literary point of view. Thackeray has his Mrs. Hobson or Newcome in "The Newcomes," and in "The Virginians" Mr. Whitefield himself is exposed to his detracting sarcasm. Mr. Kingsley has his New Zealand missionary in "Alton Locke;" Mrs. Oliphant has a weakness for the dissenting minister; Miss Braddon can at least give to the religious character a passing fling. When names of such authority set the example, it is no wonder if the smaller fry of authorship most readily follows in their wake. No one denies that such characters are to be found; to the upright portion of the religious community they are a source of daily and bitter lamentation. But they are not the rank and file of the religious world, the fair average specimens of its membership. It is in representing them in this light that the great injustice of our fictitious writers lies. They are to the rest of the community as spurious half-crowns are to the true coin, or as pretended unfortunates, begging at our door, are to the really needy. And unfortunately it is not difficult to find a motive for the effort of novelists to give them the position of representative men, and virtually say to their readers: Ex uno disce omnes.—Sunday Magazine.

SLEEP is the Sabbath of the day. It is the periodical wind-up of the weary mechanism of flesh, which else would run down and stop. It is a new baptism of the fainting powers, as in waters of renovating energy. It is the grave in which tired nature sleeps, to spring to life by a fresh resurrection on the morrow. Of its inestimable value we may form some faint idea when we consider what inroads on the health and spirits its absence, even for one or two successive nights, will make on the strongest frame; and that to be a stranger to its gentle visitations for months together is recognized as among the most terrible of all conceivable afflictions, issuing in an entire disorganization of the whole physical and mental frame, and not seldom in madness. Ah! we little know what a priceless boon we have to thank God for every day we can say: "I laid me down and slept."—Sunday Magazine.

DRIFTING.—Most people drift. To do this is easy. It costs neither thought nor effort. On the other hand, to resist the tide one must have principle and resolution. He must watch and pray and struggle continually. And yet no thoughtful person who cares for his own soul will dare to drift.

Religious Intelligence.

EIGHT hundred Presbyterian ministers have no regular employment.

THE Presbyterian ministers and churches in southern California are to be constituted into a new presbytery, to be known as "the presbytery of Los Angeles."

THE relief fund for the windows and orphans of deceased ministers of the Presbyterian Church South amounts to $3,000 at the end of the first year, just closed.

THE Watchman and Reflector says that of six missionaries sent to Asia since July, 1865, only three have died. Of the forty-six sent to Burmah not one had died in seventeen years.

THE corner-stone of St. Paul's Protestant Episcopal church in Rome was laid on January 25. The church is expected to cost $60,000, of which $33,000 have been collected in this country.

THE trustees of Talmage's Tabernacle think that the new church will be ready for dedication on the last Sunday in September. The subscriptions are nearly full; $1,075 was collected two weeks ago.

THE venerable Bishop Richardson, of the Canadian Methodist Episcopal Church, though in his eighty-third year, is still engaged in ministerial and episcopal work. He is universally esteemed by his churches.

REV. D. MCDONALD, late pastor of the Wesleyan Methodist church at Seaton, Canada, has been appointed missionary to Japan, and will soon go out under the auspices of the Canadian Wesleyan Missionary Society.

THE Bishop of Ely has "admitted" two lay readers, the Bishop of Peterboro two, and the Bishop of London eight, at a public service, with the form, "Take thou authority to read the word of God," etc., delivering a Bible to each.

THE oldest Methodist church on the continent is known as St. George's, on Fourth street, Philadelphia. It was built by a German Reformed congregation, and when partly finished was purchased by the Methodists.

ANOTHER CHINESE TESTAMENT.—The New Testament in the Foochow colloquial dialect has been just published. The translation was by a joint committee of the missionaries of the American and the Methodist Episcopal Boards. A hymn-book has also been published.

IN THE recent revival in Salem, Oregon, a Catholic lady, the sister-in-law of a Romish priest, was converted, and renounced Romanism. She is now a zealous member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. The total number received into that church since October is 140.

THE family of the late Dr. Lowell Mason has presented his valuable library of books relating to sacred music to the theological department of Yale College. Only one thing more is needed, and that is a competent professor of music to teach the students to appreciate the gift.

AN EDITION of the New Testament in the Russian language, under the sanction of the Greek Church, is going into circulation. The agent of the British and Foreign Bible Society at Odessa reports the sale of 40,000 copies within the first six months of 1871, and hopes to sell 100,000 annually.

THE Dublin Catholic Union has forwarded to Gladstone a formal demand that Parliament shall establish a Catholic university, conducted on entirely Catholic principles; and all other "honors and emoluments shall be accessible to Catholics equally with their Protestant fellow-subjects!" Modest, isn't it?

INFLAMMATORY PREACHING IN ITALY.—The curate of Pollein (Aosta) has been sentenced by the Court of Assizes of Ivrea to fifteen days' imprisonment and 300 francs fine, for having preached from his pulpit an inflammatory sermon against the government of the country, condemning it to all eternity for interfering with the property of the church.

THE HOTTENTOTS.—A more discouraging field of missionary labor could not be found than among the Hottentots, probably, next to the New Hollander, the most degraded tribe of savages on the earth. Dr. Vanderkemp began a mission among them because they were the most unpromising race. But many thriving, industrious and honest communities have been established among this people.

NEW ZEALAND.—Missions were commenced in this island in 1815. The natives were utterly savage, cruel and untrustworthy. In order to obtain scholars it was necessary to hire boys and girls to come, by feeding them. Now there are 6,500 communicants, representing 30,000 or 35,000 converts. The church is well supplied with clergy, both native and foreign, and the church is aiming at self-support.

AT THE late meeting of the Convocation of Canterbury, England, that body, on motion of Bishop Selwyn, adopted a resolution for the appointment of a committee to report upon the practicability of a general council of the Anglican Church in 1875; this council to have representatives from the Canadian, the United States, the New Zealand and Australian churches, and is to be held in Canterbury. The committee are also to report upon the advisability of inviting the Lord Archbishop of Canterbury to undertake the office of patriarch of the church.

THE board of managers of the American Bible Society have resolved that hereafter its agents shall be styled and commissioned as "district superintendents." This title is far more appropriate to the many official duties which are discharged by these men of all work. In pursuance of the plan which was adopted some years ago, the powers and fields of a number of the most important agencies have been greatly enlarged. Nearly the whole of New England now constitutes one district, under the care of the Rev. W. H. Gilbert. California, Nevada, Oregon and Washington have been consolidated into one department, and the Rev. John Thompson, now the agent for Indiana, has been appointed district superintendent for the Pacific coast. The Rev. Frederick Buel, who has been the agent for California for many years, and is now in poor health, will remain associated with Mr. Thompson as an advisory superintendent.—Christian Intelligencer.

THE CHURCH OF THE WASHINGTONS.—The rector of Washington parish, Westmoreland county, Virginia, wishes to build a brick chapel on the site of "Old Pope's Creek church," where he officiates, in a school-house, and asks assistance for his object. It was near this old church, which is now in ruins, that General Washington was born. It was in this that he was baptized. Here it was that he received those early religious impressions which, instead of being effaced by age, seemed to grow with his growth and strengthen with his strength. * * * Many years ago Bishop Meade wrote of it: "Trees and shrubs have been growing up, over and around the old site, rendering it more difficult each year to the passing traveler to find out where 'Old Pope's Creek church' once stood. * * * I could not but ask the friend that was with me if it were not possible that a simple but durable monument could be placed on the roadside, with the name of 'Pope's Creek church' upon it to inform posterity that on this spot stood the church of the Washingtons."

A STREET OF CHURCHES.—Broad street, Philadelphia, writes a correspondent of the Watchman and Reflector, which is destined to be not only the grandest thoroughfare in our city, but in any city of the world, is not forgotten by the churches. Here are most of our costliest edifices, and here others of equal expensiveness are in contemplation. It would seem that Broad street and vicinity is regarded as missionary ground, or that the battle of Armageddon is to be fought somewhere thereabouts. All denominations are pressing in that direction, and are locating there their strongest church organizations. The Jews, not to be rivaled by their Gentile neighbors, have erected on this street one of the finest synagogues they have on the continent, costing $250,000. Besides the elegant Methodist edifice about to be erected on this street, they have one costing $300,000. The Lutherans are erecting one immediately opposite the latter, and also the First Baptist, to cost fully as much. The Episcopalians as yet have but one church edifice on this street.

THE National Bible Society of Scotland has just held its annual meeting at Edinburg, presided over by the Earl of Kintore. The Rev. Dr. Gould, the principal secretary, in reporting the society's operations for the past year, stated that the free contributions had amounted to £13,025, and the returns for Scriptures sold to £10,025. The number of Bibles and Testaments issued was 280,005, besides 78,040 gospels, or portions, which had been circulated. A new impression of the Erik Scriptures had been granted to Dr. Robb, for circulation in Calabar, and application had been made for help in printing a version in the High Malayan tongue. The Rev. Dr. Williamson is the society's principal agent in China, and it was stated that their work was making great progress there. The claims of Japan had engaged the attention of the directors, and they had arranged to invite special subscriptions for that purpose. Altogether the report was a satisfactory one, and shows the good which has resulted from the amalgamation many years ago of the two Bible societies which existed for many years in the North.

THE Christian Church of native believers in Yokohama is quietly and steadily growing, and becoming a center of marked influence among the Japanese people. On Sunday afternoon, December 15, in the fine new school-house attached to the American Mission Home, under the care of Mrs. Pruyn, three Japanese converts were baptized, and the communion was partaken of by the native believers and the foreign Christians present. The aspects of the work in Yokohama is, at present, from all points of view, very encouraging. How the tide is beginning to ebb from heathenism and to flood toward Christianity is notable in Yeddo, under the very eyes of a government most severely determined "not to interfere with the private religious belief of its subjects." The minister of education, who is now also minister of religion, is a man of advanced opinions, and believes in the "liberty of unlicensed printing," the freedom of the press, and of the people to inquire into religion. The freest and fullest discussion of religious and moral questions is allowed and encouraged in the Imperial College. A sadly significant fact is found in this, that in the Union church in Yeddo the number of Japanese present frequently exceeds the number of foreigners present. The very few foreigners in the interior of Japan who are willing to speak of Christianity to inquiring natives have a sort of circulating library, composed of two books—Gospels of Matthew and Mark, translated in Japanese. Copies of these, sent out to several teachers in the interior, are in almost constant circulation among intelligent readers who wish to learn about Yaso, and to know whether the "criminal god" and once accursed sect of the "Kiristans" are really good things, after all. As surely as the truth of Christ can leaven a nation, so surely is that truth leavening Japan; and the fruit of a professed and practiced religion must follow. From present appearances, as in almost all past history, the cities will be the centers of Christian influence; while the country and the village will be the last strongholds of idolatry and perverted truth. Just as the inhabitants of the pagi and the heaths of old, in Europe, held on to their old superstitions longest, and were named from their places of habitation, so we predict that either of the Japanese words "inakamono" or "hyaku-sho" (farmer, peasant, countryman,) will in course of time come to be synonymous with an equivalent to our word "heathen" or "pagan."—Independent.

Learning How Too Late.

We have been much impressed with the letter of Dr. Pierce, which we publish this week, and especially with this declaration: "But, alas! for me, I have learned how to preach when it is too late." After preaching sixty-seven years the venerable man, who for the most of that time has ranked among the first of pulpit men, tells us that he has but just learned how to preach. Doubtless he means just what he says, and, with his highest ideal barely reached in extreme age, it is now too late to reap the fruits which might have been gathered in his more vigorous days. His experience is probably that of nearly all preachers of the gospel. It takes long to learn how. Many never learn at all, but those who make proof of their ministry, attain to the greatest excellence and achieve the best results are ever seeking for improvement, and attain to their highest conceptions and qualifications when the infirmities of age put a restraint upon their efforts.

It is not true of preaching alone, but of nearly everything else, that men learn how when it is too late to reap the full benefits of the knowledge acquired. In every calling the healthful mind advances toward a certain perfection which death or infirmity arrests. In farming, in mechanical and scientific pursuits, in literature and commerce, in the art of money-making, and in the affairs of ambition and political aspiration, the golden lessons of a life-long experience come too late to be of practical value in their complete and highest application. The physician is old before he is really prepared to assume the responsibilities of the healing art, and by the time the lawyer grasps the principles of jurisprudence, in any tolerable degree, his head is white. It is broadly true of life, its duties and purposes, that men learn how to live when for some things it is too late. "If I had my life to go over again" is the preface of many a sage but impotent chapter of regrets and reflections on the past. We have some adequate idea of time and life just as our active days are gone and death is at the door. In short, we learn to live not till life is over, and the learning would seem to be a mockery, and the last contribution to the vanity and dissatisfaction of human existence. This learning to do when the strength and capacity to do are gone, whether it be in preaching or in anything else, is the common experience, and is the fact even where the confession and the consciousness of it are wanting.

It is not the confession, however, of negligence and sinful trifling that we are considering. There are multitudes who reach the end of life, or extreme old age, who have recklessly wasted and lost all, and will receive the condemnation of wicked and slothful servants. But the conscientious, the painstaking, the comparatively successful reach this conclusion of having attained the true knowledge of usefulness when its practical application is forever out of the question; as if, when the artist truly comprehends his art, whether of painting or sculpture, he can no longer wield either brush or chisel. When the servant of God, with rich stores of experience and treasures of knowledge long in gathering, feels himself just ready for his best work, he is laid aside. Whatever his calling or mission be, he has learned to fill it only as he is dismissed from it. Is there a mistake in this estimate of our earlier and later qualifications? or is it a part of the divine plan to achieve the greatest results with the most imperfect instruments? And is not the lesson of immortality intimately connected with the sense of inefficiency which the devoted Christian feels in old age? This preparation and readiness for the greatest usefulness would be a vanity and a perplexing mystery but for the life to come. Nothing good is learned too late, nothing good is acquired in vain, since the heavenly glory opens out of the present state of existence.

As with our qualifications for active and most successful effort, so it is in reference to the means of earthly enjoyment. The knowledge which brings entertainment and the widest range of thoughtful pleasure is reached only when the shadows of death begin to gather. The competence or wealth which makes men masters of their time, and places all desirable things within their grasp, is usually attained at a period when the journey of life is nearly at an end. It would seem that everything is too late—not only how to do this or that, but how to enjoy and to be happy in this world. This vanity of vanities points to immortality. If not too late in our repentance to secure that, we may be sure that all we have learned here will somehow follow and surround us in the future life. Just prepared for the highest usefulness, and just possessed of the best conditions for enjoyment, death comes. Such is the testimony of the best and noblest spirits of earth; and what is it but the strongest assertion of the life and immortality which we have in Jesus Christ. If this were the end it would be a sad and fearful declaration, coming from the experience of the good, as it does, that they have learned the most important lessons too late. Nothing is to satisfy, nothing is to be completed here, but eternity is to crown and glorify all.

Temperance.—No. III.

TO THE FRIENDS OF SOCIAL PEACE.

You see the spirit of intemperance, with insatiable maw, eating away the peace of families everywhere, and everywhere devouring the hard earnings of toil. You see it tracking the innocent to their bowers of bliss and seating at the firesides of the confiding, "the green-eyed monster." You see it, with busy brush, blackening the character of the pure, and with baser tongue defaming the reputation of the noble. You see it filching away the senses of rational men and undermining the health of robust constitutions. You see that it is the beginner of strife and the loud-mouthed promoter of broils. You see that more than half the divisions in families, more than half the strifes among men, more than half the heartaches of women, more than half the woe and sorrow of the land can be traced to the direct agency of this dark spirit.

You see and know and feel that dram-drinking is an evil. You see it is evil in its example, evil in its influences upon the young, evil in its effects upon society, evil in the miseries it engenders in the world, evil in the woes it entails upon posterity. You see that it destroys reputations and breaks down characters, and enervates the bodies and kills the souls of men. Then, as those who desire the welfare of your associates and the happiness of social life and the improvement of your race, it becomes you to "set your faces steadily" against this evil. As those who desire to see just laws equitably executed and honest labor amply remunerated; as those who wish for the end of strife and the bringing in of peace; as those who would delight to see all humanity climbing up to that grand elevation to which God has called it, it is your bounden duty to resist the influences and the agencies which this evil spirit has set to work in the world. In working against the evils which beset the human race the philanthropist cannot find a middle ground. He cannot say which he will resist and which he will not resist. He is bound to contend with anything and everything which entails evil upon men. If he does not settle himself in a firm and unalterable resolution to resist evil of every kind, then his profession as a lover of man is a mere sham.

In all this broad land of ours there is not a greater evil than this dram-drinking. There is not an evil in the land more seductive in its temptations or more pernicious in its influences or more baleful in its effects than this dram-drinking. Under its influences it seems that the whole atmosphere of society is tinged with that peculiar redness which is the sure precursor of the withering, scorching simoom. The whole framework of social life is tottering to pieces from the effects of this practice of dram-driuking, and every hour of the day and night souls are going down to the pit under its fascinating temptations. Then shall any man who regards human good look with complacence upon the impending ruin? Shall any man who loves the peace and happiness of his own domestic circle fail or falter in earnest resistance of this alarming evil? The philanthropist, the lover of order and harmony, not resist this spreading evil! Oh, ye friends of social peace, your example in this matter has done more harm than all the temperance societies have been able to counteract! You have not set yourselves as bulwarks against this evil, and the consequence is that it has swept over the land like a hurricane. Oh, ye lovers of men, wake up from your sleep! Arouse you from your death-like inactivity! Put forth your energies to arrest the progress of this demon! Show the world that you are in deed and in truth the true lovers of your race! "Quit you like men." Parley not with the enemy, but fight him henceforward, forever!

In Memoriam.

DR. B. H. MOSS.

It was whispered among his brethren, for several months before the fatal stroke: "I fear we shall not have Dr. Moss with us long. He is evidently failing; do you not think so?" Thus fond affection followed anxiously his every step. His absence from church or from the stewards' meeting on Monday night always started the inquiry and alarm: "Where is the doctor? Is he sick, I wonder? Have you heard?" Dr. J. B. Walker, his pastor for nearly twenty years, said last January, as he left this city: "I do not expect ever to see Dr. Moss again." The intense and sensitive solicitude with which evidently Mrs. Moss followed every movement of her husband alarmed every sympathizing observer. At last he had been to church, as usual, twice on Sunday, but on Monday night, at the stewards' meeting, it was asked: "Where is the doctor?" "Sick." We did not know it then, but he had already met with the board for the last time. It naturally comes in here to say that, as respects his official relations to the church, it is as the faithful and efficient steward that he will be the most seriously missed among us. The board feels itself bereaved of wise counsel, prompt responsibility and large material help in every time of need. He over bore his full share of the official burdens, and was, in short, a model steward.

In his death the community has lost a valuable, public-spirited and Christian citizen; the medical profession a distinguished and Christian brother; his patients have lost a beloved and Christian physician; friends a sympathizing, genial Christian friend; society has lost a courtly, elegant Christian gentleman; his family an idolized Christian husband and father, and the church an example of pure Christianity.

Dr. Moss was a native of Orangeburg, South Carolina. He came to New Orleans in 1848, at the age of thirty-one, and soon rose to eminence in his profession. He came a Methodist, and for many years and to the day of his death was steward and trustee of the Carondelet Street church. He married an elect lady, the daughter of T. K. Price, Esq., whose name and memory will ever be fragrant in the record of the Carondelet Street church. A son and daughter, almost grown, mourn with their mother a loss irreparable out of God himself. He alone can fill the aching void.

What the doctor was in the familiar intercourse of acquaintance and friendship can be understood only by those who knew him well—his gentle manners, his accomplished style of address, his dignity and humility, his impregnable truth, his refined hospitality.

He was eminently a man of duty, and yet his service of duty was as eminently the freedom of love. He gave of his means largely, liberally, constantly, and he loved to give, for love of God's cause in all its departments. There are poor a plenty that bless his memory, and with tearful eyes look in vain for his coming. He never objected that there were too many collections in the church; he always said there ought to be more, and often said to the writer: "Make the people give; make them give. Preach it; enforce the duty."

His care of the soldiery during the late war, of the naked, sick and suffering, is a matter of distinguished recollection. Provost marshals and generals yielded to his peculiarly urbane and quiet approaches, and gave him access to prisons and hospitals, where he ministered in every way to great numbers of the sick, and on one occasion obtained the privilege of clothing two hundred Confederate prisoners, making himself responsible for the bill.

Disease shook his mortal tabernacle to pieces in a few weeks. In all his illness his deepest experience was: "Not as I will, but as thou wilt." He passed quietly away, like himself—an unostentatious departure for his kingdom, crown and throne. The large concourse which thronged the church at his funeral showed how deeply and truly he was respected, admired and loved. Widely known throughout the whole connection of the Methodist Church South, ministers and laymen everywhere will mention his name with regret and reverence.

We who knew him best, and were most intimately associated with him, part with him only because we must; and yet we ought to be more than resigned, for the change is all gain to him. Affectionate hearts said: "Let us drape the church in mourning for the funeral services;" but the pastor said on the occasion: "Yes, let us not leave one bright spot on wall or ceiling unrelieved of the deepest black, if it be right so to nurse and express our natural grief; but no, let us rather hang the green of the triumphant laurel, and

"Rejoice for a brother deceased—
Our loss is his infinite gain;
A soul out of prison released,
And freed from his bodily chain;
With songs let us follow his flight,
And mount with his spirit above;
Escaped to the mansions of light,
And lodge in the Eden of love."

Bishop Keener said at the funeral: "Our noble friend and beloved brother did not lose sight, no, never, of the great truths of Christianity. No science was to him so great and profound as that of the moral and spiritual life. The mere phenomena of physiology and the organism of the human body did not to his mind include the sum of knowledge; the regular movement of forces did not hide from him the greater question as to the Source of all. Christianity was uppermost with him in practice, in attention to the house of God, in the drudgery of its duties. He was the best steward I ever knew."

He adorned every relation of life which he filled. Who more faithful? He was the joy of the sick-chamber. As a father, husband, friend he was pre-eminent in those qualities of dignity and love which constitute the beauty and strength of a family, and of social life in all its relations.

He had nothing in excess, but a well-ordered moderation, which rounded his character into harmonious and admirable proportions. He was never discomposed, but always thoughtful and urbane; remarkable for decision and a nice sense of propriety, so that his address was in the highest degree pleasing, easy and uniform. Next to his industry, no little of his success may be ascribed to his Christian politeness.

One of the greatest mercies of God is to die at home, in your own bed, surrounded by forms the most precious, voices the sweetest, and to feel the last touch of time in the presence of a life that has shared equally with you life's mingled cup. This was the privilege of our noble friend. He went out gradually.

"So fades a summer cloud away,
So sinks the gale when storms are o'er,
So gently shuts the eye of day,
So dies a wave along the shore."

I prayed with him and read to him; his eyes and his heart were full. His last words to me were asking me to see that a sister who was paralyzed should have a reclining chair, and to visit a merchant, a friend of his, who, like himself, had sustained a stroke of paralysis.

Thus has he passed; and who in this day and city has known a more delightful, purer, stronger character?

The Lord has blessed his wife and children in his company, in his life, and now in his memory forever blessed.

Summer and Winter.

THE TOWN AND THE COUNTRY—GOD MADE ALL.

MR. EDITOR: After the longest and persistently the coldest winter within the memory of the oldest inhabitants, spring has reappeared—the time when kings go forth to war and farmers to their fields. The time of the singing of birds has come, and the voice of the turtle is heard in the land. The rivers which stood at flood-tide for many weeks are "sullenly retiring." The woods are lighted up at night with long lines of fires, which come down the sides of the mountains like armies advancing in battle. The little streams in the valleys are flushing in the sunlight, their banks are growing greener, and occasionally a modest flower shows its petals above the protecting foliage. Already the bees are stirring in the orchard blossoms, and the cows come from the pastures with distended udders. Man is rejoicing over the prospect of returning harvest, and is beginning to count over the months that are yet to elapse before he can gather the golden grain. The pious heart may now exclaim, in the language of the psalmist: "O Lord, thou hast made us glad through thy work and through the operation of thy hands." Once more the country people begin going to church on Sundays, and the disbanded congregations are being gathered together. Sunday schools will now revive from their period of suspended animation, and the preacher, like the farmer, will find his work growing upon his hands. New families will make their appearance at church, to be visited by the pastor; the aged and the feeble will resume their accustomed places, and the children will seem to multiply along the paths leading to the house of God.

Winter is a stern disciplinarian, but let us not suppose that his lessons are in vain. Much time has been gained for reading and reflection, social life has glowed into warmth around the bright hearthstone, and our "bearded teacher" has given to each of his children some lessons of mutual help and mutual dependence. Especially has man been brought into closer sympathy with the suffering creatures beneath him, that have received their daily food from his ungrudging hand; and while his tenderness and compassion has been contracted into a narrower circle, it has been thereby intensified and increased.

I write from the country, where men receive most of their impressions from the aspects of surrounding nature, and where each season of the year is a new unfolding of the book of Divine Providence. In the city it is altogether different. There the supply of mental aliment is constant and uninterrupted. The daily papers laid at your door tell you of the changes of the year, but you scarcely perceive them unless you consult your thermometers. Your churches are open day and night, your schools in full attendance, and it is only the recurrence of the fall and spring fashions on the streets or in the churches that remind you of the alternations of summer and winter. In winter you have your busiest season—trading, making money, and even holding long protracted meetings and revivals of religion. When summer comes everything grows dull, and you are off to the springs, to the seashore or the mountains to get another glimpse of the almost forgotten face of nature. But whither does all this tend? Simply to this end—it takes both summer and winter to make the year, and both town and country to make the world. Irving, in his description of the great city of London, tells us that the east and the west end of that city are strangers to each other, and are occupied in seemingly contrary pursuits. In the east end the day is the busy season; in the west it is the night. From about nine to eleven at night the noise and roar of wheels in the east end subsides, till by midnight all there is silent. But about the same time the west end begins to move, and from twelve to one the highways are thronged with passing vehicles, the palaces and theaters are flashing with splendor, and the night is transformed into day. By four in the morning the roll of fashion dies away, and at about the same hour the market wagons and butchers' carts begin to move again in the east. By daylight the west is wrapped in profound repose, and the east is again alive with the feet of the multitude. But it is the wealth of the west end that supports the business of the east, and vice versa.

Death of Col. H. J. G. Battle.

The Shreveport Times of the fourth instant comes to us in mourning, and contains the sad intelligence of the death of its senior proprietor, Colonel Henry John Gray Battle. Our acquaintance with Colonel Battle began more than twenty years ago, since which we have known him intimately and well. A more refined gentleman, a better citizen or a truer and more upright man we have never known. During his long career as a journalist and in other business pursuits he was without fear and, without reproach, and his name was never associated with anything base or dishonorable. He was one of the tenderest of husbands, a most considerate and generous friend, and a model and pattern of every manly virtue in society. He was a writer of much merit, and possessed a mind of rare brilliancy and attainments. To us his death comes as a personal bereavement; and while we condole with the afflicted wife and other kindred, we must also join them in a sorrow which deeply touches a whole community. Colonel Battle was an honor and a blessing to our State, and his death is a loss most deep and irreparable to Shreveport. We quote the following from the Shreveport Times of the fourth:

Just as we are going to press the sad, sad intelligence reaches the office that the spirit of the good, the gifted, the noble Henry Battle has winged its flight toward the limitless shores of the eternal!

And as the hushed whisper goes from case to case, the nimble fingers of the compositors are stilled, the click of the types ceases and awful silence reigns in the composing-room; for he who even the little newsboys delighted to reverence and love is dead!

The writer of this would not, if at this late hour he had the time, infringe on the sacred right of another so far as to attempt a suitable notice of the noble dead; suffice it to say, that Colonel Henry John Gray Battle has been a resident of this city for more than thirty years, and in that time no man ever heard aught against his good, irreproachable name.

He was the pioneer of the press in north Louisiana, and died in the harness, being at the time of his death the senior proprietor of this paper.

May the widow's Friend temper the wind of this mighty storm and shield her from its awful shock.

Testimony of the Aged.

We copy the following letter from Dr. Pierce to the Southern Christian Advocate on the occurrence of his eighty-ninth birthday. To us these utterances of the aged preacher are more precious than gold.

DEAR BRO. KENNEDY: Please allow me space in the Advocate in which to salute my many friends on this my eighty-ninth birthday.

Beloved Brethren: I desire that every one who feels that I have been of any real service to the church join with me in devout thanksgiving to God for having so amazingly spun out my thread of life. It is said that I am the only man who has ever remained effective—as we express it—for sixty-seven years! Through the mercy of God I have. I never felt any actual failure in my capacity for pulpit labor until 1872. But in July of that year my physical powers utterly gave way. In January of this year I commenced trying to preach every Sunday, in order to test by experiment the propriety of announcing a series of appointments for myself. I felt no special encouragement. I got through with no great difficulty, but without any conscious improvement of my vocal power. I felt all the time that it was possible one or two vigorous efforts would produce sudden death. Still I have never felt after preaching that I was materially injured by the effort. My safety has been secured, I think, by a judicious estimate of my strength, which I have endeavored not to overtax. On the second Sunday in March I filled the first appointment of my own making, since preaching at Oxford, in July last. Yesterday I filled my second appointment. It was the last day of my eighty-eighth year, and was crowded with memories. I had been preaching sixty-eight years and three months, and I felt that I could not live and labor much longer. I preached in Macon, at Mulberry street, in the morning, from Deuteronomy viii, 2, 3. My own soul was fed, and friends said the discourse, as to them, was well filled with soul-nourishment. At night I preached again, delivering a discourse to the pupils of Wesleyan Female College. I trust, with good effect, from First John ii, 5. So passed out my eighty-eighth year. This morning, entering upon my eighty-ninth year, I am up, and feel no hurt from the work of yesterday. "Oh! magnify the Lord with me, and let us exalt his name together."

But that which my friends will wish most to know from me is what work I think I shall be able to do. Well, I am not prepared to promise much. I think I could deliver two or three lectures a week, with safety to myself, and I hope with profit to the church, if I could be allowed to do it in day-time. But it is out of the question for me to perform this work at night, as in former times. My information, corroborated by my own observation, is that congregations cannot be gathered in the week days, so I am shut up to one lecture on Sunday. I call my present preaching "lectures," because I am trying plainly and clearly to present to all thinkers my views, which I think are the only safe views with reference to practical godliness. No one, I think, will ever lead a consistent Christian life who entertains false views of what the Scriptures mean by the words "world" and "flesh." I am engaged in endeavoring to pilot bewildered souls through those dangerous defiles. I am much encouraged to believe that I am not laboring in vain. But, alas! for me, I have learned how to preach when it is too late. I am a worn out vessel, yet, blessed be God, worn out standing in my lot.

You will perhaps like to hear something of my experience. Well, my experience is, that age in a religious life renders clearer and more distinct the vision of religious truths. My conviction, from experience, is that he who has most religion feels most the need of more. As to myself I think I now understand what Job meant when he said, in his old age: "I have heard of thee by the hearing of the ear; but now mine eye seeth thee. Wherefore I abhor myself, and repent in dust and ashes." This is my experience. I am trying to get to heaven, but I cherish all the time this wholesome opinion that it will never be too late to be lost until I am actually saved. But, brethren, I confidently expect to get safely through. There is one thing which sadly troubles my spirit, and you will suffer me just to mention it before I close. I see so many who seem to be perfectly satisfied with their religious state, and who seem to cherish confident anticipations of a home in heaven, without any earnest crying to God for full sanctification. Either they are dreaming or I am. Which is it?

I am, as ever, the servant of the church,

L. PIERCE.

MACON, GA., March 24, 1873.

THE venerable Thomas Jackson, of the Wesleyan Methodist connection, died in London, England, on the tenth of March. He was one of the noted men of English Methodism, of a world-wide reputation, and one of the purest and best of men. We believe he had reached the extraordinary age of ninety years.

WE ARE glad to learn, through the Waxahachie Democrat, that Marvin College is prospering more and more. We congratulate Bro. Pugh, the excellent president, on the usefulness and success which have attended his labors.

Letter from Bishop Paine.

The apology due to you and many other friends for not replying to them is, that I have not been able to do so. Shortly after Christmas I was taken with rheumatism, but about February I the symptoms abated; so that I undertook a horseback ride of twenty miles to preach and perform the funeral service of a worthy old Methodist friend. It turned very cold, and the ride greatly fatigued me, insomuch that when I got back home I was utterly exhausted. This brought on a violent attack of inflammatory rheumatism, from which I am now slowly recovering. As yet I can only hobble about the house and write a little. Last March I had a similar attack, although not so violent or protracted. It seems that after the weather gets warm—and, indeed, until midwinter—I am not so liable to this affliction; but during the latter part of the winter and early spring I cannot expose myself with impunity—at least such has been my experience for several years past.

I very much regret that I have not been able to meet my official engagements in several instances, but I have been positively unfit to attempt to attend them. My thanks are especially due to Bishops Pierce and Doggett for holding the Baltimore Conference; and are hereby tendered. I earnestly desire to visit, this spring and summer, the Conferences in my special charge; and, if suitable arrangements can be made, will gladly devote May, June and July to it, beginning in the South Carolina Conference. My physician thinks I ought not to attempt so distant and so long a tour; but if I continue to improve until our meeting in Nashville, May 5, I am disposed to try it. In any event, I am ready to do, to suffer or to die, as the Lord willeth.

R. PAINE.

ABERDEEN, Miss., April 2, 1873.

Nashville Christian Advocate.

A BOY'S HIT.—A little boy asked Dr. Burgess, the preacher, if he would have a light. "No, my child," said the doctor, "I am one of the lights of the world." "I wish, then," replied the boy, "you were hung at the end of the alley, for it is a very dark one."

BUSINESS NOTICES.

FORTIFY THE BODY AGAINST DISEASE.—This is readily done by purifying all the fluids of the system with Dr. TUTT'S SARSAPARILLA AND QUEEN'S DELIGHT. Then there need be no fear of epidemics, Chills and Fever, Bilious attacks, Rheumatism, Skin Disease or Nervous Debility. Buoyant health and elasticity of spirits will be the result.

No one can take Dr. Tutt's Pills and remain long unwell. They increase the powers of digestion, and excite the absorbents to action, whereby all impurities of the system are carried off. The old stereotyped opinion that calomel must be used "to carry off the bile" has given way before the light of science. The vegetable kingdom furnishes a remedy free from all deleterious effects. Such are Tutt's Pills.

"THE BLOOD IS THE LIFE."—How many diseases have their seat in the blood—diseases which have been treated vainly for years. In eight cases out of ten if the blood alone was properly purified how soon would health and happiness return. Dr. Tutt's Sarsaparilla and Queen's Delight is a never-failing cure for all blood, scrofulous or syphilitic diseases. ap17 lt

LITTLE THINGS.

One step and then another,
And the longest walk is ended;
One stitch and then another,
And the largest rent is mended;
One brick upon another,
And the highest wall is made;
One flake upon another,
And the deepest snow is laid.

So the little coral workers,
By their slow but constant motion,
Have built up those pretty islands
In the distant, dark blue ocean;
And the noblest undertakings
Man's wisdom hath conceived,
By oft-repeated effort
Have been patiently achieved.

A little!—'tis a little word;
But much may in it dwell;
Then let a warning voice be heard,
And learn the lesson well;
The way to ruin thus begins,
Down, down, like easy stairs;
If conscience suffers little sins,
Soon larger ones it bears.

A little theft, a small deceit,
Too often leads to more;
'Tis hard at first, but tempts the feet
As through an open door.
Just as the broadest rivers run
From small and distant springs,
The greatest crimes that men have done
Have grown from little things.

Limpety Jack.

Once there was a very stupid fellow whom nearly all the boys of the neighborhood called Limpety Jack for sport. It would have been better if they had pitied him for his stupidity and helped him to his wits as well as they could. But nobody ever thought of that. Probably if the boys had thought of it they would have gone to work and helped him just as heartily as could be. But, at any rate, they didn't. They made, instead, more and more sport of him every day, until at last they thought they would have some very wonderful fun indeed. They worked and conjured with an awful mask and red flannel and pasteboard, and wire and fish-skins, and great big green beads for eyes, until they succeeded in producing a horrid-looking monster—that is, when they found a man named Philligan McDermot, who was willing to put on the mask and all the trappings. Then they took him to a cave by the sea and dressed him up and made him squat down in a damp corner. Such a dreadful-looking object was never seen before, and the man himself, as he sat there, shivered to think of his own appearance. Well, meantime some of the rest who had joined in this cruel plan to frighten Limpety Jack ran to find him, and to tell him that "a gentleman waited to see him alone on important business." "Won't it be too jolly!" they whispered to one another in great glee. "We won't let any harm really come to Limpety, but we'll make him think he's in a peck of trouble before we get through with him." So they all chimed in: "Oh! yes, Limpety! It's so! The gentleman wants to see you alone. Very important business!" "You'll find him in the cave by the sea. And be quick, Limpety Jack!" added their leader. "He's the husband of the beautifulest mermaid that ever lived. She sends you a bag of gold by him. He'll be wanting a sacrifice of you to pay for the gold, but never you mind. Do as he tells you, and all will be right."

"Ay, but I will!" cried Limpety Jack in great glee. "A bag of gold from a mermaid! Bless my lucky stars!" And off he ran to make himself fine for the wonderful person who sat waiting for him in the cave by the sea.

Now it so happened that Limpety Jack had a pretty little boy of his own, and so had Philigan McDermot, the man who sat waiting for him.

"Let me go with you, dad!" cried little Jack.

"No! no!" answered Limpety Jack. "I must go alone to get my bag of gold. Stay where you be."

"Let me go with you!" cried little Phil. McDermot.

"No! no!" answered Limpety Jack. "I must go alone to get my bag of gold. Stay where you be."

But Master Phil. was a self-willed little fellow, and he followed Limpety Jack on the sly, not showing himself till they were at the very mouth of the cave. All the mischievous fellows were hidden away in the cave, almost bursting with suppressed laughter, and waiting to see what Limpety Jack would do when he should come upon the monster.

"You can't go in with me," whispered Limpety Jack to Phil., just outside the entrance to the cave.

"But I will," insisted the child.

"We'll see," said Limpety Jack, as, catching the boy in his arms, he waded into the water with him and set him down hard upon a great rock that stuck its top out of the waves.

"Sit ye there till I come back with the bag of gold," said Limpety Jack sternly. There was no danger of his being disobeyed, for Phil. knew he must drown if he slid off of the rock. And who could hear him scream through all the wailing of the sea?

"Now!" said Limpety Jack, as he entered the cave.

"My stars!" he cried faintly, as his astonished gaze fell upon the terrible figure squatted in the corner, "but the mermaids have a most singular taste in the way of husbands!" Still he was too eager for his bag of gold to back out now.

"Good day, sir," said he, bowing as well as he could, what with his wet legs and the trembling that suddenly came over him.

"Good day to you," croaked a terrible voice. "I have brought you a bag of gold from my wife."

"Many thanks to her, I'm sure, sir," faltered Limpety Jack, bowing again and stepping forward about an inch.

"But," roared the mermaid's husband, "you cannot have it for nothing. There must be a sacrifice. Set your son Jack on the great rock near by, in the sea, and when the waves wash him off and take him to my wife the gold is yours."

Poor Jack's teeth chattered. But he could not quite give up the gold.

"Your mightiness," said he faintly, "couldn't ye think of some other sakeryfice?"

"Not another," bellowed the mermaid's husband, and a low rumbling sound seemed to spring up in the cave (but it was only those wicked jokers trying not to laugh.)

"Well, sir," said Limpety Jack, "I haven't any too much sense. That I know as well as the best one. But I like my boy too well to give him up for all the gold of the sea," and with a great sigh he turned to go away.

"Hold!" he cried, suddenly recollecting something. "I did leave behind me, on the great rock in the sea, a most beautiful boy. I didn't mind me to do it. The saints forbid! but by this time most like he's washed off and gone to your wife under the sea. (The Lord save him!) A most beautiful boy, your worship, the son of one Philigan McDerm—"

Oh! but you should have seen the monster spring to his feet, cast off his mask, and tear out of the cave, he and all the wicked jokers after him! Limpety Jack ran too, and now he cared far more for finding poor little Phil. than for all the gold that ever was seen.

The tide had nearly covered the rock, and there, on the very, very top, with the water pouring over his two tiny feet, stood little Phil. It seemed as if each wave must throw him off. They rushed into the sea, but Limpety Jack was first. It was knee-high—breast-high—chin-high; and all the while the waves were dashing them against the sharp rocks. The strongest of them drew back discouraged. Then all they could distinguish was Limpety Jack's black head. They saw the frantic little boy leap toward it as if it had called to him, and then Phil. McDermot, who had stood as if turned into stone, fell back on the shore like one dead.

When he opened his eyes there stood his little boy beside him, screaming with terror at his outlandish dress. The men were busy with Limpety Jack, rubbing him, shaking him, pounding him—anything to bring the good fellow to life.

They succeeded at last, and, strange to say, he always seemed to be brighter in his wits from that hour. It might have been owing to the shock, or to his bravery in saving little Phil., or to the fact that at last they thought of helping him. Certain it is he was never again called Limpety Jack.—Hearth and Home.

The Martin-House.

"Father," said George, "we ought to have a bird-house. I will make one if you will help me raise it."

"Very well," said his father.

There were some planed boards in the barn. There were saws and a measuring-rule, and George had a box of excellent tools of his own; and George had a taste for making things.

"I will have a martin-house before Mr. Ellsworth comes back. I told him as much. You will help me, father?"

"I will do my part," said his father.

Almost every day George talked about his martin-house. It was something to talk about it, but talking would not build it, you know.

"You will help me, father?" he said, and as often as he said so his father always promised to do his part.

Two weeks slipped away and Mr. Ellsworth came back.

"Where is your martin-house, George?" he asked, walking into the garden.

"It is not built yet," said George.

"How is that? You thought to finish it before my return. Could you not raise it?"

"Yes, sir," said George, "father promised to do that, only I never got as far as that," and he looked down, a little ashamed.

"Then whose fault was it?" asked Mr. Ellsworth.

"Mine, I suppose," answered George; "father always stood ready to do his part."

"You asked him?"

"O, yes, sir."

"And he promised?"

"Yes, sir."

"Asking his help did not do the work, though; did it, George?"

"No, sir; his help only came in when I had done all I could first. His promise ought to have started me to begin, I suppose."

"In which case he would have done what you could not do—finish it."

"Yes, sir," said George.

Mr. Ellsworth took a turn or two under the apple-trees.

"George, you asked your father's help. He was ready; he was waiting to help you. It is just so with your heavenly Father. He has promised to help you build up a noble Christian boyhood. He is ready, waiting and watching for opportunities to do so. You pray to him, indeed; but are you making effort yourself? are you doing your part, expecting his aid? When you pray, 'Deliver us from evil,' do you shun swearers, do you shut your mouth against bad words, do you act and speak the truth? Remember, my boy, you must do your part."

George listened with a good deal of interest. He got something which he had not before.

"I thank you, sir," said George.

"You are quite welcome, my boy," said Mr. Ellsworth; and George went to the barn to begin his martin-house in good earnest.—Child's Paper.

A SNAKE-TEAM.—Did you ever hear of any one driving a pair of snakes? Mr. Frank Stockton, in his Roundabout Rambles, tells us that boys and girls in France sometimes amuse themselves by getting up a snake-team. They tie strings to the tails of two common, harmless snakes, and then they drive them about, using a whip (I hope gently) to make these strange steeds keep together and go along lively.

It is said that snakes which have been played with in this way soon begin to like their new life, and will allow the children to do what they please with them, showing all the time the most amiable disposition. There is nothing very strange in a tamed snake. Toads, tortoises, spiders and many other unpromising animals have been known to show a capacity for human companionship, and to become quite tame and friendly. In fact, there are very few animals in the world that cannot be tamed by man, if man is but kind enough and patient enough.—Hearth and Home.

Farm, Garden and Household.

How to Build a Bee-House.

As some of the readers of the Bee Journal may wish to build a receptacle for their bees to dwell in during the coming winter, I will tell what I know about building such a house so as to secure warmth, darkness and ventilation.

In the fall of 1870 I erected a building 14 by 16 feet, from out to out; posts, 11½ feet; walls, 18 inches thick, filled with sawdust; 2 floors, 10 inches apart with sawdust between; 12 inches sawdust above the ceiling; 1 doorway in south end, facing upiary.

To secure ventilation I placed a continuous tube, 6 by 12 inches, on the east, north and west sides of the room, resting on the floor and against the walls, with outside sliding doors, same size as tube, on the north and south ends of the building. On the inner side of the tube I bored 1-inch holes alternately, near top and bottom, the whole length of it.

Immediately under the ridge-pole I placed a second tube of the same size, extending the length of the building, with an outside opening at each gable end. A third tube of the same size extends from the center of the ceiling to the tube under the ridge-pole.

In the doorway are 2 doors; the inner is 2 inches thick (made of inch boards, nailed together transversely,) and fits closely, opening inside the room. About 14 inches from the top of this door is a 1½-inch hole, which is covered by a piece of glass on the inside, against which is placed in a thermometer, so that the degrees, ranging from 25 to 40 degrees, can be seen through the hole. A slide covers this hole on the outside of this door. The outer door is 1 inch thick, has a six-light 8 by 10 sash in the upper part of it, and swings outside. Four tiers of shelves extend around three sides of the room. The top of the lower ventilating tube, being 7 inches above the floor, will answer for the first shelf. This room will accommodate 100 colonies of bees.

The sawdust prevents frost from entering to any extent, the temperature ranging from 28 to 38 degrees during the winter.

If 50 or more colonies were in, the temperature could be kept at any point desired between these figures by opening or contracting the doors of the ventilating tubes. When the inner door is closed no light can enter the room. When the wind is in the south I open the south ventilating door and close the north; when the wind is in the north I open the north door and close the south door, by which means a current of air is caused to pass in at the ventilating door, through the inch holes, into the room; all impure air, in the meantime, will escape through the upper ventilating tube.

When I wish to use the extractor I close the outer door and open the inner.

No bees can get to me, and the window in the door affords plenty of light.

The temperature of the room can be known at any time, without disturbing the bees, by opening the outer door and moving the slide from the hole through which the thermometer may be seen.

In this room warmth, darkness and ventilation are secured to my perfect satisfaction.

In the winter of 1870 and 1871 20 colonies were in the house during 102 days. By weighing each hive and contents when I placed it in the house, and again in the spring when I took it out, I found the greatest consumption of honey by any one colony to be 13 pounds; the least consumption, 2 pounds; general average, 8½ pounds. Every colony wintered we saved except one, which was queenless when placed in the house.—Correspondent of American Bee Journal.

THE vegetable origin of the horse disease is the subject of a paper in the American Naturalist, by Mr. Morehouse, of New York. He examined the matter exuding from the nostrils of the affected animals; and, besides the regular pus, found no less than three kinds of vegetable organisms, all in states of vigorous development. One was a species of minute lichen, known as Urceolaria scruposa. These were in every form of development, there being hundreds of fragments in a single drop. Another was an unknown species of Aspergillus, also giving evidence of propagation and growth. The third form was an unknown species, not hitherto described. In order to prove that these spores were floating in the atmosphere, they were caught on moistened glass in the atmosphere in the vicinity of the disease. This brings the atmospheric and vegetable origin of this disease nearer to a demonstration, but yet does not prove it, as the atmospheric vegetable spores may have simply found a favorable pabus in which to germinate in the mucous matter given off by the disease.

POTATO PONE.—Pare and grate, on a large grater, sweet potatoes enough to make one quart of grated potato. Stir to this one pint of sweet milk, two eggs, two-thirds of a cup of butter and enough sugar to make it pretty sweet; season with ginger. Bake till well done. Eat hot or cold, with butter. If desired to be light-colored, put the potatoes into cold water as soon as pared, and when ready grate them into the milk. If dark-colored pone is preferred, sweeten with molasses and season with allspice. This is very rich made like pound-cake, using one and a half pounds of grated potato in place of flour.

A CURE FOR EARACHE.—There is hardly any ache to which children are subject so bad to bear and difficult to cure as the earache. But there is a remedy never known to fail. Take a bit of cotton batting, put on it a pinch of black pepper, gather it up and tie it, dip it in sweet oil and insert it in the ear. Put a flannel bandage over the head to keep it warm. It will give immediate relief. Household.

COTTON GINS, TIES, ETC.

THE DUBOIS FLANGE COTTON GIN.

By the Flange the Cotton is kept in contact with the teeth on each side, until the fiber is taken from the seed, without allowing them to be taken up by the return motion of the rail, as in other Gins.
The Flange prevents hulls, stems, sticks and hard substances from being cut, consequently making a better sample out of roughly-picked cotton than other Gins.
We have sold more from this point than any agency of any other Gin for the crop of 1872-73; consequently we can furnish more and better references, and they are warranted to come up to all that is said of them.
We keep constantly on hand all sizes, from 40 to 80-SAW STANDS, left or right. Price, $5 per Saw.

IMPROVED

EAGLE COTTON GINS.
The great popularity of the EAGLE COTTON GINS is established from the well-known fact that they are the most reliable, strongest and best built Cotton Gins ever made. The Eagle Cotton Gin runs lighter than any other gin, thus having a great advantage for planters who wish to run by horse power. All the numerous planters who use the Eagle Cotton Gin will certify to the fact that when their cotton is sent to market it always brings the highest market price, as no other gin can produce a finer or a better sample of cotton than the Eagle Cotton Gins. Over seventeen thousand of the Eagle Cotton Gins have been made and sold. During a period of twenty years the undersigned has had the agency of the Eagle Cotton Gin in New Orleans. He has never had a gin returned or rejected out of the immense number sold. The saw cylinders of all the Eagle Cotton Gins are twelve inches in diameter, which is two inches larger than most other kinds of gins, thus giving our forty-saw gin more teeth, and they are more than equal to the fifty-saw gins of other makers, who use only a ten-inch cylinder, and the same great advantage of the twelve-inch cylinder in larger-sized gins can be easily estimated. Planters who wish a reliable cotton gin, with an established reputation, can purchase an Eagle Cotton Gin with a certainty that they are not making an untried experiment, but will obtain a cotton gin which is indorsed by the oldest and largest planters in the country as the best in use. A large stock of the Eagle Cotton Gins are always kept on sale in New Orleans, ready for immediate shipment. Planters should be particular to state if they want right or left-hand motion gins.

WOMAN'S FRIEND AND STEAM WASHER

ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND SOLD.

WILL CLEANSE YOUR CLOTHES WITHOUT RUBBING.

EVERY ONE SOLD IS FULLY WARRANTED,

NO FLUIDS OR EXTRA SOAP USED.

IT CONSUMES LESS SOAP, LESS TIME AND LESS FUEL THAN THE USUAL method. It saves Labor, Wear and Tear, and the Annoyance of Wash-day. It requires no attention while the process of cleansing goes on. It will do the Washing of the Family while you are eating breakfast and doing up dishes.

Steam has long been known as the most powerful agent in removing dirt, grease and stains from clothing, and bleaching them white. Papermakers have for many years used steam in cleaning and bleaching their rags, and they succeed in making, by its agency, the filthiest picking from the gutter perfectly pure and white. Until the invention of the STEAM-WASHER or WOMAN'S FRIEND, although often attempted, no method had been discovered of applying Steam directly to the clothing, which could be used in a portable manner for domestic purposes. The WOMAN'S FRIEND washes without labor. It will do the washing of an ordinary family in from thirty minutes to an hour. The STEAM WASHER is superior to all other devices for the following reasons:

1. It does its own work, thereby saving a large portion of the time usually taken in a family.
2. It uses much less soap than is required by any other method.
3. It requires no attention whatever while the process of cleaning is going on. A lady can do her washing while she is eating her breakfast and doing up the breakfast dishes.
4. Clothing wears double the time, washed in this Washer, that it will washed by a machine, or by hand-labor or a washboard.
5. Lace Curtains and all fine fabrics are washed in a superior manner. For Flannels this Washer is most desirable, as it will not full them, as a machine or hand-rubbing does. All fabrics, from the finest lace to a bed-blanket, can be washed perfectly and with ease without the rubbing-board.

IT IS TRULY A LABOR AND CLOTHES-SAVING INVENTION.

READ THE FOLLOWING TESTIMONIALS:

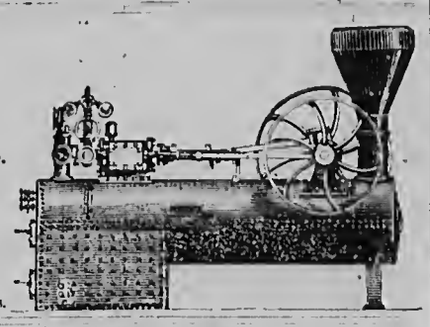
NEW ORLEANS, LA., February 5, 1873.
MR. E. B. HAYES: After a thorough test of your Steam Washer, or Woman's Friend, I pronounce it the most wonderful invention of the age. It was with much difficulty that I succeeded in getting my washerwoman to try it, being opposed to washing machines generally; but she is perfectly delighted with this, and I can cheerfully recommend it to every family.
(Signed) MRS. W. W. CARRE, 360 Rampart St., corner Clio.

NEW ORLEANS, February 4, 1873.
MR. E. B. HAYES, NEW ORLEANS, LA.—Sir: I take pleasure in testifying to the superior merits of your Steam Washer, or Woman's Friend. From the use I have made of it I feel sure that all you claim for its performance is a success. Every family ought to have one.
(Signed) MISS E. C. WINGATE,
Principal Trinity Church Girls' School, Jackson street.

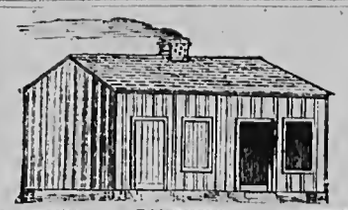
NEW ORLEANS, February 4, 1873.
This is to certify that I have purchased from Mr. Hayes the Steam Washer known as the "Woman's Friend," and must say I consider it the best Washing Machine I have ever seen. In fact there is nothing equal to it. It saves labor, soap, fuel and clothes, and I fully recommend it to every family as the best and most perfect Washing Machine in use. (Signed) MRS. S. P. RUSS.

NEW ORLEANS, February 5, 1873.
I have used the Steam Washer, or Woman's Friend, sold by Mr. Hayes, general agent, and fully indorse all he claims for it. Every family ought to possess one.
(Signed) E. B. ROTH, 406 Josephine street.

NEW ORLEANS, February 8, 1873.
MR. E. B. HAYES—Sir: The Washing Machine known as the Woman's Friend, or Steam Washer, purchased from you, has proven all you say of it. I cheerfully recommend it to all.
Yours truly, (Signed) MRS. S. BOULLETMET.



NEW ORLEANS, March 11, 1873.
MR. E. B. HAYES—Sir: I am delighted with your Washing Machine. It is indeed most happily called the Woman's Friend. I fully indorse every word of praise accorded by all who have given it a trial. Respectfully, (Signed) MRS. F. W. GUSTIN.



NEW ORLEANS, March 10, 1873.
MR. E. B. HAYES, GENERAL AGENT—Sir: I have used your Steam Washer, or Woman's Friend, and find that it performs satisfactorily all that you claim for it as a labor-saving machine—saving time, fuel, soap and, more particularly, the clothes. I cheerfully recommend it to all my friends and all housekeepers. (Signed) MRS. R. J. MONROE, widow of Ex-Mayor Monroe.

New Orleans Markets.

From the New Orleans Price Current.

Nothing of importance has transpired with regard to the crops. Crop estimates range from 3,500,000 bales to 3,900,000 and 4,000,000 bales, with few putting their figures under 3,750,000.

The river is 3 feet 11 inches below high-water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the eleventh instant:

|---|---|
| Louisiana and Mississippi | bales... 9,882 |
| Lake | 73 |
| Arkansas | 2,119 |
| Mobile | 1,000 |
| Texas | 51 |
| Total | 13,492 |

On Saturday the sales embraced 3,500 bales. Inferior, dusty, sold at 9c., ordinary, dusty, at 11½c., strict ordinary and very dusty, at 11½c., strict good ordinary at 12½c., strict good ordinary to low middling at 13½c., strict low middling at 15c., and middling to strict middling at 15½c. On Monday, notwithstanding rainy and inclement weather, and there being no market at Liverpool, buyers came forward more freely, but refused to go on unless at lower prices, and it was impracticable to effect sales unless at further concessions of ¼c@¼c. Under those circumstances, with the prospect of more copious arrivals, the ruling rates showed an additional decline of ¼c. in low middling and the better qualities, and ¼c. in good ordinary and the lower grades, inferior to low ordinary selling at from 9 @12½c., and ordinary being quoted at 12½@13½c., good ordinary at 13½@13½c., low middling at 13¾@14¼c., middling at 14¾c., strict middling at 15¼c., and good middling at 15¾c. The sales summed up 4,350 bales. The market was also depressed by the receipt of a telegram which stated that the steamer Exporter had left Pine Bluff with 5,272 bales, which slightly increased below. This will, no doubt, prove to be the largest load this season. The largest previously since the war was 5,018 bales, per Natchez, March 3, 1871, and the largest before the war 4,500 bales, per New Magnolia. The largest exported was 7,049 bales, per Ocean Monarch, for Liverpool. These particulars were posted on the bulletin board of the Exchange. On Tuesday the market opened with a moderate inquiry, and continued quiet throughout the day, but the sales were of fair extent, summing up 3,450 bales at irregular and generally easier prices, especially for the lower grades. At the close, however, although prices had been accepted in several cases indicating a falling off of ¼c@¼c., there was but little quotable variation from the ruling rates of the day previous.

The above makes an aggregate for the past three days of 11,950 bales, against 11,150 for the corresponding time last week and 12,962 the week before.

The receipts proper at this port since the first of September, exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas, are 1,068,076 bales, against 893,515 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 608,280 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 127,682 to Great Britain, of 63,422 to France, and of 122,657 to other foreign ports. We quote:

|---|---|
| Inferior | 9 @ 10 |
| Low ordinary | 10½ @ 11½ |
| Ordinary | 12½ @ 13½ |
| Good ordinary | 15½ @ 16½ |

SUGAR.—On Tuesday the sales were confined to 2 hhds., at 8¾@9¼c. for good fair, and 9c. for fully fair.

MOLASSES.—The receipts of Louisiana consist of small and irregular lots, which are sold at 35c., 40c. for common fermenting, 42½45c. for fair fermenting, 54c. for prime fermenting, and 60c. for strictly prime fermenting. On Saturday a small lot of fair fermenting sold at 42c. ₱ gallon.

CORN.—On Tuesday the sales embraced 11,000 sacks at 52½53c. for white, 53@54c. for mixed, and 55@57c. ₱ bushel for yellow.

OATS.—The supply has been good and the demand fair, but prices have further declined. On Tuesday 4,000 sacks sold at 40@41c. ₱ bushel for choice.

BRAN.—On Saturday 950 sacks sold at 75c.@$1 00 lbs., small lots commanding 80@85c.

PORK.—It is retailing at $17.75 ₱ bbl. On Tuesday the market opened quiet but very firm at $17.25 ₱ bbl.

BACON.—The market has been quiet but firm, with a better feeling for clear sides, and the stock well held. On Saturday 117 casks were sold at 7½c. for shoulders, 9¼@9¾c. for clear rib sides, and 9¾@10c. ₱ lb. for clear sides.

MONETARY.

Gold opened on Tuesday at 117¾@118 (against 118¾ at New York), and, after a moderate business, closed at 117@117½ (against 117½ at New York.)

The sales of silver have been confined to retail transactions. American half dollars are quoted at 110@111, and Mexican dollars at 2¼ ₱ cent. premium in gold for new and 5 ₱ cent. for old.

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

SAN FRANCISCO, April 16.—Advices from Arizona to April 4 have been received. Major Randall, of the Twenty-third Infantry, had a fight with the Tonto Apaches east of Fork Verde, in which he killed forty-one warriors and captured a number of women and children.

Propositions to surrender have been received from a large number of the worst Apaches in Arizona.

The epizootic is fast coming this way. About half the horses in the upper end of Shasta valley are now down with the disease, though it has only appeared in mild form.

AUSTIN, TEXAS, April 16.—Mr. Ireland introduced the subjoined resolution to-day in the House of Representatives:

WHEREAS, We view with alarm the overthrow of republican and constitutional government in our sister State of Louisiana by a decree of a Federal judge, and inasmuch as her degradation and the overthrow of her government, erected by the people, may be the fate of any other State in the Union; therefore,

Resolved, (the two houses concurring,) That we deeply sympathize with the people of our sister State, and we invite the earnest attention of the American people to this fatal blow at republican government.

The resolution was adopted by a vote of 66 to 12.

LITTLE ROCK, April 16.—A graveyard in this city caved in. Seven hundred bodies were washed away by the rapid current.

NEW YORK, April 17.—A Herald special from Singapore says that the Atscheer war continues. A second assault was made, with partial success. The Dutch carried two forts, but were repulsed from the principal fort. They are now besieging the sultan's palace. The fighting was desperate. The Dutch commander, Kohlow, was killed, together with two hundred men. The Atscheers were badly armed. The Dutch have called for reinforcements. Great sickness prevails in their ranks. The pepper ports are blockaded.

A Halifax letter says that England will expend half a million pounds sterling on the fortifications of that city.

OMAHA, April 17.—The snow-storm covered a strip of land three hundred miles. It was the worst ever known. The track will be closed to-day.

Three thousand persons are detained at Omaha by the storm.

WASHINGTON, April 18.—The attorney general has instructed United States District Attorney Beckwith to make a thorough investigation of the affair in Grant parish, and if the United States laws have been violated, to spare no pains or expense in causing the guilty parties to be arrested, and, if necessary to execute any United States process, to call upon General Emory for that purpose, as he (General Emory) has been instructed by the acting secretary of war to give him all aid.

WASHINGTON, April 19.—After two days fighting the Modocs fled to the hills southwest of the lava beds. They took but one scalp, while the soldiers took four, including Scarfaced Charlie's.

The Warm Spring Indians fought well, stealing upon the Modocs and ever ready to take and hold any advantage.

Total Federal loss, ten wounded and five killed; eight Indians are known to have been killed.

The Modocs are traveling toward Willow Springs. The cavalry, with their Warm Spring Indian allies, are in pursuit, with three days' rations.

RALEIGH, April 19.—In tearing down an old out-building at the Yarboro House to-day, Nathan Field, a colored waiter, found a package of money rolled up in paper, containing about $20,000 in old State notes, some Confederate money, $500 in gold and several silver watches. There is no clew as to when or by whom they were placed there.

JACKSON, Miss., April 19.—The Mississippi Legislature adjourned sine die at noon to-day, after a session of seventy-five days. Governor Powers made a congratulatory address.

Just before the adjournment of the House the members, irrespective of party or color, united in a substantial testimonial to Speaker John R. Lynch, who is a colored man. An elegant gold watch and chain were presented to him, with a very appropriate speech, by a colored member named Pile. Lynch responded gratefully.

NEW YORK, April 20.—Further reports of the earthquake at San Salvador state that fortunately, owing to the first shock having frightened most of the population from living in their houses, the loss of life has not been so great as it would have otherwise been. Out of a population of forty thousand, which the city of San Salvador was said to contain, the number reported killed and wounded varies from fifty to five hundred. In the midst of the dust and consternation a fire broke out in a drug store, but was soon got under. The government functionaries stood to their posts, and did their duty in a highly creditable manner. The president sent his family to Santa Teclear and established himself in the principal square of the capital, repressed all attempts at disorder and robbery, and rendered assistance wherever it was most needed. Any one found carrying away property not his own was shot.

The authorities still persist in rebuilding the city on the same site, although this is the eighth time in one hundred and fifty years that the city has been destroyed. Most people, nevertheless, have removed to Santa Trek. The only building that stood the shocks was of timber. The impulse at present is to import timber from California for the construction of earthquake-proof houses. Aid and money have been tendered and sent from all parts of the republic. Food has risen to exorbitant prices. Prisoners in jail were removed to other places. The Sisters of Charity have been assiduous in their attendance on the sick and wounded.

Captain Kennedy, of the British man-of-war Reindeer, gave all the assistance he could, and offered his ship for use. Biddle, United States minister, under the latter as well as the present government, sent a letter of thanks to Captain Kennedy.

Among the heavy foreign sufferers, doing business in San Salvador, are reported to be Moses Levy & Co., London; Kattenglll & Campbell, Manchester; G. B. Kerford & Co., Liverpool. And among resident merchants are Kerford & Keogh, Carazze & Duke, Durantes & Orjiba, Blanc & Figueros, J. M. Peralta, D. Emelterio Rouana and Jose Rosulis.

Every one has of course suffered more or less. The stoppage of the sewers, the exposure of dead bodies unrecovered from beneath the ruins and other morbific conditions may bring on an epidemic. The fine bridge lately built across the river on the road to Saya Pango was thrown down, and other roads rendered impassable by immense blocks of stone thrown from the heights, some one hundred tons in weight. Owing to the continuance of the shocks, more than forty dead bodies were displaced from out the niches in which they were placed in the cemetery. The earthquake is supposed to have been caused by the suppressed volcano of St. Thomas, one of seven volcanoes within a radius of thirty miles.

Izalco is at present in full blast, throwing down its sides a constant stream of lava, visible at night along the whole coast. Officers of the Reindeer report that the United States consulate was a mass of ruins inside, though the walls were standing. The United States minister, with his family, had a narrow escape. During the two days these officers remained in San Salvador they felt eight shocks. In some places the ground cracked a foot wide and very deep. The crust of earth under the city is evidently a mere shell. The ear, placed close to the ground, hears a noise like running water, and the fall of a heavy stone produces a hollow stone. Indians would never build on this site.

SAN FRANCISCO, April, 20.—Two of the worst bands of Apaches in Arizona have submitted unconditionally. They have defied the government for twenty years, but the loss of two hundred of their warriors during the last campaign dispirited them. General Crook accepted their surrender.

YREKA, April 20.—A courier from the front, on Friday, at three o'clock, reports the Indians still in the lava beds.

The epizootic has not reached the front, but is raging at Butts' place, where the volunteers are rendezvousing.

AMITE, LA., April 21.—About one hundred metropolitan policemen arrived last night, and installed Kellogg's recorder and parish judge of this parish to-day. Forty metropolitans went to Greensburg this morning. All quiet.

SAN DIEGO, CAL., April 21.—Work commenced on the Texas Pacific railroad at San Diego to-day. Director Larris promises that connection will be made with New Orleans in 1876.

LINCOLN, NEBRASKA, April 22.—The first train for a week on the Burlington and Missouri railroad arrived to-day. The storm was the worst ever known. Men were frozen to death within two rods of their houses while trying to get their stock under shelter. Many women and children were frozen. The destruction of horses and cattle was great. The gullies on the railroad are filled with snow hard as ice.

FOREIGN.

HAVANA, April 16.—General Garcia, commanding the eastern district, says that a reconciliation with Spain, except on the basis of independence, is impossible. The Cubans have no faith in the permanent establishment of the Spanish republic.

Garcia's force numbers seven hundred, of whom one-third are white, and the remainder mixed. Cespedes says: "The Spaniards must go away and leave us in peace, or continue the war until we are all dead."

LONDON, April 17.—A painful rumor comes from Alexandria, Egypt, that Sir Samuel Baker and wife, Lady Baker, have been murdered in the interior of Africa by natives of that country.

Sir Samuel Baker, accompanied by his wife, took an Egyptian expedition up the Nile.

A number of severe thunder-storms occurred yesterday in Wales. The crops were injured and several persons struck by lightning and killed.

The weather throughout England to-day is fair and favorable to crops.

MUNICH, April 18.—Baron Justus Liebig died to-day, after a painful illness, aged seventy.

VIENNA, April 19.—Swindling is reported in connection with the appointment of American commissioners. It is asserted that many commissioners purchased positions for the sake of the honor of appearing in official character. One says he paid $6,000, but the rate generally was in the neighborhood of $2,000. The majority of the commissioners are incapable persons. The more reputable are instituting an inquiry into the swindle.

Papers, contrary to custom, give prominence to reports of prevalence of cholera, and show that four deaths occurred in Vienna. The cholera has been raging in Carinthia all winter. Out of one thousand cases four hundred and sixty-four died. It is supposed that the purpose of this publication is spitefulness against the directors of the exhibition, but the facts are as reported.

LONDON, April 20.—A dispatch from Penang, Straits of Malacca, dated to-day, says: Latest news from Sumatra is that the Dutch forces have retreated to the sea-beach, where they have entrenched themselves behind a stockade. It is doubtful whether they can hold their position there long, as they are vastly outnumbered by Atchinese, whose force is constantly increasing.

Dutch loss in killed and wounded since the beginning of the rebellion is estimated at five hundred. Those of Atchinese unknown, but must be very heavy.

—HAVANA, April 21.—The new captain general, Preltain, has arrived. Not a cheer was uttered even for Spain by the immense crowd which witnessed his debarkation.

The new captain general said he hoped he would soon be able to finish the rebellion. His first measure will probably be to order an election of deputies to the Cortes.

BREST, April 21.—The break in the French Atlantic cable is two hundred and thirty miles hence.

Something for Married Folks.

The first year of married life is a most important era in the history of man and wife. Generally, as it is spent, so is almost all subsequent existence. The wife and the husband then assimilate their views and their desires, or else, conjuring up their dislikes, they add fuel to their prejudices and animosities forever afterward. "I have somewhere read," says Rev. Mr. Wise, in his Bridal Greeting, "of a bridegroom who gloried in his eccentricities. He requested his bride to accompany him to the garden a day or two after the wedding. He then threw a line over the roof of their cottage. Giving his wife one side of it, he retreated to the other side and exclaimed:

"'Pull the line.'

"She pulled it, at his request, as far as she could. He cried:

"'Pull it over.'

"'I can't,' she replied.

"'But pull with all your might,' shouted the whimsical husband.

"But vain were all the efforts of the bride to pull the line so long as her husband held on to the opposite end. But when he came around, and they both pulled at one end, it came over with great ease.

"'There,' said he, as the line fell from the roof, 'you see how hard and ineffectual was our labor when we both pulled in opposition to each other; but how easy and pleasant it was when we both pulled together. It will be so with us through life, my dear. If we oppose each other it will be hard to work. If we act together it will be always pleasant to live. Let us always pull together.'"

In this illustration, homely as it may be, there is sound philosophy. Husband and wife must mutually bear and concede if they wish to make home a retreat of bliss.

One alone cannot make home happy. There must be unison of action, sweetness of spirit, and great forbearance and love in both husband and wife to secure the great end of happiness in the domestic circle.

THE LAVA BEDS IN OREGON.—Prof. Hayden, in charge of the United States expedition for the geographical survey of the territories, who last year visited the lava beds in Oregon, now occupied by the Modocs, informs a reporter of the Evening Star that the lava beds are an overflow of volcanic matter, forming a perfect sea of melted rock, which in gradually cooling became broken. Innumerable little streams have worked their way through, and the whole place is filled with caverns. Often they connect with one another and extend for miles underground, varying in width from fifty to five or six hundred feet. The entrances to them generally are small, and therefore can easily be defended. The lava beds comprise from fifty to one hundred square miles. It will be a difficult thing to surround the Modocs, and there is great danger of their eluding our troops, on account of the familiarity of the Indians with the lava beds. The Modocs are the same as the Digger Indians, and live upon the rabbits, lizards, snakes, mice and all kinds of bugs and insects which are found in the caves.

A BOOK OF THREE LEAVES.—An old minister used to carry about a little book with only three leaves, and no words in it. The first leaf was black, the next scarlet, the last white. Day by day he looked at it, and at last told what it meant, something in this way: "Here is the black leaf that shows my sin, and what it deserves. Then comes the red page to tell me of Jesus' blood. I look at it and weep, and look again. Lastly comes the white leaf—a picture of my dark soul washed in the cleansing fountain and made clean."

AN ARTIST who had painted a portrait of a gentleman noted for his frequent libations invited the gentleman's friends to see it. One of them, who was rather near-sighted, approaching it too closely, the artist, in alarm, exclaimed: "Don't touch it; it isn't dry." "No use of looking at it, then," replied the gentleman. "It can't be my friend."

Woman's Dress.

While in the hospitals of Vienna and North Germany great opportunities were given me of witnessing the post mortems of women. Not only those who die in the hospital, but many in private life are brought here for examination; and I have had the occasion to study closely the ill effects of dress upon all classes of women. And my deep feeling upon the subject cannot be called a hobbled zeal; it is founded upon the observation of many hundred women, and I can safely say that not one out of fifty had a natural development of the thorax, and the abdominal organs in their proper position.—I expect, in every new anatomy that appears, that some one equally wise with him who has given it as a physiological law that women breathe differently from men, will say that the ribs of women naturally curve in more than those of men, and their livers are unlike, that the right lobe of that of women extends far below the ribs, and is usually cut in two, as has been the case of many I have seen. The humorous old professor who made the post mortem examination always had a joke accompanying the twinkle of his eye, and a standing one used to be: "Here is another weak sister, a victim to vanity." I have seen ribs overlapped, as one can twist the fingers one upon the other. I have seen them doubled under, perforating the liver, and other internal organs atrophied and distorted by pressure; and this not always among women of fashion, but among the working classes. Laboring women in Austria work out of doors, employed in the various ways that men are, doing the same amount of work with a fourth less pay. The winter that I was in Vienna the thin brick walls of a block of houses fell, killing and mangling fifteen women who were employed in their construction.

They were mostly thick-waisted peasants, whose sides had never been screwed into corsets, and yet none presented a normal condition; the heavy skirts worn from childhood, tightly tied about the waist, had displaced the internal organs, and by pressure changed the texture of the tissues. The laying aside of that inquisitorial instrument, the corset, is not all that must be done to render woman's garb less injurious. When I am told by women, as is frequently the case, that they cannot live without this pressure upon them, the acknowledgment bears upon its face an abnormal state of the body, for when our own bones and muscles refuse to support us, it shows plainly that violated nature cannot longer perform the functions belonging to her.

It pains me to say it, but perhaps we may be benefited by seeing ourselves as others see us—the opinions that American girls in Europe have won are anything but creditable and desirable.

While visiting a school near Frankfort-on-the-Maine I asked if there were American pupils, and the proprietor replied: "No, we do not take them; they dress so extravagantly, they think and talk so much of their clothes, that they disturb the quiet, simple ways of our German girls; and we find that their influence does us more hurt than their money does us good." In Dresden I knew an American lady who could not find a private school where they would take her daughter, for similar reasons. Who could have imagined for a moment that when the bondage of trailing street-dresses was once removed, and short ones sanctioned, that you could ever find human beings in the shape of women yielding homage again to that most filthy and abominable of all fashions? But you see, even now, on the ruins of burned cities, trailed offerings of silks and Thibets.

So long as women were kept in idleness, or allowed to do only such work as confined them within doors, there was less need of practicality in dress. Now that she competes with men in most of the activities of life, shall the style of dress not be changed to meet this new dispensation? Or shall we still see her in this bondage of attire, that enslaves her at every step? You will find weeks of labor spent, with each change of season, in making or remodeling clothes that do not stand gauged by the latest ukase of fashion. You are invited to an evening entertainment in Germany, at the house of a professor, perhaps, where you meet with persons the most intellectual and cultivated—persons whose names are known and honored in all lands; the hostess appears in a quaint dress of drab silk, that served as her wedding one fourteen years before; the bodice is long, the sleeves mutton-legged; but dear Mrs. Grundy's presence is not felt; no one seems to scan her from head to foot and exclaim: "How horribly she is dressed, how dowdy she looks!" Six months' time, at least, would have been expended upon that dress had it kept pace all of those years with the ever-recurring changes of fashion; and in that time, with the cares of a family—and they are not few that devolve upon the wife of a scantily-paid German professor—she has learned, with her children, to speak English so well as to be able to entertain those of her guests speaking only that language. You will find as a rule in all lands that the most cultivated and best-bred people are the most simply and unpretendingly dressed. You find in Europe women dressed suited to their occupation; the French shop-girl in a neatly, plainly-made black alpaca. The homespun and woven woolen gown of the German servant-girl meets her necessities for years. The dress of the English and Irish serving-girls is made of some substantial material. But let them emigrate to America, and what do you see? This epidemic rage for dress attacking them immediately. As soon as Bridget has gathered together a few spare dollars she takes her mistress for a protolype and goes forth, prayer-book in hand, to St. Xavier's as gorgeously arrayed as the mistress to St. Paul.—Dr. Mary J. Safford, in the Herald of Health.

Mr. Greeley's Wills.

Now that the excitement over the wills of Mr. Greeley has died out, the facts that were freely mentioned in private circles during the controversy are given to the public. The first notice we saw of it in the newspapers was in the New York correspondence of the Buffalo Commercial Advertiser, which says that "the eldest daughter had received her education in the Convent of the Sacred Heart in this city, and has since continued to interest herself openly and warmly in the affairs of her alma mater; drawing with her the minor daughter, over whom her influence was naturally great. Why a will that gave $10,000 to the Children's Aid Society should be supplanted by one that placed the whole property, not excepting that which did not belong morally to the testator, and not only the property, but the person and education of the younger sister, under the absolute control of a graduate of the Sacred Heart, requires no great shrewdness to guess, and it is equally easy to conceive of adequate agencies for effecting the purpose, during the last broken and wandering hours of poor Mr. Greeley's mind. Those to whose judgment I at least must defer, entertain no doubt that the ultimate cause of this famous will controversy was but one of the characteristic intrigues of the Roman priesthood in families where they obtain a footing."

It will be remembered that the last will, which was finally set aside, was written in a few lines on a single piece of paper by the broken-hearted and mentally-shattered father, giving all his property to this Roman Catholic daughter, who was to have the charge of the younger sister, and this younger sister could have nothing except at the discretion of the older. It was a will that, on the face of it, it was evident no sane man would make, and it was the more preposterous as it was well known that the younger daughter, thus disinherited, was the favorite of her father, and he had never favored the education of the elder in the convent. But in the hours of his final conflict, when reason was tottering on its throne, if not actually prostrate, this remarkable will was drawn from him, and his signature appended to it while he was in an "asylum," and about to enter the gates of death.

It requires no great sagacity to discover whence came the influences that extorted from the dying man this surrender of his whole property, and his favorite daughter to the custody of one who had, contrary to his wishes, imbibed the principles of the Romish Church. In the light of this revelation, which should have been made at the time, it is very easy to see that the contest over the will, which seemed ungracious, was a struggle for righteousness and justice. And it finally triumphed in the withdrawal of the paper that would have left the property and the children under the ghostly control of the Romish priesthood.

Christianity in Japan.

The edict has gone forth abolishing all laws against the Christian religion. It was published on the nineteenth, and can be relied upon as correct. All statements of such an act prior to this date were untrue. Though long expected, it has brought inexpressible joy to all of our hearts. How wonderful are the providences of God in regard to this people!

To the native Christians this is an event of the greatest importance. Their happiness is unbounded. When I told my good teacher, he could find no words to express his delight. As he has been very active and prominent in the translation and publication of the Scriptures he has had special reason to fear the penalty of the law. But he has gone bravely forward with a firm trust in God and a consciousness that he was right. He was sensible that he was in danger, but ready to meet it.

It is probable that this will greatly enlarge our work, and render it necessary to strengthen our force at once. I have more than I can do already, but every day there are new openings which demand my time and strength. It seems that there never was a field so inviting and important as this. We shall have to start a theological class as soon as possible, and send forth the natives to do the work. I have several under my instruction that I trust may yet be trained for the work of the ministry. They know how to interest their own people much better than foreigners.

One of the young men whom I recently baptized has been disowned by his father and left without support. He has found a position in Yeddo, but, as he gets no sympathy from other Christians, it is a great trial for him. But he is still decided and faithful.

It is further proposed by the government to throw the whole country open to foreigners. They are to be subject, however, to the Japanese laws. As there is no published code (nor indeed does there seem to be at present any well-defined system of government,) this will be somewhat difficult to settle. But it will undoubtedly be arranged very soon, so that we shall not be limited, as now, to a certain portion of this town, and a few square acres in one corner of Yeddo. Next in importance to the relict of toleration is this permission to go into the country and reach the whole people.—H. Loomis, in the Interior.

Chinese Visiting Cards.

The Chinese are a sociable people, and their courtesies are of a most laborious and punctilious character. Visiting, for example, is a serious affair, and has to be conducted in accordance with a conventional code, which prescribes all kinds of formalities, varying with the respective positions of the visitor and visited. Cards are extensively used, but of a color and style far different from what we are accustomed to employ as mediums in the interchange of civilities. The shapes and sizes, moreover, vary considerably with the occasion and the individual. The common plain card used between equals consists of a single sheet of crimson paper about twelve inches long by four inches broad, with the surname and name stamped or written in black ink, the more mammoth-like the character the more imposing and respectable. This is generally used among officials pretending to some rank or position. A card of about half the size is used by men of inferior rank and commoners, or even by the higher officials where the parties are on intimate terms. Then there is the "complete card," as it is called, which is only employed on grand occasions, such as New Year calls, visits of congratulation on weddings, births, birthdays, acquirement of literary degrees, and the like; also of condolence on deaths, etc. This card is folded, and must contain ten folds, each sheet of which is as large as that of the first card described. The name of the individual is inscribed on the right-hand lower corner of the first fold, prefixed by the words, "Your stupid younger brother," and followed by the compliment, "bows his head and pays his respects." When the person visited belongs to a generation senior to the visitor, the latter styles himself: "Your stupid nephew;" if to two generations senior, the visitor writes: "Your more than stupid nephew." Should the individual visited belong to a younger generation, the visitor takes to himself the name of "uncle" instead of "nephew;" retaining, however, the depreciatory appellative of "stupid." There are still further varieties of self-designation, according to the particular gradations of relationship; but those I have quoted will suffice to give an idea of the punctilious rules peculiar to Chinese visiting. I may add that the card last described is, as a matter of etiquette, always understood to be returned to the visitor; it being, presumably, expensive to leave such voluminous proofs of regard with a number of friends.—The Foreigner in Far Cathay, by W. H. Medhurst.

God Our Portion.

As the scattered rays of light are all included in the focus, as the fountain contains the streams, as the object reflected is prior to and nobler than the different reflections of it, so all finite and created good is contained in him who is the supreme good; all earthly excellence is but the partial emanation, the more or less bright reflection of the Great Original. To have a portion, therefore, in God is to possess that which includes in itself all created good. The man who is in possession of some great masterpiece in painting or sculpture need not envy others who have only casts or copies of it. The original plate or stereotype is more valuable than any impressions or engravings thrown off from it; and he who owns the former owns that which includes and is capable of producing all the latter. * * * Surveying the wonders of creation, or even with the word of inspiration in his hand, the Christian can say: "Glorious though these things be, to me belongs that which is more glorious far. The streams are precious, but I have the Fountain; the vesture is beautiful, but the Weaver is mine; the portrait in its every lineament is lovely, but that Great Original, whose beauty it but deeply depicts, is mine, my own. 'God is my portion, the Lord is mine inheritance.' To me belongs all actual and possible good, all created and uncreated beauty, all that eye hath seen or imagination conceived; and more than that, for eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, nor hath it entered into the heart of man to conceive what God hath prepared for him. All things and beings, all that life reveals or death conceals, everything within the boundless possibilities of creating wisdom and power are mine; for God, the Creator and Fountain of all, is mine."

CHRISTMAS HYMN.

BY MRS. M. E. [illegible]

Upon Judea's starlit plain
There broke a sudden glory,
And distant mountains caught the strain
Of an exulting story.
Above the sad and weary earth
Were angel voices ringing,
The blessing of a Savior's birth
The burden of their singing.

O trembled to their harps of gold—
That strain divinely tender;
Along the shining skies it rolled
In grand and choral splendor.
It floated o'er the sleeping world,
A balm for all its sorrow,
Its ring of heavenly peace unfurled,
To greet a brighter morrow.

The shepherds keeping vigil there
Had heard the Advent angel,
Whose word of grace had calmed their fear,
And told the new evangel.
And when the music ceased they went
To Bethlehem's lowly manger,
Where Mary, mother, held, content,
The wondrous infant Stranger.

Still, when the music dies away,
And hearts with grief are breaking,
We take our path from day to day,
And, earthly fields forsaking,
We go to Bethlehem and kneel,
Where mystic incarnation,
In human form, doth God reveal,
Himself our consolation.

And still we lift the glory-song
To meet the raptured chorus
That evermore the ransomed throng
In heaven are lymning o'er us.
Through mingled years of shade and light,
We trust the love that frees us
From fear of death, from evil's blight—
The blessed love of Jesus.

The Dilemma.

Men claim that they have doubts as to the reality of religion. They question its promises of the present and revelations of the future. If capable, they do not canvass closely the basis of their skepticism. Finding within them a desire not to believe a system that condemns and threatens, they nurture it with care, and cultivate a boldness and vehemence of assertion, frowning upon the silent pleadings of the soul, that cannot be answered by arguments of the lips. The effort is to banish thoughts of the future, that trouble and distress, and enjoy full indulgence in sinful lusts.

As a general thing, it is doubtful whether the Christian has that charity for professed infidels that the case demands. Dishonesty and duplicity must not be charged, by the wholesale, upon men because they boldly proclaim the most horrid unbelief. The Christian must discriminate; and he must possess a real and mellowing sympathy for honesty of purpose and sincerity of desire to know the truth. He may get upon a high plane, and deny the possibility of literal infidelity. The unity of the soul, the essential difference between vice and virtue, between right and wrong, being unquestionable, self-evident truths, he may safely deny the claim of skepticism in its literal signification. At the same time there is a degree of sympathy and broad charity to be exercised toward the professed rejecters of God's truth. In other words, evidences of sincerity, and professions of honesty of inquiry, aught to be freely accepted.

But the object of this paper is more particularly to present a dilemma to the professed unbeliever.

In the first place, no one can object to the results of "pure religion and undefiled." In that, that repentance toward God and faith in Christ makes men virtuous, honest, upright, sober, truthful, faithful, forgiving, forbearing, patient, meek, enduring, cheerful, peaceful, quiet—qualities them for happiness in life and victory in death—it must be accepted as a result most desirable; and this, too, narrowing the view to the infidel's contracted horizon. Admitting that the soul dies with the body, that death is an endless sleep, or, in other words, that man has no soul—is only a superior animal—and then religion, the practice of godliness, is the highest wisdom; is, in fact, man's chief good.

This cannot be denied. Nor can it be denied that just in proportion as the individuals, community, state or government is under the benignant influences of the gospel, there is peace, lovableness and prosperity. It cannot be denied that a community is desirable and sought out just in proportion as it is conformed to the sublime teachings of the blessed Jesus; and that therefore, even as a business transaction, the wisest investment men can make is a knowledge of the truth of the Bible, and diligent practice of its precepts and principles. This is looking at the subject from its lowest and grossest standpoint. But it is the plane to which infidelity drives us.

Now all shades of skepticism admitting the above facts—and they cannot be denied—we remark, secondly, that religion is true, wholly true, or is false, wholly false. The Bible is either the word of God, inspired by his Spirit, or it is the production of man. If the production of man, it is a gross imposture, because, though containing grand and sublime lessons, it professes to be a revelation from God, when it is not. If the production of men; it must be the work of bad men, because all our notions of goodness and virtuous actions repudiate the idea of a good man seeking to impose a falsehood upon his fellows. If the work of bad men, then we have the strange anomaly presented of bad, evil-disposed men seeking, through a gross imposture, to make their kind happier by making them better. This we know to be contrary to all principles and practices of evil. A house divided against itself cannot stand.

But taking the skeptic's creed as correct, rejecting the testimony of God's word, and say that the Bible is the work of men, and of bad men necessarily, and that therefore religion is false, a myth and fancy, we find the infidel himself in this dilemma: that a gross imposture, a myth and fancy, is full of virtue and good to man; because he has admitted and must continue to admit that the practice of the religion of the Bible is man's chief good, even as an animal.

Again, he does not know that the Bible is false. The Christian world is against him—the wisest and the best, the purity of whose motives cannot be impugned, bear testimony in life and death to its truth. The vagaries of modern science—the absurd premises, and, if possible, the still more absurd conclusions—only serve as a foil to the raggedness and wretchedness of the unbeliever's cause. The miserable shifts to which those are driven who would eliminate God from the creation, are of themselves sufficient proof of the truth of religion. Then the infidel finds himself looking into the face of the dreadful may be. "It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God." Serious doubts, well taken, do not prove the falsity of the Christian's hope; and the greatness of the matter at issue, the solemnity of the may be, demands immediate attention—demands that we give the safe side the benefit of the doubt.

If it is good to be religious for time, why not all be and do that good? And then all will be ready for the great change awaiting all. At least it could not be considered experimentum crucis. ***

Foreign Letter.

MR. EDITOR: It has become the fashion among Liberals to say that the House of Lords should be abolished; that the Peers are obstructionists and stand in the way of reforms, and oppose them. Yankees sneer at the English aristocracy, but ape their objectionable characteristics, while unable either to appreciate or imitate their grace of manner and those other qualifications which distinguish the English nobleman throughout the world. You have a New York paper published in the interests of "untrammeled loves." It has been suppressed as too far in advance of Yankee radicalism to be timely; it has been resurrected twice or thrice, as needful in the judgment of some. The House of Lords have just thrown out again the bill for legalizing marriage with a deceased wife's sister. This is the third time that the Peers have refused to pass that bill. Those who desire to marry their wife's sister are happily few in number, and are not likely to increase. The women are opposed to the bill. They are dead against it. For this healthy and wholesome sentiment I would almost allow them some things that are included in the women's rights programme. When this measure is before the House of Commons I would delegate them to supplant the men when a vote is about to be taken, and compel the males to be keepers-at-home for the time being. Before the bill passed up for the consideration of their lordships a deputation waited upon Primate Tait to urge him to support the passage of the bill through the upper house, but his grace refused to comply. The archbishop is latitudinarian in some of his theological views, but on all social and moral questions he is conservative. The deputation represented four thousand Nonconformist ministers—i. e., I suppose all the Baptist, Congregational and Methodist clergy of England. The Presbyterians are not in favor of the bill. Do all these clerics want to marry their wife's sister? It would seem so. If my minister had such a desire I would change my spiritual guide very soon indeed, and seek one whose tastes were more refined and more manly. In this matter the Anglican clergy appear to more advantage than their Nonconformist brethren. Indeed they present quite a contrast to the latter. It may be said such a marriage involves no natural guilt, and is prohibited as but a questionable evil. Granting this, is it seemly? In what had the prohibition its origin? It may be said that sisters-in-law make kinder stepmothers. I believe no such thing. An aunt may be kind and affectionate and all the rest. Let her become a stepmother and her kindness and warmth of affection moderate amazingly. The majority in favor of the bill in the House of Commons is smaller this year than it was last and the year before. The Wesleyans were stirred up to seek the passing of the bill to revenge the enforced expatriation of Punshon; but Providence undertook their cause, and sent the great orator back to them without legalizing such unions. The precedent sought to be established by Punshon was effectually rebuked, and the agitation which it helped to increase is beginning to subside; and if men will marry their sisters-in-law they will do so contrary to British law. And I sincerely hope the day may never come when the existing statute shall be repealed.

The ministry was defeated on the Irish university bill, and Mr. Gladstone resigned the premiership, but has resumed the reins of power again in consequence of the unwillingness of the Conservatives to take office at present.

The Rev. Thomas Jackson is dead. He had outlived nearly all his cotemporaries. One member of the Conference is his ministerial senior by one year. Mr. Jackson's record is a grand one. His was an active life. He was for nearly seventy years a minister. He succeeded Jabez Bunting as connectional editor in 1821, and for nineteen years he filled that office. During this period he published some of his best works. He was appointed the first theological tutor of Richmond College. He was twice president of the Conference. He was a good theologian, and a keen and vigorous polemic. He was one of three brothers who did good service for Methodism, and who were able and successful ministers of Jesus Christ.

Spurgeon delivered a vigorous sermon once against the Established Church. A few days after he received a visit from Dean Stanley, whose object was to expostulate in a friendly way with Spurgeon, and, if possible, to win the Baptist over to his comprehensive views. He was invited to dine with the dean. He accepted the invitation, and met at the deanery another distinguished Broad Church clergyman of the Established Church. We are not told what effect the dean's hospitality had upon the sturdy Baptist, but Spurgeon is not a whit less faithful, earnest and successful now than before this lax and insidious dignitary of the Established Church tried to dissuade him from his fealty to his Master. It would be well if the dean's hospitality were equally powerless and ineffectual in reference to others who are sometimes found at his table, in order that they may be bribed into silence in reference to his dangerous and deadly teaching. There are yet men who will not bow the knee to Baal.

An Urgent Appeal.

FROM MONTANA TERRITORY.

To the Lovers of the Church of God, wherever found:

DEAR BRETHREN—We have a church organization in this growing town of Bozeman, and very recently we have organized a good Sunday school. But we are homeless. We have no house of worship of our own. We are now occupying the district school-house. It is small, inconvenient, out of the way, and wholly unsuited for worship. We need room to grow, and space to spread out, and a chance to develop. We must have a house of our own. It is an absolute necessity to our success here. We are poor and unable to build without help. This is an important point—a kind of central position, or soon will be, as the great Northern Pacific will be here in a year or two. We must be ready for it—have a home for our Methodist brethren who come to this new country, where they can have the benefit of a pure, unmixed and non-political gospel.

We have a fair start here, and we cannot very well afford to give up or abandon this field. It is too important. So far, as to numbers, we are the strongest denomination in the Territory, and the preachers are laboring hard to sustain the cause here. But we must have help. If we had suitable houses of worship our cause would grow and succeed. Those who assist us now, in this our great extremity, may live to see the bright day of our grand success and triumph, and rejoice with us, and be proud of their part in the grand and glorious achievements of Southern Methodism in Montana.

We can raise some money with which to build, but not enough. We must have $3,000 more. Come, brethren, don't be alarmed! This is a very small amount among so many Southern Methodists and their friends. Come, will you help us a little—just a little? Who will come to our assistance and aid us in building a house for God in this far-off Western land? I beseech you all to help us if you can. And I know you can if you will. Who will send me a contribution?

Will you send me twenty-five or fifty cents? Will you send me $1, $2, $5, $10, $20 or $50? And can't some good, liberal, generous soul send me $100? Just send me any amount, from five cents up to $100. Give as you feel able, and as the good Lord hath prospered you. That's the rule, you know.

No more important or worthy object ever appealed to the liberality of a Christian people than this. The truth is, we must have a church here or else much hard labor already expended must be lost.

Brethren, we need help, and help we must have. It is an urgent, pressing necessity. I wish I could beg; I certainly would in this instance. The cause is just. Who will respond? Do, my brethren, this one time help us a little. You will sleep sounder at night and feel more religious by day. That is my opinion. Give us a lift and try the experiment, and if you fail, well, then charge it up to loss and gain. But be sure to help us.

Send all sums under $5 in a letter; from $5 up by postoffice order to Bozeman City, Gallatin Co., Montana Territory.

At a meeting of the official members of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, in Quarterly Conference assembled, the following resolution was unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That this Quarterly Conference, now in session, do most heartily indorse and approve the efforts of the Rev. Dr. Curtiss in building a house of worship in this town, and also his efforts to procure funds from abroad for this purpose; and we most heartily unite our voices with him in making this appeal to our friends for aid.

A Critic Criticised.

MR. EDITOR: In the ADVOCATE of the third instant I find an article most severely criticising another article published in the ADVOCATE of the twentieth of February last, by W., on the subject of Infant Church Membership and Salvation. The article referred to is from Bro. Shanks, of Waynesboro.

I know Bro. Shanks slightly, as Josh Billings would say. He wields a pretty heavy sword sometimes, and, like myself, is on the old fogy order; is perhaps about my age—threescore and seven; has perhaps more of the emblems of purity on his head than I have, and is altogether venerable in appearance, and deserves veneration from all. But I ask whether he is entitled to the liberty he has assumed in the severe denunciation and paper castigation he has seen proper to inflict on Bro. W.? Were it not that my own age justifies me in criticising Bro. Shanks, I do not know that I would have undertaken it. But I wrote an article myself, after W.'s, indorsing his. The length of Bro. Shanks' blade, while rapping Bro. W. over the shoulders, has reached me also.

I do not think Bro. Shanks has the right to say, and especially in the acerb style in which he said it, "that preachers among us who believe and preach this doctrine are not born of God themselves, or have forgotten that they were purged from their old sins. They are not called of God to preach the gospel, but are deceivers of the people; they ought not to be heard or believed. They are the blind leading the blind, and all will fall into the ditch together. They are natural men, born of the flesh, but not of the Spirit, and they cannot discern the things of the Spirit, because they are spiritually discerned. They have the 'form,' but deny the power of godliness;" and a good deal more in the same vein, not necessary to quote. He calls them "Simon Magnus," a gentleman I never heard of before, and therefore do not know how to apply the epithet. I have read of one Simon Magus, but Mr. Maguire is a total stranger to me. In the history of Simon Magus I have not read of his having told "penitent mourners that they were converted to God when they were not." Simon offered Peter money to give him the power of communicating the Holy Spirit by the laying on of hands. He seemed to know when persons were converted too, and desired to be able to impart that blessing! But Mr. Maguire, it seems, was not so good a judge of those matters as Simon. Does not Bro. Shanks virtually call us hypocrites?

I do not intend to discuss the matter of the truth of Bro. W.'s article with Bro. Shanks, for that, I feel satisfied, would be a useless waste of time, as well as of your valuable paper. Yours truly,

JOHN SAMPLE.

McCALE'S CREEK, Miss., April 11, 1873.

Centenary Female College.

MR. EDITOR: I am called upon to give information in regard to the present condition of this institution. As it is under the control and direction of the Alabama Conference, all Methodists feel an interest in it and ought to rejoice in its prosperity. In some unaccountable way a rumor has been circulated, in certain sections of Alabama, that by the action of the last Alabama Conference, at Eufaula, the institution had passed out of the control of the Conference. Nothing could be further from the truth. It is the property of the Methodist Church South, and will continue as such as long as one brick stands upon another. The large increase of patronage this session over the increase of last session, with accessions in January, places it upon a solid basis and insures permanent prosperity.

New pianos, a new organ, new fences, a generous use of the paint-brush, general repairs, and a growing, first-class art department show unmistakable signs of prosperity. The very grounds, the pleasing scenery, the imposing buildings are intimately associated with the memories of Methodist men and women. Between four and five hundred young ladies have gone out as graduates from these halls.

This institution has never been closed since it was founded, over thirty years ago. It occupies a position no other institution occupies. So assured is the president of continued success that extensive preparations will be made to accommodate a large increase of boarders. It is a great satisfaction to know that the present patrons of the institution are in cordial sympathy with its management, and are well pleased with the progress of their daughters, and the attention and care given them. Mrs. M. D. Riddle, the matron, has no superior in experience and adaptability to her difficult and responsible position. Under her care, counsel and skillful nursing when sick the student has every advantage. Pupils are under a good, judicious discipline, and a strong moral and religious sentiment prevails among them. During the last revival many were converted and joined the church. The religious meetings in the college are well attended and produce happy results. Notwithstanding the severe winter just passed, no serious sickness has prevailed.

This institution has great advantage in location. A strong faculty, a healthy, invigorating atmosphere and freedom from hurtful influences will attract patronage. Those who come to the commencement, on the twenty-fifth of June, to see the senior class of thirteen young ladies graduate, will have an opportunity to examine the workings of the institution, and can satisfy themselves in regard to its advantages.

A new catalogue will be issued in June, and those who desire to receive one will please address the president,

A. D. McVOY.

Alabama Conference.

MR. EDITOR: In your issue of April 3 a "Member of the Alabama Conference" discourseth upon the subject of statistics and finance, and draws a comparison between the different districts of the Conference by showing the amount paid per capita by the members of the church in each district to the support of the preachers. As all the districts of the Conference do not lie in the rich cotton belt between the two great rivers of the State, and as all have not a $3,000 station to help out the aggregate amount paid in the district, perhaps the following comparison would be more just:

| | Assessed for preachers. | Paid. | Per ct. |
|---|---|---|---|
| Mobile district | $10,430 00 | $8,332 20 | 79.8 |
| Demopolis district | 8,375 00 | 7,592 51 | 90.6 |
| Selma district | 10,558 00 | 8,999 17 | 85.2 |
| Greensboro district | 9,000 00 | 7,688 30 | 85.3 |
| Montgomery district | 12,993 75 | 11,972 55 | 91.3 |
| Eufaula district | 8,765 00 | 7,144 20 | 82 |
| Marianna district | 3,982 00 | 2,822 58 | 70.8 |
| Camden district | 6,834 00 | 4,158 25 | 61.1 |
| Union Springs district | 9,810 00 | 6,612 00 | 67.7 |

ANOTHER MEMBER OF THE ALABAMA CONFERENCE.

THE New York Observer, in an editorial on temperance legislation, says: "Prohibition does not seem to have worked well in Boston, and this is the test of the law, for three-fourths of the drinking is done in the large cities of any State; but the friends and advocates of temperance need not be discouraged. They ought not to be hidebound by any theories or favorite plans of staying a gigantic evil. If one thing will not prevent or cure the evil let them try another, and they will yet find a solution of the difficult problem of intemperance and its treatment. We believe that this solution will not be found, however, until measures are adopted which will affect not only the intemperate classes of the community, but all classes, and especially those who manufacture and sell, in large or small quantities, intoxicating liquors."

OBITUARIES.

MRS. ELIZABETH SHAVER, daughter of Jacob and Elizabeth Masters, and widow of Bro. Sandiford Shaver, was born in Kentucky during the year 1811; joined the Methodist Church in 1827; was married to Bro. Shaver in 1828, with whom she moved to Louisiana in 1839, and died March 31, 1873, aged sixty-two years.

For forty-six years she was a member of the church—an humble, earnest, zealous and consistent Christian. Oh, that there were more such witnesses for Christ. May the departure of such arouse others, and the example encourage them to get nearer to God.

ROBERT RANDLE.

IN MEMORIAM.

THOMAS FORD OWEN was born in Warren county, Mississippi, on the twenty-second of July, 1825, and died, of fever, at his residence near Harrisonburg, Louisiana, on the twentieth of March, 1873, aged forty-seven years, eight months and twenty-eight days.

He was a quiet and useful citizen, a faithful and generous friend and neighbor, a discreet and affectionate husband and father, and, better than all, a Christian. He had been an acceptable member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South about eighteen years, and at the time of his death was a steward of the Harrisonburg and Sicily Island circuit.

The writer of this was with him often during his last sickness, and questioned him particularly about his spiritual condition. His response was: "I am at peace with God."

While he was passing away his youngest child, a lovely daughter, aged about eight months, lay a corpse in the same house. As we gazed upon this child, beautiful, transcendently beautiful in the repose of death, its face aglow with an almost heavenly smile, and then thought of the faith of the dying father, we felt more disposed to rejoice at the manifested mercy of God than to weep with the afflicted ones who stood at the bedside of our dying friend.

It is sad to think we shall never more meet him in the public congregation, nor bow with him at the family altar, nor hear his voice, nor feel the hearty shake of his hand, nor behold his welcome smiles and the radiant glow of his countenance. But we would not call him back, because we believe he is in the brighter and better world. His wife and four children survive. We bespeak for them the prayers of God's people.

J. F. M.

MRS. MARY C. BRADLEY was born in Washington, District of Columbia, August 9, 1801, and died at Mount Airy, her residence in Adams county, Mississippi, March 22, 1873, in the seventy-third year of her age. Her maiden name was DeFrance. When she was about eight years old her parents moved to Mississippi. On the twenty-seventh of June, 1821, she was married to Robert Bradley, who preceded her to the better inheritance about ten years. For almost half a century she was a consistent member of the Methodist church at Natchez, Mississippi.

From many witnesses we have ample testimony as to the purity and faithfulness of her Christian life. As a wife, a mother and a mistress she endeavored to fill her station according to godliness. Previous to the emancipation of her slaves it was her custom to spend a part of every Sunday afternoon in reading the Scriptures and other good books to them, carefully instructing and praying with them.

Truthful, kind, charitable, humble, patient and firm, her life was at once a warning and an example to all about her. Her devotion to reading the word of God, especially in her old age, was as beautiful as it was uncommon. Even after she had passed threescore years she is said to have read the Bible through a dozen times, averaging more than once a year; and so familiar had she become with its contents that she could quote almost any part at will, or tell the place of any passage that might be mentioned.

It is needless to exact testimony of the moments of dissolution in the case of one who had lived such a life. Having frequently declared her freedom from the fear of death, she met it as the appointment of her heavenly Father, and calmly slept in Jesus. It is at once an honor and a satisfaction to her surviving children to have had such a mother. They have but to follow her as she followed Christ. They have no cause to sorrow as those who have no hope, but rather to cherish the comforting assurance that one who so faithfully loved and served her Maker here, now wears the crown of life in the better land.

W. L. C. H.

DIED, of meningitis, at Longview, Upshur county, Texas, on Friday, March 21, 1873, Sister ELIZA THOMPSON, wife of Bro. James R. Thompson.

Sister Thompson was born in Perry county, Alabama, February 21, 1830. While she was yet a child her parents moved to Noxubee county, Mississippi, in 1836, where they lived till she became grown. In 1846, at the age of sixteen years, she professed religion and joined the Missionary Baptist Church. In 1852, while on a visit to her relatives in Perry county, Alabama, she was married to Bro. James R. Thompson. In 1853 they moved to Sumpter county, Alabama. In 1856 Sister Thompson joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South—the church of her husband. In 1864, while Bro. Thompson was in the Confederate army, she moved to her father's, in Noxubee county, Mississippi. In 1866 they moved to Franklin parish, Louisiana, and in 1868 moved to DeSoto parish. In November of 1872 they moved to Longview, Upshur county, Texas, where they remained till her death.

I learn from reliable authority that Sister Thompson was a faithful and devoted Christian from her conversion till death, and in her life and death gave ample proof of the efficacy of the religion of our Lord Jesus Christ, and left an abiding confidence that she is now reaping the reward of the righteous. She was always at her post in the domestic and social circle. She suffered five weeks with that monster of diseases—meningitis. She was patient and resigned in sickness and suffering—uncomplaining, and hopeful of immortality.

She leaves behind a husband, a son and a daughter to mourn the loss of a companion and mother. They will doubtless have the sympathy and prayers of all good people.

"O what are all my sufferings here
If, Lord, thou count me meet
With the enraptured to appear,
And worship at thy feet."

JOHN T. KENNEDY.

DIED, on the tenth of January, 1873, after an illness of five days, Bro. Stephen Williams, of Ouachita parish, Louisiana. Brother was born in Richmond county, North Carolina, July 29, 1813; professed religion, at a camp meeting held at Mount Zion, Montgomery county, North Carolina, in 1836, and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, in which he remained up to his demise. He held the office of steward more than a quarter of a century, and died in office. He was first married to Miss Jane Thomas, daughter of the Hon. George Thomas, of Richmond county, North Carolina, and moved with his father-in-law in 1840. There he lost his wife and little babe; after which he set out to travel, and made his way, to Ouachita, Louisiana, in 1842. During his stay he became acquainted with Miss Phebe Faulk, daughter of the late venerable John T. Faulk, and was married to her in 1843, with whom he lived happily up to his death, and by whom he had twelve children. Eight preceded him to the glory-land; four are left with their devoted mother to mourn their loss. Brother was not faultless, yet he was candid and upright in all his business transactions. If he erred it was not intentional—his purpose was to do right. By the energy of himself and his now widowed wife she has ample means for their support. Brother was liberal with his means to support all religious and charitable institutions. He never doubted his conversion. As usual, on Sunday night before he died he read a chapter, sang a hymn and offered up prayer. Soon after he was taken very ill. He suffered much for three days and nights, after which he complained but very little. He lay quiet with his eyes shut, apparently asleep most of the time. He talked but little, as it seemed to hurt him to do so. On Friday morning he fell on sleep, and, like Stephen of old, was full of faith and hope. "Let me die the death of the righteous, and let my last end be like his." May God bless the widow and her children. May she live long, and, like Phebe of old, continue her charities, visiting the sick, admonishing the imprudent, and instructing children in the way to heaven.

Farewell, dear brother; thou art four of seven
That have left this earth for a home in heaven;
We too hope to join thee in giving praise to him
Of whom thou did'st so much delight to sing.

R. T. WILLIAMS.

LAURA JANE CHAPMAN, wife of William George Myers, died in Richland parish, Louisiana, on Sabbath afternoon, February 2, 1873. Sister Myers was born in Noxubee county, Mississippi, July 11, 1842, and was married to William George Myers November 2, 1871. She was possessed of an intelligent and cultivated mind. She was afflicted for months previous to her death with lung disease, and had frequent severe attacks of the same, but was always patient and resigned to the will of her heavenly Father, never murmuring, never complaining. She was converted and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South when but twelve years of age. Being born of strictly pious parents, and blessed with their example and instructions, she grew up to be a steady, consistent and faithful Christian. Her spirit and life commended the religion she professed to those with whom she was associated in life. She was ever ready to converse upon the subject, and talk of the great benefits and advantages of a pious life. She entertained a well-grounded hope of heaven, and was ready to give, to any that would ask, a reason for the hope she entertained. She loved God, loved his ministers and people, and delighted in the worship of the sanctuary. She was always in her place at the house of God when not providentially hindered. Her state of health frequently prevented her attendance upon the regular appointments of the preacher in charge, and she would feel that it was a deprivation, but was nevertheless resigned to the will of God. She was confined to her house and bed for some eight weeks previous to her death. As the last hour approached she was calm and resigned; talked of death without being in the least excited by his near approach, and requested that as she passed away from earth they would sing that beautiful hymn beginning with that her soul might be wafted with songs of holy ecstasy to realms on high. Thus quietly and calmly, on the holy Sabbath, as one gently falling to sleep, passed away the soul of our beloved sister, leaving an affectionate husband, brothers and sisters, and a number of relatives and friends to mourn the great loss they sustain in her death. Since her death her prayers have been answered in the conversion of her kind husband, who is now a member of the church, and whose purpose is to rejoin his dear departed wife in the kingdom of eternal blessedness.

"O sing to me of heaven," etc.

J. L. WRIGHT.

THE Rev. Hugh Stowell Brown has been lecturing in Liverpool on "The People of America." In speaking of the physique of the American people he said the proportion of tall men was much greater than in England, although it was very rarely that a fresh, jolly-looking face was to be seen in the United States. The people of America, he considered, were distinguished for their sobriety, but among our weaknesses the reverend gentleman particularly specified the love of finery. In personal cleanliness the Americans seemed to him superior to English people. In conclusion, he noticed the extreme affability of Americans.

WHITE AS SNOW.

ISAIAH 1, 18.

"White as snow!" Oh, what a promise
For the heavy-laden breast!
When by faith the soul receives it,
Weariness is changed to rest.

"White as snow!" Oh, have you watched it
Softly carpeting the ground,
Wreathing with a wreath of silver
Every common thing around?

"White as snow!" Can my transgressions
Thus be wholly washed away,
Leaving not a trace behind them,
Like a cloudless summer day?

Yes, at once, and that completely;
Through the blood of Christ, I know,
All my sins, though red like crimson,
May become as white as snow.

I believe the glorious record
God has given of his Son;
I accept the free salvation
His atoning death has won.

Yet, though free from condemnation,
I am not in heaven yet;
What it cost—this free salvation—
Never let my soul forget!

Much forgiven! Quite forgiven!
Once for all, yet daily too,
Let me live near him who saves me,
Let me keep the cross in view.

Much forgiven! Then let boasting
Be forever cast aside;
Shall a newly-pardoned sinner
Dare to lift his head in pride?

Much forgiven! O my Savior,
If my present state be such,
May the farther words describe me:
'This poor sinner loveth much!'

Death of Rev. Thomas Jackson.

At last the venerable Thomas Jackson is gathered home to his fathers. He was in his ninetieth year, having been born at Saneton, in the East Riding of Yorkshire, December 12, 1783. Yesterday I followed his remains to the grave at Richmond cemetery, where he is buried by the side of his wife.

He was the most beautiful old man ever seen, I should think, since the days of Wesley; of middle height, compactly and strongly built, almost robust, but with little tendency to stoutness, though well to do in personal appearance. His face was his charm; the complexion singularly pure, the color sub-roseate, the lines showing sharp firmness and even traces of hastiness, and singularly and charmingly tempered by sweetness and gentleness; the eyes bright blue, the hair soft, of good quantity, and snowy, silvery white; the forehead open, upright (not high nor low) and round; the whole countenance lighted up with sunny radiance, which varied and was sometimes overcast with sorrowful or indignant emotion, but which never vanished, and was often refulgent. His intelligence, his recollection, his power of unfailingly correct and ready speech, so that every word of his might always have been printed just as spoken, remained with him perfect to the end. He died of old age; "the weary wheels of life at last stood still." His hearing failed him three or four years ago; his sight began to fail about two years since, perhaps less. Up to two years ago his handwriting was clear and beautiful as ever; never did printer compose from better handwriting than his, or cleaner, neater copy than he invariably sent to the press. But the last writing of his I saw was very like the latest signature by Wesley of his name in the Conference journal; it started on the ground-floor, and, within the compass of two or three words, had climbed strayingly up to the second story. He still continued, however, to attend the meetings of the London ministers and of the book committee up to three months ago. It is only twelve months since he finished the revision of his admirable "Life of Charles Wesley" for a new edition; and since that time he has also specially revised the abridgment of the same work. These two editions will soon be published. The last time I met him at the book committee he said to one who stood by him: "You stayed at the Bristol Conference, did you not, with the author of 'The Life and Times of the Countess of Huntingdon?'", (Mr. Hobart Seymour, brother of the Rev. Hobart Seymour, who wrote "Mornings with the Jesuits.") "Yes," was the reply, "I did." "And he sent a message through you to me, to say that he hoped I would, in a new edition of my 'Life of Charles Wesley,' modify some severe things I had said respecting his book in its bearing on the Wesleys?" Assent was given to the query. "I cannot," said the old Wesleyan with his customary emphatic and angular jerk of the head. "I cannot; he did gross injustice to the Wesleys; he misrepresented them; he said things which were untrue. I cannot alter a word. You must let him understand this." It was explained to him that Mr. Seymour had passed to another world. Now Mr. Jackson is gone too. Mr. Seymour was a few years Mr. Jackson's senior; a shrewd, chatty, good, somewhat gossiping old man, of one of the most ancient families in Ireland or England (an English family, originally descended from the same stock as the great Seymour family of Henry the Eighth's reign, of whom came his unhappy queen of that name.) He had spent nearly half a century mostly on the continent, and when, not a great many years ago, he, an old-fashioned Countess-of-Huntingdon-Church Methodist, came back to England to end his days, he did not know well what to call himself, or with whom to identify himself in church fellowship. He did, however, join the Countess of Huntingdon's chapel and congregation at Bristol.

Thomas Jackson conferred two inestimable services on Methodism. One was his correct and complete edition of Wesley's works, a marvel of conscientious care and accuracy; the other was the excellent work to which I have already referred, his "Life of Charles Wesley." His "Life of Watson" also was a valuable work. It is said to be too full of quotations from Watson's "Missionary Reports." I well remember, however, with how much interest I read that life straight through, quotations and all, when I was a youth in my teens. Some of his minor publications in defense of Wesley, such as his "Letter to Dr. Pusey," and his "Letter to Dr. Fitzgerald," and especially his pamphlet entitled "Why are you a Wesleyan Methodist?" are very valuable. Nor must I certainly forget his "Centenary of Wesleyan Methodism," a volume which has been extensively useful, and perhaps more read than anything he wrote.

His "Duties of Christianity," "Institutions of Christianity" and "Providence of God" are three volumes which contain the substance of lectures delivered by him while he was theological tutor at the Richmond Theological Institution. His "Life of John Goodwin," the Arminian Puritan and Independent, which he carefully revised, enlarged and republished not many months ago, is a learned, accurate and valuable contribution to the history of Puritanism and the Puritan age, and does justice to the memory of a very original and able thinker and divine.

Thomas Jackson was the son of an Englishman of low degree—I am not sure whether small farmer or farmer's man. His early boyhood was divided between "field-keeping" (or "bird-keeping") and attending the village school, where he learned nothing but to read, write and cipher a little. He was apprenticed to a carpenter at an early age. But he had an excellent plain understanding, great love of knowledge, especially book knowledge, a good constitution, and indomitable pluck and energy. He was thoroughly awakened under the preaching of Mrs. Barritt, a well-known female preacher of those days, and wife of the Rev. John Barritt—the wife being, it was said, a better preacher than the husband. Thoroughly awakened, he was also soundly converted, and for more than seventy years walked in the unclouded light of God's countenance. Steadfast, unblamable, full of spiritual sensibility, rich in unction, overflowing with tender, child-like emotion, such was Thomas Jackson through all his protracted life; always fresh, simple, guileless and happy, "full of faith and the Holy Ghost."

He was born at Saneton, near Market Weighton, was apprenticed at Shipton, preached his first sermon at Barnby Moor, near Pocklington, was appointed as a traveling preacher to Spilsby in 1801, being in his twenty-first year. He labored in Lincolnshire, Lancashire and Yorkshire, in various circuits, for seventeen years, and then was appointed to London (Spitalfields.) In 1813, being then at Wakefield, he took part in the first public missionary meeting held in the Old Chapel, Leeds. He was appointed to Spitalfields (not City Road, as stated in the Watchman) in 1821; and in 1824 was chosen by the Conference to succeed Dr. Bunting as connectional editor. Most diligently and efficiently he did that work for nineteen years, and then in 1843 was appointed theological tutor. That office he held for eighteen years, and then retired to spend the serene, prolonged and warmly sunlit evening of his life in the presence of his brethren of younger generations—more honored than any man since the days of Wesley, and yet more beloved, if possible, than honored.

He was buried yesterday, as I have said, at Richmond. The college chapel, ten miles from London, was crowded with hundreds of lovers, hardly of mourners, who had come to do honor to his memory. He had loved Richmond much, and had lived there in his tutorship for eighteen years. There was a great crowd in the cemetery to see him laid in the grave by the side of his wife. The president (Wiseman,) ex-president (Dr. James) and Mr. Arthur took part in the service at the college chapel, Mr. Arthur delivering the address. The service at the cemetery was read by his grandson, a clergyman of the Church of England, Mr. Bloomfield Jackson. There will, of course, be a full report in our papers. It is, I believe, at this moment uncertain whether Dr. Jobson or Dr. Osborn will preach his funeral sermon. Some account of his later days you will find in the Watchman. He had unbroken peace and happiness. No cloud ever overcast his view; no doubt ever troubled his mind.

Indeed he seems, all his life through, to have been unvisited by any serious doubt. His understanding was plain and good; his common sense clear and sound; his memory most retentive; but he had no intellectual subtlety, and little, if any, power of speculation. Perhaps his one failing was that he had so little capability of sympathizing with the honest doubt even of reverent spirits, to whom doubt in itself was a painful and often fearful thing. Doubtless, however, his own happiness was the more serene and untroubled because of his simple and straightforward walk along a safe, sure way, even though his prospect might be large only upward, his insight not profound, and his range of vision somewhat contracted. He is gone, and with him untold stores of Wesleyan lore and old Methodist traditions. He is gone, and I never expect to see another man so pure and happy as Thomas Jackson.—N. Y. Z., in New York Christian Advocate.

The Bible in France.

A late number of the London Sunday Magazine states that the report of M. Monod, the agent in France for the British and Foreign Bible Society, presents us with some interesting particulars—little bright specks of green amid the surrounding desert of infidelity and worldliness. Colportage in France, he admits, is difficult work, and some of the old agents have had to be parted with as not being in all respects equal to the work. In Paris it is particularly difficult; the police forbid sales in thoroughfares; private houses are guarded by porters, and shops are protected by the genius loci. To be a colporteur in such circumstances requires no common measure of earnestness, tact and love of the work. Sometimes the colporteur gets help unexpectedly. At Meux, where there are a good many Protestants, a woman took him under her protection, and introduced him to a number of tradesmen, saying: "You Huguenots, here is a Huguenot—you must buy his book!" A man said to him: "This is a good book; the Prussians took the copy I had, and I am very pleased to have you replace it." At another place the Bible is at a great discount; a man is making a fortune by exhibiting a girl in one of whose eyes is to be seen a picture of Notre Dame de Lourdes. (The girl has a false eye of glass, and the picture is painted thereon!) At another place a man wishes a Bible, but he has no money; suddenly he remembers that he has a hen; he runs and sells it, and with the money buys a Bible—reminding one of the parable of the treasure in the field. In another district an old man, when offered the Bible, glanced over it, and then called his children, and said with great emotion: "Children, here is at last the book of which you hear me constantly speaking, and from which are taken all the stories I tell you." In some parts of France we are told that whole villages are thirsting for the gospel; but there, as in other places, the great difficulty is to find suitable agents. Who can doubt that if a sufficient supply of men of the right stamp, spirit-stirred and spirit-stirring, could be obtained, not only for France, but for other countries equally destitute, there would result, with God's blessing, a glorious change? Everything points to the need of prayer to the Lord of the harvest to send forth laborers into his harvest.—Christian Intelligencer.

Latin Pronunciation.

Those who have long been advocating a reform in the system of Latin pronunciation will be glad to note that gradually the obstacles thereto are lessening. Recently college authorities and conventions of educators, in this country, have been moving favorably in the matter. Against all the unanswerable arguments of the advocates of reform, the example of the older colleges and universities of America and England has hitherto been persistently pleaded. Younger institutions, with little prestige and wealth, felt reluctant to institute changes which had not the sanction of those older and wealthier.

For this reason, more than any other, the so-called English system of Latin pronunciation has been retained in general use in this country, for the last quarter of a century, notwithstanding investigation had proved it to be wholly erroneous, and a formidable hinderance to the mastery of the language. But, as we before remarked, the obstacles to the adoption of a more correct pronunciation have been gradually lessening, and the present indications are that not a single one of our colleges and higher seminaries will much longer abuse the public and advertise its own incapacity and lack of progress by retaining the English system.

It now seems that the opponents of reform are soon to be deprived of the support they have hitherto had from the conservatism of the great schools and universities of England. At the conference held in 1871 the head masters of those schools declared the system prevalent in England to be unsatisfactory, and agreed to ask the Latin professors of Oxford and Cambridge "to draw up and issue a joint paper to secure uniformity in any change contemplated." This request was repeated in 1872. Accordingly, Profs. Palmer and Munro, finding themselves "agreed in all essential points," and also that there was "a considerable body of opinion, in the universities and elsewhere, in harmony" with their views, have drawn up and issued the proposed paper, under the title, "Syllabus of Latin Pronunciation."

The changes proposed are substantially those which have already obtained the sanction of the most advanced and exact scholars in this country. This "Syllabus," making a tract of seven pages, has been printed by Deighton, Bell & Co., of Cambridge, and by James Parker & Co., of Oxford.—Western Christian Advocate.

The Jesuits in Europe and America.

In spite of Bismarck's proclamation, the latest Jesuit catalogue, according to the Pall Mall Gazette, divides the German province, as usual, among the 22 branches of the Society of Jesus. It records it as containing 750 Jesuit brothers, which is 21 more than either of the great French provinces contains. But in the whole of France the Jesuit force is very large, and this fact gives us a clew to the weakness and ignorance which characterizes a large part of the French nation. There are 2,665 Jesuit brothers in France, and their immense influence with an emotional, uneducated and easily excited people can be well understood. The whole strength of the society is stated at 8,951, and the several provinces are Rome, Naples, Sicily, Venice, Turin, Austria, Hungary, Galicia, Germany, Belgium, the Netherlands, Champagne, Francia, Lyons, Toulouse, Aragon, Castilia, England, Ireland, Mexico. The provinces in this country are New York, Maryland and Missouri. Baltimore is a stronghold of Jesuitism, and a center of operations for the Middle and Southern States. St. Louis is another stronghold, but it is not equal to Cincinnati. In this latter city there are 152 Roman Catholic churches, 18 chapels, 60 stations, and a large number of priests and brothers. But New York is the great American center, and presents a most imposing array of Catholic institutions. Jesuit influence is felt here in politics, where laws are executed in favor of Roman Catholics; where with one hand this sect pulls its own children out of the public schools, and with the other puts Roman Catholic teachers in to instruct Protestant children; and where money and influence and talent are all enlisted upon their side. We shall need a Bismarck here before long, and he will arise when needed.—New York Observer.

THE avaricious man is like the barren, sandy ground of the desert, which sucks in all the rain and dews with greediness, but yields no fruitful herbs or plants for the benefit of others.—Zeno.

Scientific.

THE transit of Venus which occurs in 1874 will be a very important event in the astronomical world. From data obtained at the transit of 1769 Encke computed the distance of the sun from the earth to be ninety-five million miles. Other methods of computation have given varying distances. A favorable transit occurs only once in centuries; hence its importance as a means of establishing the correct distance of the sun. The British government will establish five stations of observation, with appropriate instruments; Germany will send out four governmental expeditions; Russia and France will also make authorized observations.

FIRE-PROOF WOOD.—In the general discussion now going on as to rendering buildings proof against fire we are surprised to see that no reference is made to any process for rendering wood less combustible. When the wood pavement in Main and Market streets was put down our readers will remember that we were told the wood was "burnettized," and that it would neither rot nor burn. Being skeptical on this subject, we picked up some pieces, and put them in the furnace under our boiler, where, to our astonishment and satisfaction, we found that they would only smolder and gradually waste under the intense heat, not at any time breaking out into a blaze. A building with timbers burnettized would be more fire-proof than if it had iron beams, for they would not throw down the walls by their expanding and contracting. The process of burnettizing is a well-known one, and comparatively inexpensive. It should be more generally used in preparing timbers for buildings, as well as for other purposes.—Poughkeepsie Eagle.

COAL IN CHINA.—According to Baron Richthofen and others, the Chinese coal-fields cover an area of upward of four hundred thousand square miles; twelve thousand miles of coal have sufficed to make Great Britain the greatest workshop of the world. In the province of Hunan a coal-field extends over an area of twenty-one thousand seven hundred square miles. There are two perfectly distinct coal-beds in Hunan, one bearing bituminous and the other anthracite; the latter being most conveniently situated with regard to conveyance by water, easily mined, and covering an area equal to that of the anthracite coal-fields of Pennsylvania. In quality this coal will compare favorably with the best kinds of anthracite known. The coal area of the province of Shansi is of the enormous extent of thirty thousand square miles. This is capable of supplying the whole world, at its present rate of consumption, for thousands of years, and has unrivaled facilities for mining. The beds vary from twelve to thirty feet in thickness, while the system of coal-bearing strata in this province is about five hundred feet in thickness, and contains, besides, an inexhaustible supply of iron ore. Ping-ting-chan is conspicuous for an extraordinary and exceptionally favorable juxtaposition of coal and iron.

HOW SOIL WAS MADE.—Prof. Agassiz says that all the materials on which agricultural progress depends are decomposed rocks, not so much those that underlie the soil, but those on the surface, and brought from a considerable distance, and ground to powder by the rasping of the glaciers. Ice all over the continent is the agent that has ground out more soil than all other agencies put together. The penetration of water into rocks, frost, running water and baking suns have done something, but the glaciers more. In a former age the whole United States was covered with ice several thousand feet thick, and this ice moving from north to south by the attraction of the tropical warmth, or pressing weight of the snow and ice behind, ground the rocks over which it passed into the paste which we call soil. These masses of ice can be tracked as game is tracked by the hunter. He has made a study of them in this country as far south as Alabama, but has observed the same phenomenon in Europe, particularly in Italy, where, among the Alps, glaciers are now in progress. The stones and rocks ground and polished by the glaciers can easily be distinguished from those scratched by running water. The angular bowlders found in meadows and the terraces of rivers not reached by water can be accounted for only in this way.—Field and Factory.

COPPER IN THE ANIMAL ORGANISM.—Mr. Church showed, some years ago, that certain coloring matters in the plumage of some kinds of birds contain copper as a constituent. According to the Mechanics' Magazine, M. Duclaux has recently found appreciable quantities of copper in cocoa. The highest proportion of copper found in cocoa was two hundred and fifty parts in one million; and the lowest, five parts of copper in one million. The husks are richer in this metal than the kernel, there being about ten times as much copper in the former as in the latter. Statements that minute quantities of copper have been found in different organic structures are by no means rare or new. Thus Devergie (Medecine Legale, 1840, tome 3, page 533) states that copper had been found by (among others) Sarzeau, in cinchona, madder, wheat, flour, bran, tea, coffee, barley, oats, rye, etc.; and by Boutigny d'Evreux in wine, cider, wheat. Devergie himself, from a number of experiments, arrived at the conclusion that minute quantities of copper are normally present in the organs of the animal body, being derived from the food. More recently, Blaslus found one part of copper (and lead,) in 1430, in the ashes of the human heart, liver, spleen and kidneys. Others consider that the presence of copper is merely accidental. We (British Medical Journal) are almost inclined to believe, however, that traces of copper enter into the animal organism, playing some subordinate part in it.—Public Opinion.

Religious Intelligence.

OVER 2,000 children are in the American Methodist Sabbath schools in Sweden.

IT IS SAID that there are thirteen Roman Catholics in the Cincinnati Board of Education, and forty Roman Catholic teachers in the public schools of that city.

THE United Brethren churches are now enjoying largely of the revival influence. Gracious revivals prevail at Westerville, Ohio, the seat of the Otterbein University, and at Annville, the seat of the Lebanon Valley College.

THE Rev. William Paul Quinn, senior Bishop of the African Methodist Episcopal Church, died at Richmond, Indiana, on the twenty-first ultimo. Of Bishop Quinn's birthplace and parentage nothing is known; but he was supposed to be about seventy years of age, and had been one of the most efficient and influential preachers and organizers in his denomination.

ENGLISH Wesleyan papers have lengthy notices of the late John Fernley, a well-known layman in the Methodist Church. He was very wealthy, and in his later years devoted his property largely to the construction of beautifully-furnished chapels and school-buildings to fill acknowledged wants. He was a man who let his Christian belief and practice show itself in the smallest incidents of every-day life.

THE Watchman and Wesleyan Advertiser of London, England, in an article on the Christian missions in British Guiana, says of the Wesleyans that the people of the colony are friendly to them, and the congregations at their meetings always large and attentive. This paper also says that Rev. Willis Nazarey, of the Methodist Episcopal Church in this country, will go to British Guiana early in 1873, to establish a mission.

IN CONNECTION with Mr. Spurgeon's church in London is a Pastor's College, where men are trained for the ministry without the requirements, we infer, of a general collegiate education. It has furnished 183 preachers within a few years, who are doing faithful and successful service in towns and villages throughout England. Arrangements have just been made for the purchase of a piece of ground on which to erect an edifice for the college.

AT A MEETING of the committee of the Anglo-Continental Society, presided over by the Bishop of Ely, a sub-committee was appointed for effecting co-operation with the Old Catholics. A letter was received from the professor of civil law at Bonn, giving an encouraging view of the prospects of the movement. It was suggested that a fund should be raised to assist French and German priests in distress. It was announced that a cheap edition of Bright & Medd's Prayer-Book was ready.

BISHOP HARRIS, of the Methodist Episcopal Church (North) will leave New York early in May, will spend a few days in Chicago, and will embark at San Francisco, on the steamer which leaves that port for Yokohama, Japan, July 1. The Christian Advocate says: "Rev. Dr. Waugh will return to his mission-field in India, in company with Bishop Harris. Rev. Ross C. Houghton, of the Northern New York Conference, will also accompany him in his entire tour in visiting our missions in Asia and Europe.

THE American Baptist Missionary Union has 114 faithful men and women working in the several Asiatic fields, with 500 native preachers and assistants, and 350 churches, with an aggregate of nearly 22,000 members. Nearly 30,000 are in fellowship in the 416 mission churches of Europe. They also have a good number of members in Africa, where the work is carried on by native pastors. The scale of appropriations for the current year, ending the thirty-first day of March next, reaches the sum of $250,000.

STILL ANOTHER NOVELTY IN ROME.—A friend writes us from Rome: "A uniform series of Sunday school lessons is being circulated in Italian in pamphlet form, and some of the Italian papers give it place in their columns, and others speak favorably of it. A few days ago a chaplain of one of the regiments now quartered in one of the expropriated convents in Rome came for 100 copies of the printed lessons for use among the soldiers, many of whom are earnest Bible students." Surely there is hope for Italy.

A GREAT REVIVAL is being conducted at Winchester, Virginia, by the celebrated revivalist, Rev. Dr. Leonidas Rosser, of the Virginia Conference. A series of meetings has been in progress about three weeks, during which time, up to Tuesday night, January 28, 150 persons made profession of religion, including a large number of the adult population. On Sabbath last, says the Lynchburg Republican of January 31, fifty persons were received into the church, and more than that number nightly occupy the benches set apart for penitents.

THE English Congregational ministers are discussing in the English Independent the question of a liturgical service. The majority seem to think that some modification of the old and meager ritual, which shall allow some place for the congregation to participate audibly, would be an improvement. One of the writers says that, with the exception of certain omissions of doctrinal sentiment, the liturgical formulary proposed by the late Dr. Martineau is one of the most perfect he has ever seen. All of the writers insist on leaving a place for extemporaneous prayer, and most of them approve of the use of some portions of the English Prayer-Book.

AT THE last regular meeting of the American Bible Society, among the communications read were those from Rev. S. R. Riggs, missionary to the Dakota Indians, giving a lively description of the joy of that people at the receipt of Scriptures in their language; from Rev. Dr. Martin and others, Peking, stating the completion of the Old Testament in the Mandarin colloquial, by Rev. Dr. Schereschewsky, and asking for funds to print it, which were granted; from Rev. Dr. Brown and others, Yokohama, sending a copy of the gospel by Mark in the Japanese language, stating that the other three gospels are nearly ready, and asking funds to print them granted also.

REPORTS from Turkey show Christian progress. A letter from Bansko, in the European Turkey mission, say that the native pastor from that church had conducted the examination of thirty-one candidates, of whom all but one were admitted to membership. The church now numbers fifty-three members, twenty-three resident in Bansko, and the remainder in Samokov and adjacent towns. The election of a deacon, and the examination of a candidate for approval as a preacher, added to the importance and interest of the occasion. This fact also was full of interest: that a letter received shortly after says that the children, who have all along thrown mud at the house of a missionary bookseller, are now knocking at his gate asking for Testaments!

DURING the last thirty-seven years the publication department of missionary labor in Northern Turkey has issued more than 700,000 bound volumes. More than 150,000 of these are partial or complete copies of the Scriptures. That religion and education might go hand in hand, an equal number of school-books has been published, including reading and spelling-books, text-books on arithmetic, geography, grammar, elementary works on the various branches taught in academies, besides a work on theology for theological students. In addition to these, numerous religious books and tracts make the number of printed pages to amount to more than 280,000,000. A newspaper established in 1855 continues to be published, though it is hoped that native energy will soon assume this enterprise, as it has already begun to undertake that of preparing and issuing educational works.

THE Provincial Wesleyan says it is in contemplation by the general committee of the British Wesleyan Missionary Society to urge the formation of an Affiliated Conference in India. The time seems to have fully come for taking such a step as this. An extensive railway system is being developed in Hindoostan, and steamers are plying upon its waters and around its coasts. The Wesleyan missionaries laboring in fields in the Indian peninsula widely distant from each other could easily assemble at some central point in that country. They would be cheered and strengthened by being brought into direct relationship with each other through the medium of a conference, and the work they have at heart could be more effectually promoted by the energetic use of that increased liberty of action which they would enjoy under a conferential organization. The Wesleyan thinks there is no doubt the British Conference will approve this project at its next session, and that the Indian Wesleyan missionaries will gladly accept it.

THE MISSIONS OF THE REFORMED CHURCH.—The Amoy Mission, China. The chief station of this mission is upon the island of Amoy. The field traversed extends about sixty miles, from east to west, into the interior, and from seven to fourteen miles from south to north, and has upon it a population of over 2,000,000. The mission has seven churches and 497 communicants, viz.: the First church of Amoy, 104 members; Second church, Amoy, 130 members; church of Chioh-be, 101; Okang, thirty-nine; Hongsan, sixty; Tong-an, thirty-three, and Chiangchiu, thirty. The two churches of Amoy have their native pastors, and are self-supporting. The church of Chioh-be has also its native pastor, and pays one-half of its current expenses. Sixty-nine souls were received on confession of their faith during the year. The mission employs eleven native helpers, all of whom are preachers, and has a class of seven theological students. Five out-stations have been regularly visited, but three of them may be vacated and more important centers selected. Seven day-schools for both boys and girls were conducted during the year, and one boarding and day school for girls. These schools had eighty-seven boys and thirty-two girls in attendance. The school for girls is especially regarded with a great deal of interest, because it is an experiment, and because the education of the women is of vital importance. Not one Chinese woman in 10,000 is able to read and write. It is supposed that, besides the few taught by the missions during the past five or six years, there are not twenty women in the large city of Amoy, having a population of over 200,000, who can read and write. Public sentiment has been all one way, and in opposition to the education of women. In these circumstances the girls' school has been a success. A number of girls have learned to read and write the Romanized colloquial, and are now taught geography, arithmetic, composition and biblical subjects. The range of studies will be steadily enlarged. Besides this school, women's meetings, as they are called, have been held, in connection with the two churches of Amoy and the small congregation of Kulangsoo. The chief object of these meetings has been to teach the women to read, and to give particular instruction in the Scriptures, and in regard to the Christian life. About fifty women have learned to read already, and as many more are now in the classes. The Chinese women by these meetings, are brought into very pleasant and profitable relations to the ladies of the mission. These "meetings" are taught exclusively, and the girls' school chiefly, by the ladies of the mission. The Amoy mission is justly regarded as one of the most successful in China. It has always been conducted with wisdom and economy. For the maintenance of this mission, during the year 1873, the board has appropriated $13,500. The missionary force consists of Revs. J. V. N. Talmage, D. D., Daniel Rapalje, Leonard W. Kip, J. H. Van Doren, Mrs. Talmage, Mrs. Kip and Miss Helen M. Van Doren.—Christian Intelligencer.

One Work of the Devil.

"But satan hindered us" is the reason which Paul gave the Thessalonians for his failure to visit them. Once and again he would have come, but something turned up to disappoint. He was kept back apparently by visible and ordinary agencies. The Jews had stirred up the people of Berea against him, and he was compelled to omit Thessalonica in his course and pass on to Athens. It might have been this, and apparently nothing more, but it was satan who hindered. The apostle was needed greatly at that particular point and at that particular juncture. Satan was posted, comprehended the situation, and laid his plans to hedge up the preacher's way.

This is an aspect of the devil's activity, and one of his manifold works, which deserves to be noticed. Hindering is an art and a study by itself, in which diabolical sagacity and malice excel. Satan is ever on the watch, and alert to throw obstructions in the way of those who are intent on doing good. If he can keep the apostle where he is, turn him into a less urgent field, or close the door which invited him, the evil purpose is effected. It is the art of keeping back, of deflecting and of neutralizing the instruments of the gospel. Satan was working against the Thessalonians at long range, and rather indirectly, when he fomented the trouble at Berea. This utterance of the apostle is only one of the frequent mentions which he makes of satan and his baleful machinations, but it is a momentary flash which opens a wide scene.

Looking at religious enterprises and all godly undertakings, we shall find that peculiar and unexpected difficulties arise. Especially is this the case in all aggressive efforts—pushing the gospel standard forward into missionary fields, or strengthening the waste and weak places in the most critical periods of their history. A great missionary enterprise is an object of deep study by him who is set, as the adversary, against the progress of the Redeemer's kingdom. Whatever elements of danger there may be are already grasped by him, and he is certain to develop and set them in array just at the moment when they can be wielded with the most damaging effect. If the preacher can be held when he ought to go, and if the movement upon any given point can be retarded, something is gained for evil, although the good is not hopelessly overthrown. The devil is at the bottom of those embarrassments which are ever coming across the best endeavors of the church. The work of God he may not destroy, nor always avowedly oppose, but he may hinder it in many ways, and especially by hampering and disabling the Christian in his free and individual exertions to strengthen and extend the lines of gospel conquest.

Here is an apostle bent upon a visit to a church which greatly needed his presence, but his plans are baffled, and he is driven widely from the destination where duty and the divine providence seem to have called. He was not utterly overwhelmed, and very far from being destroyed, but he was hindered. He had a cherished object in view—an enterprise to which affection, as well as a sense of duty, pointed. There was something in the circumstances, perhaps in the persecution which was instigated by the unbelieving Jews, or may be it was the penetration of an inspired moment, which detected the agency of satan. It was probably but a little before this that Paul and Silas "were forbidden of the Holy Ghost to preach the word in Asia;" and though they assayed to go into Bithynia, "the Spirit suffered them not." It is well to distinguish what is of God and what of the devil—when the Holy Ghost restrains and when satan hinders. The Spirit was the true guide and is still. The hand of God, in his providence, points to the field of duty, and the way is plain to those who are intent to know the divine will. But Paul recognized the existence and agency of this malicious and most adroit adversary. Satan was the great marplot, running counter to the mind of the Spirit, distorting, distracting and foiling the plans of the devoted preacher. Not here, as in some other places, is he manifested as the seducer, the accuser or the destroyer, but simply as the hinderer. We believe it was Peter Cartwright who sent a message to a camp meeting that the devil had foundered his horse and thus prevented his arrival. Doubtless Dr. Clark would have agreed with the rough pioneer preacher, and Paul might have been of the same mind. In his own experience it was satan that hindered. In spite of all that appeared and that seemed adequate to account for the result, there was a subtle, unseen, malignant and personal agency—a mysterious energy within the natural forces, which the inspired pen characterizes as "the power of darkness."

In how many ways satan may hinder the work of God it would be impossible to tell. How he retards the progress of religion, deters the church from bold aggressive operations, and makes use of all sorts of occasions and instruments to obstruct the progress which he cannot altogether arrest, is more than intimated. It was, however, with Paul a personal besetment. Satan hindered him. The thorn in the flesh seems to have been a messenger of Satan to buffet him. Luther had a time of it with the same evil one, and hurled his inkstand at him, as the wall of his chamber testified. Reverently and with instruction let us also remember how the Lord himself was tempted. Certain it is that all great, earnest souls, who are given heart and soul to God and his cause, are more or less painfully conscious of the hinderances of satan. In themselves, in outward circumstances, in social surroundings, these drawbacks appear; but there is an art and a sagacity which lie concealed from view, and which act as a secret spring upon the visible movements that thwart their purposes. In work, in prayer, in privileges, satan hinders. This is one work of the devil, and a very considerable one—to embarrass, to entangle, to hold back the believer from his highest and best undertakings, and to obstruct him in his most useful and essential duties. In our watchings and prayers, and in our estimate of difficulties which are likely to arise both in our personal piety and in the enterprises of religion, we must take these satanic hinderances into the account. The wrestling is not against flesh and blood only, but against a most fearful and persistent array of dark and malignant spirits.

Temperance.—No. IV.

—TO THE FOLLOWERS OF JESUS:

My brethren, intoxication is an unmixed evil. Whatever produces it is evil. All the liquors common among us will produce it. They are all evil. If wine is not an evil, why are there so many cautions against it in the word of the Lord? If it is not an evil it would not produce evil. Like produces like. Good cannot produce evil, nor can evil produce good. Your Master, whom you profess to follow, came to destroy every form of evil from the world. He is against evil of every kind—against this evil that is growing and spreading so alarmingly. Jesus Christ wants men to be men, not beasts. He wants them to be men whose intellects are unclouded by the fumes of wine, whose sensibilities are not obtunded by drink, whose faculties are not stupefied by intoxication. Are these the men of whom you wish society to be composed? Certainly they are. You like that sort of humanity. Then, in the name of consistency, why do you not set yourselves firmly against this evil? Why do some of you set the example of drinking, and thus help to make the opposite class of men—thus help to make beasts out of rational creatures? Jesus Christ wants society to be bound together by the bands of love and confidence and trust. He wants communities to prosper and progress in good. He wants every family to be a type of heaven. Is this the kind of society you like, my brethren? Of course it is! Then, in the name of consistency, why do some of you keep this murderous liquor in your shops and deal it out to your patrons, and thus sow the seeds of disintegration in society, and produce discord in the community and generate hatred in families? While you profess to be on the Savior's side, you are hindering his cause by helping to spread evil. Don't you see that in this you compromise your Christian character in the eyes of the world, and by your action nullify your profession? Can you afford to do that for the sake of a few dollars? Is a Christian man to jeopardize his eternal safety, and impede the progress of good, and bring a reproach upon the church, and cause the lip of the world to curl up in scorn at the very name of religion, and produce sorrow in the great heart of the Savior, and "grieve the Holy Spirit," by becoming a helper in propagating one of the worst evils the world ever saw? While he professes Christ openly in the sanctuary, will he put him to an "open shame" in his shop? Will he with the right hand embrace the religion of Jesus, and, like a left-handed Joab, thrust it through the vitals with this two-edged dagger of inconsistency?

My brethren, Jesus Christ is against evil—evil as evil! Are you with him? "He that is not for me is against me." God has mapped out his magnificent plans, by which the kingdom of evil shall be wrecked; and satan has laid his plan of defense, by which to defeat God's purpose and stop the progress of good. On which side are you, my brethren? God calls on you to help, and, if you do not, when the last battle is fought and the grand victory won there will be a reiteration of the fierce malediction of the prophetess: "Curse ye them bitterly, because they came not to the help of the Lord against the mighty." Brethren, "suffer the word of exhortation." For the sake of a clear conscience, for the sake of the peace of your own firesides, for the sake of the happiness of the community, for the sake of immortal souls, for the sake of the honor of religion, for the sake of the precious blood of Jesus, for the sake of a heaven of unending joy, set yourselves against this evil. Fight this fiend wherever he shall make his appearance. Be in haste to get out of reach of those terrible woes that are denounced, in the word of the Lord, against him "who putteth the bottle to his neighbor's mouth." VOX.

Meeting of the Publishing Committee.

The Publishing Committee of this paper met on Wednesday, the sixteenth. The members from the Alabama Conference were not present. Dr. W. H. Watkins and Rev. J. G. Jones were in attendance from the Mississippi Conference, and the three representatives of the Louisiana Conference. Dr. Watkins was appointed to prepare a report for publication, but as this has not come to hand we append the resolutions passed and the report of the publisher:

Resolved, That we are highly gratified with the report of the publisher, showing an improved financial condition of the paper, and giving evidence of able and successful management.

Resolved, That we hope for such an improvement during the ensuing year as to enable the publisher to pay the editor his proper salary in full.

Resolved, That the material, type and general appearance of our paper are entirely satisfactory to the committee; and also in our judgment a credit to the enterprise and skill of the publisher.

Resolved, That for editorial and other original matter, and for selections and departments judiciously filled, our paper takes rank with the most popular issues of the religious press of the country.

Resolved, That the notices of Quarterly Conferences be inserted not more than twice.

PUBLISHING AGENT'S REPORT TO THE COMMITTEE.

To the Publishing Committee of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE:

DEAR BRETHREN: For the information of the committee we present the following statement of our financial operations during the year 1872, and from January 1, 1873, to April 15, 1873, as follows:

FROM JANUARY 1, 1872, TO JANUARY 1, 1873.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Receipts | | $15,722 37 |
| Expenditures | | 15,613 32 |
| Excess | | $109 05 |

FROM JANUARY 1, 1873, TO APRIL 15, 1873.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Receipts: | | |
| Subscription | $2,816 95 | |
| Advertisements | 3,427 72 | |
| | | $6,265 67 |
| Expenditures: | | |
| Composition | $1,358 25 | |
| Presswork | 131 00 | |
| Expense | 874 76 | |
| Paper | 2,147 55 | |
| Clerical expense | 497 50 | |
| | $5,009 06 | |
| Type | 739 31 | |
| | | 5,912 37 |
| Excess | | $226 30 |

We are glad to inform the committee that in the month of January we adopted an entire new dress, except the heading. The type we are now using enables us to put at least one-third more matter in the paper than with the old type.

Extensive repairs have been made on the press and machinery, a new folding-room has been constructed, and other necessary expenditures have been made which will not require to be repeated; and in this respect our expenses will be reduced in future.

Our assets, consisting of amounts due from subscriptions and advertisements, are difficult to definitely estimate, and we have consequently confined ourselves to cash transactions. It is fair to say, however, that we are as well off as we have ever been. Respectfully submitted,

ROBT. J. HARP.

Our Mexican Mission.

The Nashville Christian Advocate says:

Our readers are deeply interested in our new mission in Mexico. We have published several interesting letters from Bishop Keener. We transfer another charming one from the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. It will be seen what a strong faith the Bishop has in both God and the church. God will not fail us if the church does not disappoint the expectations of the Bishop. Let us rally with promptitude and liberality to the Mexican mission. We can take no step backward.

In the same paper we find the following golden item:

FIFTY DOLLARS IN GOLD FOR MEXICO.

Rev. J. B. McFerrin, D. D., Secretary of the Board of Missions:

Bishop Keener, before leaving Texas, expressed his purpose, if the way was made clear, to purchase a building-site, if nothing more, in the City of Mexico, as a starting-point for our missionary operations in that republic. Our Sunday school, at the opening of the year, determined to raise $100 toward "clearing the way." I hasten to send you $50 gold—the amount collected in our Sunday school up to date. I hope the Sunday schools of the West will achieve the honor of raising the whole purchase-money. Yours truly,

F. A. MOOD.

CHAPPELL HILL, TEXAS, March 25, 1873.

The Central Methodist, published at Catlettsburg, Kentucky, notices the letters of Bishop Keener and the enterprise inaugurated in these terms:

An interesting letter from the City of Mexico, by Bishop Keener, will be found on our second page. Let no one fail to read and ponder over it. This is an enterprise which deserves the united support of the church, and we hope our readers will not be satisfied until they have, each and every one, made a contribution to the Mexican mission. Any one desiring to assist in this noble work, who will send their contributions to this office, we will duly acknowledge the same and forward the amounts at our own expense. Who will be the first to respond?

Bishop Keener is now in Baltimore, and the Episcopal Methodist speaks of him and a meeting to be held there in behalf of the Mexican mission. The Episcopal Methodist says:

Bishop Keener attended the preachers' meeting on Monday morning, and gave a very interesting account of his mission to Mexico. There will be a meeting of the pastors and official members of the churches on Friday evening, at St. Paul's church, preparatory to a general meeting in behalf of the Mexican mission during the Bishop's visit to Baltimore, his native city. On Sunday, the twentieth, he has engaged to preach at Mount Vernon church, Washington city, and will spend the following week in Baltimore. Due notice of the general meeting will be given in the daily papers.

We trust that the pastors and members of our Methodist churches, and the friends of Protestant Christianity generally, will be present on that occasion. Let there be a grand rally in behalf of this new departure for the cause of Christ. Truly a great and effectual door is now open in that country. The mighty revolutions have left bleeding but wide openings, into which the gospel of the Prince of Peace may now enter to heal and reorganize. The sun does not shine upon a more interesting and inviting field than Mexico presents to the Christian philanthropist.

Texas Methodism.

The Galveston Christian Advocate of April 16 gives the following items:

Bro. Stockton sends good news from his district. Six young men have been licensed to preach within its bounds since Conference. Others are expected to enter the ranks, and some of them will report themselves at the coming Conference for work. If the other districts in that Conference can make a like report, a noble body of recruits will strengthen the army already in the field.

The church should make these young men the subjects of special prayer. The burden of a great responsibility has been placed upon them. They have answered the call of God, and go forth with the promise: "Lo, I am with you"—the grand support of their faith in the glorious strife. They also need the sympathy of the church. May God make them able, faithful and successful laborers in the vineyard!

More are needed. Young men can find an ample field of usefulness in every Conference. Is the church obeying the Master's command, and praying the Lord of the harvest to send laborers into the whitening field?

It will be seen in another column that Rev. F. A. Mood, D. D., regent of the Texas University, has received four thousand acres of land of the ten thousand acres called for, a few weeks back, in our columns. A letter from one of the donors insists upon his extending the call to twenty thousand. What say the remaining sixteen landed Methodists of Texas.

The meeting at St. James church continued through last week. The interest deepened as the work progressed, and not only has the church been much revived, but a number have presented themselves at the altar, and several have found peace in believing.

MEETINGS AT NASHVILLE.—The Advocate of April 19 contains the following announcements:

The College of Bishops will meet in their room, in the Publishing House, on the first Wednesday in May (May 7.)

The Book Committee will meet on Tuesday, May 6.

The Board of Missions will meet on May 8.

IT IS inhuman not to feel afflictions, and unmanly not to bear them.

The College Agent's Note.

Under this head Dr. Fitzgerald writes to the Pacific Methodist. The account which he gives of himself and his fortunes makes good reading for anybody. Here is the most of what he says:

The first $500 subscription to the endowment fund was from an old bachelor. Having no children of his own, his unselfish soul felt a desire to do something for the children of other people. Though neither himself nor his own offspring might taste its fruit, his generous hand was ready to assist in planting this tree. Does he not deserve a good wife? These large-hearted, full-grown men are not the ones who ought to remain single.

Another old bachelor gave me a novel reason for not contributing to help our college. I applied to him at an unlucky moment—he had just paid a security note. Few things go more against the grain than that, as I too well know. "No," said he in reply to my appeal, "no, I won't give you anything—I don't believe in education just now. I have just had to pay a note for $2,500 which I indorsed. If I had not been able to write my name I would have been ashamed to sign with X mark, and so would have saved my money. Do you see the point?" Yes, I saw the point. I tried to make him see this point—that if he had withheld his signature from that note, and given the college one-half the amount, he would have made money by so doing. I think he will yet give me a contribution before he indorses another note. I have his promise to that effect, and will not forget him.

Another gentleman—not an old bachelor—declined to give to the endowment fund until the debt on the college building was paid. I told him I would not ask him to pay any part of a subscription until the debt on the building was all paid off. He then subscribed a small sum, which he will be called on in due time to pay.

Another gentleman, belonging to another church, in reply to a note asking a contribution, said: "I have just to-day given $400 to a college belonging to my own church, but your manner of asking so pleased me, and I have so much sympathy for your cause, that in a little while I will show my good will by making you a donation. He will not be forgotten by the agent.

The reason for declining to contribute given by a friend in Sonoma county is substantially the one most frequently presented: "The grass is short." This, I need not say, is a figurative expression for hard times. It is current among stock men and ranchers, and is sufficiently significant.

One fellow to whom I made my appeal turned on me with such a statement of his own wants that the matter ended by my loaning him a few dollars. His grass was very short indeed.

"Don't you wish you could find a Vanderbilt to endow Pacific Methodist College at once?" asked a friend after the news reached us of the rugged old commodore's magnificent benefaction to the Southern Methodist University in Tennessee. It would be a great thing, and would save a world of trouble. I cannot say that I would raise any objection to such a movement should it be made. But we shall act very foolishly if we stand with mouths open and hands folded waiting for outside aid. We can do this work ourselves, with the aid of our friends. The larger the number of contributors, the better for the college and for them.

The news from the college is good—good health, good behavior, good progress in study. Judge E. W. McKinstry, of San Francisco, will deliver the annual address at commencement. Hon. W. H. Rhodes (Caxton) will "orate" again for the literary societies on the same occasion. Number of students now, two hundred and eight.

THE Episcopal Methodist reports a revival in Trinity church, Baltimore. About thirty conversions, and the membership greatly revived. We quote the following paragraphs:

"The work still goes on. Last Sabbath morning Bishop Keener preached an excellent sermon to a large and attentive congregation. Being a native of Baltimore, his presence among us is hailed with delight by his numerous and warm friends, and no doubt will give an additional impetus to the already growing interests of Baltimore Southern Methodism.

At two P. M. the Sunday school monthly missionary meeting was held. The children were earnestly exhorted to give their hearts to Christ, and, the door of the church for admission being opened to them, about forty presented themselves, and were joyously received and welcomed to the bosom of the church. Divine Shepherd, defend and keep these little lambs!

Bro. Hannon delivered at night a very earnest discourse on the rich young man who came running to Christ. There were six penitents and two conversions."

In the Episcopal Methodist we find also an account of a great revival in our churches in Petersburg, Virginia:

We rejoice to learn that all our churches in Petersburg are enjoying the presence of the Lord, and that many are being set loose from the bonds of sin and are joining the ranks of their Master to battle against satan. We sincerely hope that the glorious work may deepen and widen, until we shall hear of hundreds more being converted.

At Washington Street church, Rev. W. W. Duncan, pastor, there had been, up to our last advices, eighty-three conversions, seventy-nine of whom have joined the church. Bro. Duncan, together with the members of the church, are hard at work, and are being blessed almost nightly by seeing souls converted.

At Market Street church, Rev. R. N. Sledd, pastor, there has been a glorious season. The meeting has been in progress for five weeks, and the result so far has been eighty-four conversions and seventy-two additions. Bro. Sledd writes as follows, under date of April 11:

"There is still considerable interest—six penitents and two conversions last night. If it should stop now I think I would have eighty additions from it—making just one hundred since Conference. Is it not glorious? Last Sunday was a memorable day with us. In fact, Market Street has never had such a season before. To God be all the glory."

Rev. Mr. Bayley writes to the Richmond Advocate from Petersburg, Virginia, April 7, as follows:

"My church in Ettricks is enjoying one of the most gracious seasons I ever witnessed. We have had fifty-seven converts, and thirty-six added to the church. Some were members of different churches before, some have joined other Methodist churches in the vicinity, and we are expecting many more to unite with us shortly. The case of one whom I have received into our church is very remarkable. He is a victim of paralysis, aged seventy-four, and unable to rise from his bed. He was converted at home, and I baptized him by affusion as he lay in bed."

The Raleigh Christian Advocate of April 16 says:

An interesting revival of religion is in progress in Goldsboro, North Carolina, under the preaching of Rev. J. E. Mann. Much interest has been manifested, and there are hopes of a continuance of the gracious season and the accomplishment of much good to the church.

The Richmond Christian Advocate of April 17 says:

An interesting meeting is in progress at Clay Street church, in this city, under the ministry of the pastor, Rev. B. F. Woodward. Seventeen persons were converted during the past week, and there is great seriousness in the congregations.

CHARLOTTESVILLE, VIRGINIA.—Twenty additions to the Methodist Church are reported.

Tributes of Respect.

PREACHER'S OFFICE,
Carondelet Street M. E. Church South,
April 11, 1873.

At the regular meeting of the board of stewards the following preambles and resolutions were adopted:

WHEREAS, Our almighty Father, in his sovereign pleasure, has called home to himself our honored and beloved brother, Dr. B. H. Moss; AND WHEREAS, Gracious submission to the will of him who doeth all things well is not inconsistent with that affection which mourns the vacant chair in our board; therefore,

Resolved, That we hereby testify and put on record the admiration and love which we ever entertained for our now departed brother, and our sincere condolence with his bereaved and stricken family.

Resolved, That in the death of Dr. Moss the church has lost an able and faithful officer, whose memory as such will ever be green and precious with his surviving brethren as long as they shall meet in the board of stewards.

Resolved, That these resolutions be spread on the minutes of the board of stewards, and a copy of the same, signed by the chairman and secretary, be delivered to the family of the deceased, and also that a copy, certified as above, be furnished the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for publication.

W. V. TUDOR, Chairman.
J. L. DUNNICA, Sec.

At the monthly meeting of the board of stewards of the Dryades Street German church, April 9, the following was unanimously adopted:

WHEREAS, It has pleased almighty God to call our beloved brother, Dr. B. H. Moss, to the mansions of glory; therefore,

Resolved, That we hold in grateful remembrance his indefatigable Christian philanthropy in rendering professional aid to the sick in the families of our preachers, and the poor among us, without pecuniary remuneration.

Resolved, That we express our sincere sympathy with his bereaved widow, Mrs. Dr. B. H. Moss, and children.

Resolved, That the above be published in the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE and the Familien-freund, and that copies of the same be forwarded to Mrs. Dr. Moss.

BISHOP DOGGETT, says the Richmond Christian Advocate of April 17, has left the city for a three months' tour of episcopal work in the Conferences under his charge in the Southwest. He was in good health, and will attend a large number of District Conferences, as well as the annual meeting of the Bishops at Nashville, before he returns.

THE board of trust of the Vanderbilt University meets in Nashville on Wednesday, May 7.

Books and Periodicals.

JERUSALEM, ANCIENT AND MODERN. By Rev. J. P. Warren, D. D. Boston: Estes & Lauriat; Elliot, Blakeslie & Noyes.

A complete and compact history, description and illustration of the Holy City, including the topography, present condition of the city and surroundings, the principal points of interest of both the ancient and modern city, the recent explorations and excavations, and a full description of the temple. It is, in fact, an epitome of reliable information on the subject gathered from many valuable books, not accessible to general readers. For sale by Gresham, New Orleans.

A CRITICAL AND EXEGETICAL COMMENTARY ON THE BOOK OF GENESIS. With a new translation. By James G. Murphy, LL. D., T. C. D. Boston: Estes & Laurint, 1873.

This work deservedly occupies a place in the first rank of recent commentaries. Prof. Murphy is an acute critic, a man of great breadth of view, and abundantly endowed with common sense. His translation and notes are exceedingly valuable. The notes are written in a simple and lucid style, and are calculated to arrest and keep the reader's attention. For sale by Gresham, New Orleans.

QUEENS. By E. B. Emery. Boston: Estes & Lauriat.

The title of the book and of the twenty-one chapters which make it up are all rather taking, and the style has some liveliness and force. It seems to be a story of New England life and society, goodish, moral, somewhat religious. Our readers, if they are so minded, can find out what it is about for themselves. We have not time, and it is not likely that they have. For sale by Gresham, New Orleans.

FOURTEEN WEEKS IN HUMAN PHYSIOLOGY. By J. Dorman Steele, A. M. A. S. Barnes & Co., New York and Chicago, 1873. Price, $1.50 sent by mail.

The author's fourteen weeks' series in philosophy, chemistry, geology, astronomy, etc., is well known and very popular. The present volume is of equal merit with its predecessors, and is a valuable compendium, suited for schools and for general readers. The plates and illustrations are well executed.

WOMAN IN AMERICAN SOCIETY. By Alba Goold Woolson. Boston: Roberts Bros., 1873.

Rather hard on the ladies is the author, but she writes vigorously and truthfully too, so far as we have sampled her pages. John G. Whittier indorses and commends the work, whatever that may be in its favor. For sale by Kain & Co., New Orleans.

WE HAVE RECEIVED the last published Minutes of the North Carolina Conference. The Sanitarian is an excellent monthly journal, just started. A. N. Bell, M. D., editor. Published by A. S. Barnes & Co., New York and Chicago. We have received the first number, and find it replete with entertaining and useful matter. The American Agriculturist for April is a good number of this always valuable publication. The Gardeners' Monthly is an excellent periodical for gardeners and fruit-growers. Published at Philadelphia, at $2 per annum.

HALF-HOUR RECREATIONS IN POPULAR SCIENCE. Nos. 6 and 7 are on peculiarly interesting subjects. No. 6 is on "Unconscious Action of the Brain," by Dr. W. B. Carpenter, F. R. S. No. 7 is on the "Geology of the Stars," by Prof. A. Winchell. Published by Estes & Lauriat, Boston. Twenty-five cents per number.

WE HAVE RECEIVED the Journal of the Second Annual Conference of the Board of Indian Commissioners. The Twenty-third Annual Report of the Southwestern Bible Society is a pamphlet containing much useful information, and, along with other good things, Dr. Taylor's very entertaining address. The Rural Alabamian for April has been received.

Sunday School Incident in Felicity Street Church.

MR. EDITOR: On the first Sabbath of this month an incident occurred, quite out of the ordinary way, connected with this school. It was of a deeply interesting character to a reflecting mind. Circumstances of a like nature hardly occur in a generation. Simple as they were, they had a weighty bearing upon the past, present and future welfare of the church of Christ. The president, Mr. Foster, had received some money from the Rev. C. Brewer, to be appropriated for the benefit of the school, which had already made him a life member from the interest he had before taken. Mr. Foster proposed to the teachers and scholars, on the reception of the money, to make Dr. Lovick Pierce, of Georgia, a life member, which was highly approved. The giver is in his eighty-seventh year, and Dr. Pierce in his eighty-ninth, and although they were not personally acquainted, yet their ages were in close affinity. Such venerable characters, whose hearts and purposes were united in one cause, and in possession of all their mental faculties, are worthy of observation as early pioneers of the Methodist Church.

Dr. Pierce, we learn, is performing all his ministerial duties as in younger years, and entering with the deepest interest into all the missionary enterprises of the present day to enlighten and evangelize the world. Age is beautiful under such circumstances, and a halo of glory encircles the time-worn brow.

Rev. C. Brewer, my brother, in feeble health stands upon the vestibule of the invisible world, looking by faith into the inward sanctuary, where the glorious Shekinah overshadows the ark of the new covenant of love and mercy, waiting with patience to be called up higher. He has drank deep of the cup of affliction, following all his children to the grave but one, who is now his supporting staff in old age. Early in the winter the companion of his joys and sorrows was taken from his side. His eye kindles with rapture when he spenks of meeting those who have gone before him, and entered into the rest which remains for the people of God. How few of the youth of this Sunday school will ever reach the venerable years of those first mentioned. Now is the time for them to form characters for vast eternity; to be useful on earth, and happy in the world to come; to shine as suns of the first magnitude in the canopy above.

Youth! how beautiful it is!
How full of joy, how full of bliss,
When life divine is given;
And they who higher life pursue,
Keeping the Savior's cross in view,
With moral principles most true,
Will have a home in heaven.

To the Friends of Bible Distribution.

We commend the following communication from the general agent of the Southwestern Bible Society to the careful notice of our readers. The cause of Bible distribution is most noble and benevolent, and all should contribute to it.

The Southwestern Bible Society has during the past few years sent forth large quantities of Bibles and Testaments for distribution, by sale and grant, in and around the principal centers of population in their field, which embraces the State of Louisiana and the southern half of the State of Mississippi. In this way, through the efforts of collecting and distributing agents and auxiliary societies, a great destitution, especially of the cheaper copies of the Scriptures, has been supplied.

A greater and more important work remains to be done—that of supplying the destitutions which still exist among the remote frontier and secluded habitations of the land. Thousands of families, residing at greater or less distances from thoroughfares, still have no convenient opportunity of obtaining copies of the Scriptures. These families, including children, are generally deprived of the visits, services and instructions of ministers of the gospel. Their condition of remoteness from convenient places of worship, and often of poverty, excites in the highly-favored Christian's heart the deepest sympathy. The question is asked: "How can one hear without a preacher?" A similar question demands an answer, frequently to our reproach: "How can they read the word of God unless it be placed in their hands?"

Inasmuch as it is the ordering of God's providence that human instrumentality shall be employed to carry on his own work of human redemption, there remains to the Christian the ever-pressing inquiry: "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?"

The work of Bible distribution is undoubtedly, next to the preaching of the gospel, the great instrumentality to enlighten and save—both having God's blessing promised to their use. Conjecture fails to picture the loss which may be sustained by our needy and irreligious population in consequence of our neglect; but we know that without the teachings of the word of God there is, there can be no hope of salvation to their souls. As mere citizens, too, of a common country, we know that the instructions of the Scriptures are the best guides to honesty, thrift and social contentment—elements, all these, of individual and general prosperity. In which ever way we view the question of the blessing which attends the dissemination of the words of divine truth, the obligation to benefit our fellow-men, temporally and spiritually, is paramount and binding.

The Southwestern Bible Society is about to engage in a persevering plan of reaching our destitute population by means of colportage, in order that every family and individual in its field, now destitute of a Bible or Testament, may be supplied. The work involves considerable expenditure of money; but the outlay will, by God's blessing, guarantee a rich reward. Your agency in conveying the glad tidings of salvation to the needy and perishing—its consolations to poor and humble Christians living now in solitary neglect, all of whom may be easily reached—will find, we trust, a cheerful manifestation in contributions to the cause now urgently presented. Giving does not impoverish, but withholding may prove disastrous. We ask your help.

Yours very truly,
J. E. C. DOREMUS,
General Agent S. W. B. S.

TO SPEAK and act truth with constancy and precision is nearly as difficult, and perhaps as meritorious, as to speak it under intimidation or penalty; and it is a strange thought how many men there are, as I trust, who would hold it at the cost of fortune or life for one who could hold it at the cost of a little daily trouble.—Ruskin.

WE LEARN through a private business note from the pastor, Rev. Dr. B. J. Baldwin, that a meeting of great interest has been in progress at Opelousas, Louisiana, for several weeks past.

SWIFT'S maxim in conversation was: Take as many half minutes as you can get, but never take more than half a minute without pausing and giving others an opportunity to strike in.

HYPOCRISY is folly. It is much easier, safer and pleasanter to be the thing which a man aims to appear, than to keep up the appearance of being what he is not.

WE CALL ATTENTION to the seventh annual statement of the Commercial Insurance Company of New Orleans, which appears in another column.

WE TAKE PLEASURE in calling attention to the card, in this issue, of the great dry goods house of D. H. Holmes, No. 155 Canal and 15 Bourbon street.

HARDWARE.—Our readers will do well to notice the advertisement of A. Roussel, hardware dealer, No. 17 Old Levee street, opposite custom house.

SEPTOLINE OIL COMPANY, No. 62 Camp and 15 Dauphine street, dealers in lamps, trimmings, oils, etc.

NAVRA & OFFNER, No. 174 Canal street, direct importation of China and crockery-ware.

BUSINESS NOTICES.

DR. TUTT'S LIVER PILLS.—They act as kindly on the tender infant, the most delicate female and infirm old age as upon the most vigorous system, eradicating every morbific agent, invigorating the debilitated organs, banishing to the raging pervous sufferer, imparting vigor to body and mind.

WORSE THAN BANKRUPTCY.—A constitution broken down by disease. If it is the result of fast living, the excessive use of whisky, the injudicious use of mercury, exposure in miasmatic regions, sedentary habits, self-abuse or scrofulous taint, a few bottles of Dr. Tutt's Sarsaparilla and Queen's Delight will restore you to health—more desired than gold.

A deadly enemy is Dr. Tutt's Sarsaparilla and Queen's Delight to Fevers, Pimples, Tetters, Secondary Syphilis, Barbers' Itch, Salt Rheum, Glandular Swellings, Worms and Black Specks in the flesh, Ulcers in the throat, mouth and nose, Mercury, Lead and Arsenic. BY ALICE CAREY.

A hut of logs without a door,
Minus a roof, and ditto floor;
A cupboard, every shelf of which
Nine children without shoes or frocks;
A wife (that has no tongue)
With ribbons and strands upon it,
Scolding and wishing to be dead,
Because she has not any bread.

A tea-kettle without a spout,
A meat-cask with the bottom out,
A "comfort" with the cotton gone,
And not a bed to put it on;
A handle without an ax,
A hatchet without a wood or flax;
A pot-lid and a wagon hub,
And two ears of a washing-tub.

Three broken plates of different kinds,
Some mackerel-tails and tobacco-rinds;
A table without leaves or legs,
One chair and half a dozen pegs;
One paken keg with hoops of brass,
One tumbler of dark green glass;
A fiddle without any strings,
A gun-stock and two turkey-wings.

O readers of this lay-ency,
Take warning by a graphic story,
For little any man expects,
Who wears good shirts with buttons in 'em,
Ever to put on cotton checks,
And only have brass pins to pin 'em!
'Tis, remember, little stitches
Keep the rent from growing great;
When you can't tell heels from ditches,
Warning words will be too late.

The History of a Penny.

In the mint, where pounds, shillings and pence are made, there once were a gold piece and a penny just coined. There they lay, shining and clean, close together on a table, and the bright rays of the sun danced and sparkled on them.

Then said the sovereign to the penny:

"You lump, get away from me. You are only made of common copper, and are not worthy of the sunlight that shines on you. You will soon be lying, all black and dirty, on the ground, and no one will take the trouble of picking you up. I am made of costly gold. I shall travel about in the world with great lords and princes; I shall do great things, and perhaps some day shine in the emperor's crown."

In the same room there lay by the fire an old gray cat. When he heard this he licked his paws thoughtfully, turned himself round on the other side, and said: "Some things go by the rule of contrary."

And so it proved with the pieces of money. It turned out the very contrary of what the gold piece expected.

It fell into the possession of an old miser, who locked it up in a great chest, where it lay idle and useless, with hundreds of others like itself. But when the old miser found that he should not live much longer he buried all his money in the ground, that no one might get it; and there lies the proud ducat to this day, dirty and black, and no one will ever find it.

But the penny traveled far about in the world, and came to high honor. And this is how it happened:

First one of the poor boys at the mint received it in his wages. He carried it home, and, as his little sister was so delighted with the clean, shining penny, he gave it to her.

The child ran out into the garden to show it to her mother, and saw a poor lame beggar passing by, who begged for a bit of bread.

"I have not got any," said the child.

"Then give me a penny to buy some," said the beggar, and the child gave him her new penny.

The beggar limped off to the baker's. Just as he came to the shop an old friend of his passed by, dressed as a pilgrim, with mantle, staff and scrip. He gave to some children, who were standing round the baker's door, pictures of good and holy men; and the children, in return, put some money into the little box he had in his hand.

The beggar asked: "Where are you traveling to?"

The pilgrim answered: "Many hundred miles away to the city of Jerusalem, where the holy Christ dwelt and died. I wish to offer up my prayers at his grave, and redeem my brother, who is a prisoner in the hands of the Turks. It is for this purpose that I beg for money."

"Then take a mite toward it from me," said the beggar, and he gave his penny to the pilgrim, and would have gone away as hungry as he came had not the baker—who saw all that had passed—given him the loaf which he had wished to buy.

And now the pilgrim wandered through many lands, and went in a ship far over the sea to the holy city of Jerusalem. When he arrived there he first offered up his prayers at the sepulcher of the holy Christ, and then went to the Turkish sultan, who kept his brother a prisoner. He offered the Turk a large sum of money if he would set his brother free. But the sultan wanted more.

The pilgrim said: "I have nothing more to offer you but this copper penny, which was given to me by a poor, hungry beggar out of compassion. May you also have pity as he had, and this copper penny will secure you a reward."

Then the sultan took compassion on him and set his brother free, and he received the penny from the pilgrim.

The sultan put the copper penny in his pocket, and after a little while forgot all about it. Now it happened that after a time the emperor of Germany came to Jerusalem to fight against the sultan. So the sultan fought bravely at the head of his army, and was never wounded; but one day an arrow was aimed right at his breast; it struck him, indeed, but glanced off from his clothes without wounding him. The sultan was very much surprised, and when his clothes were examined, after the battle, the penny was found in the pocket, and this had caused the arrow to glance off. So the sultan prized the penny very much, and had it fastened with a golden chain to the hilt of his curved sword. Some time afterward the sultan was made prisoner by the emperor, and had to yield up his sword to his conqueror. So the penny came into the possession of the emperor.

One day when the emperor was sitting at the table, and was just in the act of raising his goblet to his lips, the empress said she was very anxious to see the curved Turkish sword. So it was brought in, and, as the emperor was showing it to the empress, the penny became unfastened, and fell into the goblet of wine. The emperor saw it, and before drinking the wife he took out the penny. But when he looked at it he perceived that the penny had turned quite green. This showed everybody that there was poison in the goblet. A wicked servant had mixed the poison, hoping to kill the emperor. The servant was ordered to execution, but the penny was set in the emperor's crown.

So this penny made a child happy, gave bread to a beggar, delivered a prisoner, saved a sultan from being wounded, and preserved the life of an emperor. It deserved to be set in an emperor's crown. Perhaps it is there to this day. If we could only see the crown.—Christian Weekly.

The Book in the Cradle.

In 1835 the Bible Society's agent at Brussels found that Bibles in Holland were very scarce indeed. He was shown a Bible which ten or twelve persons in the village had subscribed for together, and had sent one of their number into Holland to buy it, where it cost forty-two francs.

The following history is given of a solitary Bible in another village:

"At the time now referred to there was but one Bible in the whole village, for Bibles were not then to be had in the country, and any person who wanted one was obliged to go into Holland to buy it, where Bibles were excessively dear. The Bible excited the rage of the Catholic priests; for it was known to them that it existed, but they could never find it, and many a search was made for it throughout the whole village. The persons to whom it belonged used to hide it away by day, and by night go into the woods with it, and there hang a lantern up to a tree, and read it. At other times they would agree to meet in some old burrow or other secret place for the same purpose. They sang also the Psalms of David to song-tunes, so as not to attract those who might overhear them at any time.

One day, when the men were absent at their work, and the women had gone to the next market town, the priests, who were always on the watch to see when the house was left without any one but the child or some young person, came to the spot, accompanied by the police. They made a regular search, but, like all others up to that moment, in vain; and the priests and police turned to go to their houses; but on the way back one of the policemen said: "I am sure, if we go back, we shall find the Bible." The least possibility of success was enough to rouse the less zealous of them, and they hastened back; for the reasons the policeman gave were so excellent that no one objected. He said: "I observed that in that house the child was in the cradle, and, whether it was asleep or awake, the girl sitting by it continually rocked it."

Arrived at the house, they went direct to the cradle, took up the child, turned out the cradle and found the Bible. The little girl who watched the cradle was only ten years old, and when she saw them approach the cradle she burst into tears. They rejoiced over their success, and walked away in triumph.

The poor men, on their way homeward from their work in the evening, learned the painful news; and so greatly were they afflicted that they all of them could not help crying; and they said that they would rather that they heard that their houses and all their goods were burned to the ground than that their Bible should have been taken from them. They tried to get it again; but this was impossible. The men had left the little girl in charge of their greatest treasure, with strict orders that, if any one entered, she was not to leave the cradle, but constantly to rock it; which had, up to this unfortunate day, succeeded in deceiving the enemy. They used to put the Bible in the bottom of the cradle, on the hook a piece of wood suited to the cradle, and then on the wood the straw and whatever the child lay on.

How happy the change now, when, instead of one Bible for a whole village, and that in danger of being violently abstracted, the Bible has become accessible to every village, and that, too, at less than a tenth part of the price once paid for it!—Young Reaper.

CARING FOR SPARROWS.—A little girl, seeing the servant throw the crumbs into the fire, said: "Don't you know that God takes care of the sparrows?"

"If God takes care of them," was the careless reply; "we need not trouble ourselves about them."

"But," said the little girl, "I had rather be like God, and help him take care of the little birds, than scatter or waste the food that he gives us."

So she carefully collected what was left of the crumbs and threw them out of the window. In a short time several little birds flew eagerly to the spot, and picked up the crumbs she had scattered. After this she every day collected, in a little basket, the crumbs and bits of bread that had fallen around the table, and threw them under the window for the little birds; and during all the winter these little creatures came regularly after each meal to partake of the food thus provided for their support. How beautiful it was to see this little girl trying "to help God," as she said, and thus early learning to be kind to the helpless of God's creatures!—Well-Spring.

ROBBIE'S NOTION.—Little Robbie went to a show, and saw an elephant for the first time in his life. When he came home his mother asked him what he had seen. Robbie replied: "An elephant, mamma, that gobbled hay with his front tail."

Will Ramie-Culture Pay?

A Texas friend, in a private letter to us, requests information in reference to the probability of ramie-culture becoming a profitable branch of industry in these States. He says the plants are very successfully grown in his State, and desires to know what progress has been made toward the perfection of a machine for preparing the fiber for market.

As we have heretofore remarked, the great obstacle in the way of successful ramie-culture is the want of a machine calculated to clean the fiber economically. The genius of the country is certainly equal to the task; but the necessity of the thing has not yet been so impressive as to bring that genius into play, and we seem to be as far from success in this regard as when the ramie-plant was first introduced, some six years ago. There have been frequent attempts to accomplish the desired end, and not a few announcements of success have been proclaimed, but we are still without a machine that will prepare the fiber for market with such efficiency and cheapness as will justify the production of ramie as an agricultural industry.

There is no difficulty in growing the plants. In fact, wherever we have seen its culture tried it grows with the rapidity and luxuriance of noxious weeds. It is free from injurious attacks of insects, its propagation is easy and rapid, and its culture simple, while the annual yield of fiber per acre is enormous. But until a machine is perfected for preparing it for market more economically than has yet been accomplished we cannot commend its culture.—Rural Southland.

CHESTNUT-TREES FROM SEED.—There is no difficulty whatever in raising chestnut-trees from the seed, provided the nuts have been suffered to neither mildew nor to become too dry. Planted in February, in well-prepared soil, they vegetate about as readily as corn, and will make a growth of from three to six feet the first season. An exchange thus speaks of the chestnut as a timber-tree:

"The chestnut is valuable both for timber and its fruit. It is well adapted to rough, unfillable land, and there are tens of thousands of acres now producing little which ought to be devoted to chestnut or some other timber. When a tree is cut a half dozen or more good trees from sprouts will take its place, and the growth is very rapid. There is but one objection to the chestnut as a shade-tree, which is the litter made from blossoms and burs, and the disagreeable character of the latter. But prompt attention in cleaning up the rubbish will largely obviate this difficulty."

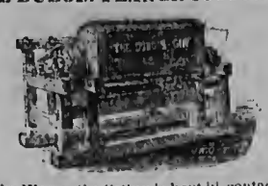
OLD PLASTER.—A correspondent of the Maine Farmer speaks of a man who had some old plaster which he had removed from the walls of his house, and pounded as fine as he could, then sifted it and sowed it on his rye-field. The result was a very large crop of grain, and the next year a heavy growth of grass. His argument was that the plastering on the walls of dwellings absorbed the gases and steam which were given off from the kitchen, sleeping-rooms, etc., and that it thus acquired fertilizing properties of great value, in addition to whatever benefit might accrue from the lime, hair, etc., of which it was composed. He also alluded to the statement that in China people would put on new plastering for the old which they took off, so highly was old plastering prized [illegible] for agricultural purposes.

"ORIENTATION" OF FRUIT-TREES. It has been suggested more than once that in setting out fruit-trees they should be placed in the same position with reference to the points of the compass as before transplanting. The same idea is brought out in a recent article in Les Mondes, where the neglect of this precaution is given as explaining why some trees are weak, contorted and stunted. They become so, as the writer believes, in the effort to recover their original "orientation." The theory is certainly a plausible one, and it is well for those who are setting out trees to make a note of it.—Rural Sun.

ASPARAGUS.—Plow and harrow the ground well, and then plow out as deep furrows as possible by running the plow both ways, furrows three feet apart. Set the plants in these one foot to fifteen inches apart and cover with an inch or two of soil, and then throw on a liberal lot of manure, after which fill up the furrow with soil.

Every family in the land should have a bed of this delicious esculent, while for marketing nothing is paying better, especially within a reasonable distance of the large cities.—Farm Recorder.

BUN LOAF.—Four pounds of flour and a spoonful of salt put into a bread-pan; rub in half a pound of dripping and one pound of stoned raisins and dried currants; beat four eggs, add them to a cupful of yeast and a pint of warm milk. Stir all well together, cover and set before the fire for one hour. Knead well and put in buttered bread-tins. Let it rise before the fire for half an hour and then bake.



SWEET PICKLES, by some considered superior to the old-fashioned applesauce, are made by partly baking sweet apples and then saturating them in a pickle of vinegar, sugar and spices. This is easier to make than applesauce, which must be smothered in boiled cider, and is full as healthful as the purple cucumber.

HOW TO MAKE A FILTER.—Place on the perforated bottom of a box a piece of flannel, and on this some coarsely-powdered charcoal, then some coarse river-sand, and cover the whole with sandstone broken in pieces.

SOME WOMEN have no memory. When they want to remember a thing they should write it down and stick it on a looking-glass.

MACHINERY, TIES, ETC.

THE DUBOIS FLANGE COTTON GIN.

By the Flange the Cotton is kept in contact with the teeth on each side, until the fiber is taken from the seed, without allowing them to be taken up by the return motion of the roll, as in other Gins.

The Flange prevents hulls, stems, sticks and hard substances from being cut, consequently making a better sample out of roughly-picked cotton than other Gins.

We have sold more Gins from this point than any agency of any other Gin for the crop of 1872-73; consequently we can furnish more and better references, and they are warranted to come up to all that is said of them.

We keep constantly on hand all sizes, from 40 to 80-SAW STANDS, left or right. Price, $5 per Saw.

ALLEN'S LUNG BALSAM,
What the Doctors Say.
Amos Woolly, M. D., of Kosciusko county, Indiana, says: "For three years past I have used Allen's Lung Balsam extensively in my practice, and I am satisfied there is no better medicine for lung diseases in use."
Isaac A. Dornin, M. D., of Logan county, Ohio, says: "Allen's Lung Balsam not only sells rapidly, but gives perfect satisfaction in every case within my knowledge. Having confidence in it, and knowing that it possesses valuable medicinal properties, I freely use it in my daily practice, and with unbounded success. As an expectorant it is most certainly far ahead of any preparation I have ever yet known."
Physicians do not recommend a medicine which has no merit. What they say about Allen's Lung Balsam can be taken as a fact. Let all afflicted test it at once, and be convinced of its real merits.
It is harmless to the most delicate child. It contains not opium in any form.
Directions accompany each bottle.

THE GREAT HOUSEHOLD REMEDY.

AS AN INVIGORATOR, LIVER CORRECTOR
AND BLOOD RENOVATOR
Is superior to all the Bitters, Elixirs, Cordials Sarsaparillas in use.
It is so adapted to the whole system that every organ and function in the body is brought under its exhilarating influence. It gives tone and strength to the digestive apparatus, dispels languor and debility, invigorates the Liver, regulates the Kidneys and Bowels, removes the effect of excess or over-taxation of any kind, and gives vitality and richness to the blood.
Its curative powers alter and completely reorganize the entire mass of fluids, and even the solids of the human system, thereby preventing and curing Dyspeptic and Consumptive symptoms, Fever and Ague, Bilious diseases, Fevers of all kinds, Nervous Debility, Affections of the Stomach and Bowels, etc. As a mild and delightful Invigorant for delicate females it has no superior.
By its use new life and vigor is given to both body and mind, sending a glow of vitality through every part, which is PERMANENT AND LASTING.
It is the most effectual remedy for the relief of human suffering ever discovered, and is pleasant to the taste.

New Orleans Markets.

From the New Orleans Price Current.

The weather has been clear and pleasant. We noticed in our last report that a severe frost had been reported on Wednesday night as far down as Port Hudson on the Mississippi, and Sunnyhill on the Jackson railroad some distance, or within all the cotton that was up much of which is to require replanting; indicating a late instead of an early crop, as many had anticipated. The accounts received since show that this frost was quite general, and that not only the cotton that was up, but that also which had merely sprouted, has been so much injured as to require replanting. The result can hardly fail to sensibly decrease the yield.

The river is 3 feet 6 inches below high-water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the eighteenth instant:

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Louisiana and Mississippi | bales | 6,933 |
| Lake | | 244 |
| Arkansas | | 3,693 |
| Mobile | | 237 |
| Florida | | 3 |
| Texas | | 1 |
| Total | | 11,310 |

On Saturday a considerable portion of the business was in dusty cotton, which sold at prices ranging from 7⅝@13c., the bulk of the business in these kinds being at about 11c. Ordinary sold at 12c., strict ordinary at 13c., good ordinary at 14c., strict good ordinary at 16⅛@16¾c., and strict good ordinary to low middling at 17½c. The sales embraced 11,000 bales. On Monday the movement was animated—6,500 bales changed hands at firmer prices for most descriptions, without any quotable improvement, except in strict ordinary and strict good ordinary, which ruled more in favor of factors. Under the demand for strict both ordinary and good ordinary exhibited a still wider range, ordinary ruling at 12½@13c. and strict at 13⅝@14c., and good ordinary at 15⅝@16c. for average lots and 16¼@16c. for strict. On Tuesday the market opened with a fair inquiry, but only a moderate business was done during the morning, after which the movement became more animated, and resulted in sales at 4,300 bales, at steady prices, with the exception of strict good ordinary, which, being in less active request, would not command the extreme rates realized on Monday.

The above makes an aggregate for the past three days of 15,200 bales, against 11,000 for the corresponding time last week and 11,450 the week before.

The receipts proper at this port since the first of September, exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas, are 1,076,222 bales, against 901,-965 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 631,256 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 151,056 to Great Britain, of 81,611 to France, and of 131,236 to other foreign ports. We quote:

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Inferior | 9 | @ 10 |
| Low ordinary | 10⅝ | @ 11⅝ |
| Ordinary | 12⅞ | @ 14 |
| Good ordinary | 15⅞ | @ 16⅞ |
| Low middling | 15⅞ | @ 18⅛ |
| Middling | 18⅞ | @ — |
| Strict middling | 19 | @ 19¼ |
| Good middling | 20⅛ | @ 20¼ |

CORN.—On Tuesday 8,500 sacks sold at 50@52c. for mixed, 58c. for white in burlaps, and 60c. for white.

OATS.—On Saturday 500 sacks sold at 42½@43c. ₱ bushel for choice white. On Monday the sales comprised 1,800 sacks at 42c. ₱ bushel. On Tuesday 3,300 sacks sold at 42c. ₱ bushel.

BRAN.—On Saturday 2,500 sacks sold at 67½@72½c. ₱ 100 lbs., while on Monday the sales comprised 1,500 sacks at 75@80c. ₱ 100 lbs. On Tuesday 1,500 sacks sold at 75@80c. ₱ 100 lbs.

PORK.—On Tuesday the market was excited under the influence of Western advices, and round lots of mess were held at the advanced price of $18.75 ₱ bbl., with offers of $18.50 refused. 35 bbls. prime pork sold in two lots, at $11@14.75 ₱ bbl. It is retailing at $14.75 ₱ bbl.

BACON.—On Tuesday the demand was active, and the sales embraced 440 casks at 8½@8¾c. for shoulders, 10¾c. for clear rib sides, and 10¾@10¾c. ₱ lb. for clear sides. Clear sides were held at 10¾c. ₱ lb.

MONETARY.

Gold opened on Tuesday at 117½@117¾ (against 117¼ at New York,) and, after a moderate business, closed at 117¾@117⅞ (against 117⅝ at New York.)

The sales of silver have been confined to retail transactions. American half dollars are quoted at 110@111. Mexican dollars are entirely nominal, and for the present we omit quotations.

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

BROWNSVILLE, TEXAS, April 23.—The Secretary of War, General Belknap, General Sheridan and party left Ringgold barracks, one hundred and twenty miles above here, for this place yesterday morning, and are expected here to-morrow evening. The City Council have tendered the freedom of the city to them, and have appointed a committee to meet and escort them into town. Preparations are being made to extend a hearty welcome to these distinguished persons by our people generally, without distinction of party.

NEW YORK, April 25.—The Herald's Vienna special, dated to-day, says: "Twenty cases of sporadic cholera were brought to the hospital yesterday, five of which proved fatal. An effort is being made to conceal the appearance of the disease in the city."

The World's London special says the gravest apprehensions prevail, in the highest circles of Paris, of immediate civil war. The Monarchists are determined to oust Thiers at any cost.

A cannon weighing one thousand nine hundred and fifty pounds has arrived here from Berlin, as a present from the emperor to the Lutheran church of Titusville, Pennsylvania. The cannon was captured at Sedan, and will be cast into a bell for the church.

COLUMBIA, S. C., April 26.—Heavy frost and ice this morning. The young cotton and vegetables are killed in this vicinity. Cold weather is reported in the up-country.

GOLDSBORO, N. C., April 26.—There was frost last night throughout the State, which damaged the crops and fruits generally. It is feared the cotton planted is entirely ruined.

SAN FRANCISCO, April 27.—Indians appeared in the Lewis river settlements with war-paint. A general outbreak in eastern Oregon is feared. Settlers are asking for arms.

BATON ROUGE, April 27.—A detachment of one hundred and twenty-five metropolitan police, under command of Colonel Flanagan, armed with Winchester rifles and one piece of artillery, arrived here from New Orleans last evening, and left early this morning for Port Vincent, Livingston parish, for the purpose of installing appointees of Kellogg. They were met at Harrall's Ferry, on the Amite river, at noon to-day, by a committee of three persons, representing the Port Vincent party, and it is presumed that matters will be adjusted without bloodshed. Nothing definite received up to this hour.

CHARLESTON, April 27.—Advices from the neighboring coast section report disastrous results to the crops from killing frosts of yesterday morning. Much of the cotton will have to be replanted and the injury to early vegetables is irreparable. No frost ever known to be so late has occurred in this region for fifty years.

SAN FRANCISCO, April 28.—A special courier arrived at Yreka late last night from the lava beds. The opinion prevailed at headquarters that the Modocs will not make another stand, but break up in small parties.

If so they must be hunted in detail, making it an all-summer work for the cavalry.

FRANKLIN, LA., April 28.—Henry Trahn, the usurping judge of the third judicial district, reopened court here this morning after an adjournment of two weeks. The Franklin bar again refused to appear to practice before him.

WASHINGTON, April 29.—The Supreme Court, in the case of the collision between the schooner Champion and the steamer Lucille, confirms the judgment that the steamer is responsible for all the damages. A sailing vessel must keep on her course; a steamer must avoid her.

Governor W. L. Sharkey, of Mississippi, died this morning, at the Imperial Hotel, of pneumonia, aged eighty-three years.

SAN FRANCISCO, April 29.—A courier from Yreka reports that a battle has just taken place, in which nineteen Federal soldiers were killed, including Captain Thomas and Lieutenants Howe and Wright, and twenty-three wounded, including Lieutenant Harris. Others are missing.

LAVA BEDS, April 29.—A reconnoitering party of artillery and infantry proceeded in the direction of the present Modoc stronghold. Captain Thomas, commanding a dozen Warm Spring Indians, expected a company to operate on reaching the bluff. The Modoc fire drove the troops to shelter. As usual, the foe was unseen. The Indians delivered a cross and incessant fire. Two of the Federal wounded reached camp, when four companies were sent to their rescue. They carried stretchers for the wounded, but could not reach them.

Colonel Green reports that the surprise was complete and terrible.

Lieutenant Cranston, of the Fourth Artillery, is missing.

The wounded and killed have been collected, and are waiting conveyance to camp. Sixteen killed, including Captain Thomas, Lieutenant Howe, Lieutenant Wright, and eight additional wounded. The Modocs had Spencer and breech-loading rifles. Some are known to have two or more rifles. The Indians numbered twenty-one when the soldiers took refuge in the hollow, every egress from which the Indians commanded. The soldiers could not show head or hand without certainly being wounded. Very few escaped. The rest were either killed or wounded. The number wounded of the Modocs is unknown. Captain McKay reports his Warm Spring Indians took three scalps.

FOREIGN.

CITY OF MEXICO, April 13.—The Juarist and Portirist parties propose to unite on the nomination of Palacios for president of the Congress.

Iglesias' prospects for the office of supreme judge are better than those of the other candidates.

The proposal to prolong the term of the United States and Mexican mixed commission has not yet been ratified by Congress.

The railway question will be decided this month.

BERLIN, April 23.—The Japanese embassadors have just returned from St. Petersburg. They had a lengthy conference with an eminent German professor of jurisprudence regarding the propriety of endeavoring to establish Christianity in the state religion of Japan.

The professor earnestly dissuaded them from the project. The embassadors had already come to regard the change as probable and favorable. They listened eagerly to the reasons of the professor, who adduced facts from the history of Christendom to show that this religion cannot be enforced by governments.

He said it was only vital when it grows among the people and from the people. He counseled the granting of full religious liberty as the most desirable course to pursue. Embassadors expressed satisfaction with the advice.

LONDON, April 23.—The cable tolls have been increased to $1.50 gold per word, commencing May 1; cause, failure of the French cable.

Weather favorable to crops.

LONDON, April 25.—Owing to the troubled condition of Spain, a great number of families are leaving that country. The steamers arriving here and at the French ports are crowded with refugees.

MADRID, April 26.—The Official Gazette announces that Don Alfonso, brother of Don Carlos, accompanied by his staff, crossed into France from Spain on Wednesday last.

The Carlists have been defeated several times lately in encounters with the republican forces. In one engagement over a hundred of the insurrectionists were wounded.

THE HAGUE, April 26.—The government of Holland has ordered fourteen steam naval vessels to proceed immediately to Sumatra for the purpose of co-operating with the Dutch troops now on that island, in the movement against the Atcheneese. The vessels will carry a large quantity of ammunition and arms for the troops.

ST. PETERSBURG, April 27.—The German emperor arrived in this city to-day, and was received with extraordinary honors. He was met at Gatschina, thirty miles hence, by the Czar and the grand dukes, who accompanied him to the city.

The two emperors made their way in the presence of immense crowds of people, who manifested great enthusiasm. Emperor William the First reviewed the regiment of which he has been made honorary colonel, and was then conducted to Winter Palace, where he was formally received by the court with the most imposing ceremonies.

The Czar presented to him his portrait and a sword of honor, the cross of St. George, the iron cross for merit, with the additional inscription for valor, and an inkstand and vases in lapis lazuli.

LISBON, April 28.—A club has been formed in this city, having for its object a union of the Portuguese republicans.

MADRID, April 28.—A band of five hundred Carlists entered Capaledez, thirty miles northwest of Barcelona, and demanded a contribution, but fled at the approach of the troops.

ROME, April 28.—The Pope passed a restless night. Anxiety regarding his condition is renewed.

PARIS, April 28—The total result of the voting in Paris and other parts of France yesterday, to fill vacancies in the Assembly, was the election of three radicals, four republicans and one legitimist.

TORONTO, April 28.—Fort Garry (Manitoba) dispatches report heavy firing between the Americans and the Blackfeet Indians; a large number of Americans were killed. There is trouble in the Blackfeet country in consequence. Eight thousand Indians have crossed the line, and threaten the interior settlements and Manitoba.

PARIS, April 29.—M. Thiers was greatly discouraged by the Count de Remusat's defeat. When the result of the election was announced he remained alone for an hour.

The Bonapartist journals declare that the conservative republic is dead.

A white frost has destroyed the vines in the vicinity of Lyons. A similar disaster occurred in 1812.

ONE of our presbyteries, says the Interior, passed a resolution that as fast as possible Sabbath school libraries should be abolished within their bounds. This seems a radical measure, but can any one suggest a better way of getting rid of the frothy, trashy novels which are flooding our Sabbath schools and ruining the taste and capacity of our children for solid and wholesome intellectual and moral food? The appetite created by them will find satiety in Marryatt, Bulwer, Cooper and the perfect deluge of paper-covered trash and flash newspapers which pours from swift printing-presses.

An Extraordinary Spectacle.

Early in October, 1872, a cable dispatch from Paris appeared in all the dailies, announcing that fifty thousand pilgrims were then journeying through France toward Lourdes. Their object was to assemble at the grotto of Massabielle to pray for the salvation and regeneration of France, so lately desolated by war. A large proportion of the pilgrims came from Paris, where their journey had been inaugurated by services at Notre Dame des Victoires. Indeed it may be said that their entire journey was one long religious service, for litanies were chanted unceasingly upon the route. The grand service at the grotto took place October 6, when five bishops conducted mass and vespers at five altars reared among the rocks; and other services were conducted at numerous chapels and shrines among the mountains for miles around by various pilgrim priests. A sermon was delivered to the great host by the Bishop of Tarbes, the subject being the disasters of the nation. He closed by exhorting them to patriotism. Raising his arms to the multitude, he asked: "Will you promise to serve and love your country as I mean?"

"Yes! yes! yes!" answered the vast host in thunderous response.

"Will you cry 'Vive la France' as children should who have been nurtured from the breast of a cherishing mother?"

"Vive la France!" resounded from rock and valley.

Then turning toward the statue of the Virgin, the bishop cried: "Vive the church, the Rock of Ages!" Again the mighty voice of the crowd responded, and with the final cry of "Vive the holy father, Pius the Ninth!" the assemblage broke up.

Probably there were no scenes incidental to the pilgrimage more imposing than its processions, formed in the public square of Lourdes. One of them was a mile long, and the van had entered the meadow before the rear had left the square. It was composed of people of all classes, who sang hymns as with one mighty voice. It bore banners of violet, green, rose, blue and other colors, magnificently decorated with gilding, paintings and embroidery. These banners numbered nearly three hundred, and came from various parts of the country. Even far-off Algeria was represented. The banner of Alsace and Lorraine was in mourning, and was borne by girls in white. As it passed many persons pressed forward to kiss its hanging tassels. The banner from Nantes was so profusely embellished with gold and other decorations that six strong men labored to support it; and those from Paris, Bordeaux, Rheims, Lille, etc., were not greatly inferior to it in elegance. The sun shone brightly, and with the grandeur of the banners and the pomp of the prelates in their rich sacerdotal robes formed a scene of indescribable splendor.

At the farther end of the meadow or valley an altar had been erected. Here the banners drew up in a vast semicircle inclosing the great audience, and vespers were sung, after which the fifty thousand worshipers knelt and received the benediction, which was pronounced by eight bishops simultaneously. The services before the altar being thus concluded, the bearers of the banners again formed in procession for the purpose of carrying them to the church upon the rock, in which they were to be placed. At this time the sun was sinking behind the blue Pyrenean peaks, and as it threw its last red gleams upon the splendid train that wound in and out along the craggy mountain-path it lighted up a picture of resplendent glory. As fast as the banners arrived at the church they were placed upon its walls, which were soon completely covered with their gorgeous hangings. Owing to the length of the procession it was after sunset when the last banner had been placed in the church, which, with its brilliant adornments flashing in the blaze of wax tapers, was one grand glow of glittering splendor. After a brief service of thanksgiving the congregation withdrew, and descended the mountain in the light of bonfires that burned upon numerous cliffs.

A spectacle of equal brilliancy, though less pompous, was presented by the grand torchlight procession which formed one evening in the square of Lourdes, where all were provided with candles. Thirty thousand persons were in this procession. They marched to the grotto of Massabielle and to the church upon the rock, moving slowly and singing hymns. As they moved they formed a great stream of glittering light, which rolled on and on, and up and up, across the meadow, and up the sinuous mountain-path. This impressive display lasted until midnight, when the greater number of the lights had died out and their bearers retired. But a goodly company still remained in the crypt of the church at prayer, in some instances fighting off sleep by marching up and down in companies, chanting night prayers.

Thus a nation's ardent worshipers assembled in devotion at the spot sanctified by the visions of Bernadette Soubirous. And what shall we say of her? Her professed visions cannot be set aside as impostures against the voice of thousands whose skepticism, as great as ours, has been abashed. It could not have been in the nature of this artless child, unencouraged and alone, to have been an impostor. Such would have been a role thoroughly foreign to her character. —William D. Wood, in Lippincott's Magazine.

Sandals.

We have often thought, considering how much we lose by shoes and how very little we gain, that it is a thousand pities women do not bring in sandals—not the foolish ribboned pumps of the last century, but the real Greek sandal. Without the hard and deforming shoe every muscle of the foot is in motion and visible at every step. It is quite wonderful how pretty the feet appear even when not very small. In reality we lose nearly as much by the shoe as the face loses by a mask; how much we could see by covering the hands with patent leather or lined French kid, and then expecting them to entrance the spectator. We never see a woman's foot. We only see its leathern case, which is about as much a part or an expresser of her foot as a violin case is of a fine violin; and if women only knew the fascinations of a neat, delicate foot, whose outlines have not been impaired by corns, nor whose bones by generations of deformity, no shoe would be worn again forever.

But the truth is, just as the pace of an army must be regulated by the slowest man in it, so the beauties of the community must be disguised according to the plainness of the plainest member. A deformed foot is hidden by a shoe, so all the pretty feet must be hidden in shoes. An imperfect figure is disguised by a hoop or a bustle, so all the sylphs must be huddled into hoops and bustles. And probably, if any graceful little sylph refused to be disguised, she would be called "vain," "shameless" and other pretty names.

Every artist knows that any foot that has ever worn a shoe is deformed. The great toe is bent in toward the rest of the toes, instead of being boldly parted. The other toes are crushed and shortened. How seldom in real life does one find the second toe longer than the great one, its natural length! If an artist wishes to make studies of a beautiful foot, does he choose out the smallest-footed lady of his acquaintance, and copy those "little mice" of hers? No; he goes off to the East, or to the fish-women on the shores of Italy, who have never worn a shoe. There he studies the free, practical muscles, the firm steps, the ineffably graceful movements.

What do we lose by the shoe? Form, firmness of tread, charm of appearance. And what have we gained by the shoe? Perhaps cleanliness, and a certain amount of protection for the foot against cold, wet and friction—this in the case of men, at least. Before shoes people existed well enough without them, though there were still fragile ankles and tender toes. Stockings would be as useful as shoes if the great toe were separated from the first, and the sole protected by a sole of leather, wood or any other material, which, while being in itself twice as serviceable as our "paper soles," could be padded with silk, inlaid with ivory, or colored in any way at once more beautiful and more useful. The straps might also be ornamented. Where warmth was needed the stocking, of kid, India rubber, worsted or even velvet, would be quite as warm and serviceable as ordinary ladies' boots. The only difference would lie in their shape, and the absence of corns. And what a dangerous arrow might be added to our quiver of charms!

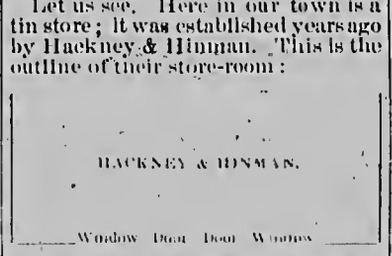
As it is our want of appreciation of the real beauty of the body, or our ignorance of how to make the best use of our materials, reconciles us to all kinds of foot diseases, and disease little behind the proverbial Chinese victim to fashion; and if our sufferings have caused the medical profession to advance with rapid strides from the leech of old, we may just hint that prevention is as good as, if not better than, cure.

There is only one kind of shoe—which we may just name, en passant—that is of a proper and sensible form. It is that wide-ending shoe worn in the time of Henry the Eighth, in whose capacious front the toes might spread and be at ease. But its ugliness will probably hinder its restitution, and nothing really equals the sandal.—M. E. Haweis, in St. Paul's Magazine.

Mission of the Northern Church in Mexico.

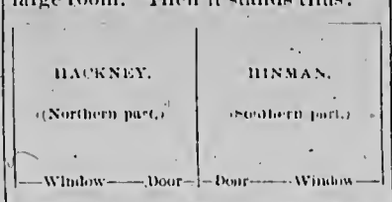
The Western Christian Advocate of the sixteenth gives the following account of Bishop Haven's measures and prospects in Mexico:

On Saturday afternoon last Bishop Haven walked unexpectedly into our office. Bishop Haven is sanguine that Dr. Butler and his coadjutors are entering a most promising field, and that, with a sufficient outlay of men and means, our church can there achieve much greater success than she has hitherto in the most successful of her missions.



It will encourage the church to know that already a firm basis has been given to our mission there, by the purchase of most desirable property, both in the City of Mexico and in Puebla. In the former city the edifice which has been secured, the cloisters of the Convent of San Francisco, is, in situation and all other respects, quite eligible.

In the report made in April, 1871, by the United States minister to the Department of State, on the "Spread of Protestantism in Mexico," we found the following allusion to this edifice: "In this city, through the efforts and personal liberality of Mr. Reilly, the Protestants have acquired two fine churches of those which were secularized and sold by the government some years since; one of these is the former Convent of San Francisco, the most magnificent as well as the first one erected in Mexico. It is now being repaired for its new use." We understand that it is the cloisters of this convent which Bishop Haven has purchased. The edifice has been roofed over, and is capable of seating two thousand persons.



The Bishop also entered into negotiations for the purchase of a church at Puebla. These were consummated after he left, and thereby our mission comes into possession of a portion of the Convent of Santo Domingo. The cost was $10,000, and, by the expenditure of $5,000 additional, the interior of the building can be so far remodeled as to furnish a commodious place of worship, a school-room and a missionary residence. These premises were formerly occupied by the Inquisition, and the places or holes are shown in one of the walls where some of its helpless victims were put, and walled in and left to die. We may thank God that a place once used for the practice of inhuman tortures will now be consecrated to teach the true religion of Jesus, which Romanism so caricatures and degrades and blasphemes.

Which is "the Old Church?"

Let us see. Here in our town is a tin store; it was established years ago by Hackney & Hinman. This is the outline of their store-room:

Now suppose they dissolve partnership, by mutual consent, and divide the stock in trade, store and all; each to continue the same business by himself. So they agree to run a partition through the middle of their large room. Then it stands thus:

Which is the "old stand?" Which is the original store? Which is the parent concern? Is not Hinman's as much as Hackney's? But suppose Hackney should claim to be the old concern exclusively—the parent establishment—and should so publish to the world? Would it not be an unfair and untrue assumption? Is not Hinman's just as fully and truly the "old stand," the original house, the parent concern, as his? Now apply it. The case of the Methodist Episcopal churches in the North and South is precisely parallel. In 1844 they divided, by mutual consent, property, members and church-buildings, and agreed upon a line between. Now is not the exclusive claim of that part of the church north of the line to be the "old church," the "parent church," the "original Methodist Episcopal Church," unfounded, unfair, unjust and untrue? Look again at the diagrams.—Charles Taylor, in Nashville Christian Advocate.

DANVILLE, KY., March 25, 1873.

From Brazil.

We are permitted, says the Richmond Christian Advocate, through the kindness of W. W. Newman, Esq., to give our readers an extract from another letter from Rev. Mr. Newman, in Brazil. Under date of February 13 he writes to his brother:

"In filling my 'appointments' I have recently seen most of our people in this section, and still we have the same bright prospects for all our crops. About seventy families who planted cotton will likely make an aggregate of $120,000 worth of cotton, with ample supplies of meat and bread; this gives an average of fourteen bales for each family, and those families will hardly average two hands per family. With ordinary seasons the same families will double this in two years more. They are getting lands cleared, and are getting command of more labor. In all our material interests we are prosperous, and in morals and religion I am persuaded we would compare well with the best sections in the United States.

"Ten days ago I was in Campinas, and spent a day and night with my good friends, Revs. Horton and Lane, missionaries of the Scotch Presbyterians. I enjoyed it very much, and I am glad I can say they are getting to work in the right way, and are having a good degree of success. We talked over the great interests of the mission work in all lands, and our hearts were warmed and cheered by mutual converse, our Christian hopes were brightened and our joys were multiplied. We are far away from our native land, but God is often very near to us, and the love of God is as precious here as in the land of our birth, and communion with those who love the Savior is sweet, and we rejoice in hope.

"'With all your toils and sufferings o'er,
What joy to meet on the other shore!
Shall it ever be part no more?'

"I am a good deal engaged in preaching and visiting, and I find my greatest pleasure in this work. We still continue to have some comfort in our meetings and some accessions to the church.

"What about that box of books? Is it ever coming? We have a church of thirty-nine members, with six or eight hymn-books and two copies of the Discipline. We would try and get an edition, revised, of the hymn-book printed here, but we are few and feeble, and book-making is very expensive here. If you can give me the address of the missionary secretary of the Wesleyan Methodists of England, I will be very glad. The editor of the Richmond Advocate, or the venerable Dr. L. M. Lee, can aid you.

"The only hope religiously for this country is by emigration and missionary work continued. If we could get a few thousands of our people to this beautiful and lovely country we could soon get missionary work started here, and it would be sustained by us. I am sometimes very much inclined to propose a union with our Presbyterian brethren in Brazil. I think such a union practicable, and we would be readily supplied with all the books and publications we need; but they are Calvinistic and we are Methodists; and yet, as our own people in America and England seem to think of China, Mexico, Africa, and of all other lands on earth except South America, as suitable for missionary work, I think we shall yet have to unite with our Presbyterian brethren who are here, and who think that the gospel is as necessary to the inhabitants of South America as the negroes in Africa, or any other of the dark-skinned races.

"I have written to two or three Methodist preachers in the South about this country and its wants, but so far have received no response from them, although they first requested letters from me."

Greetings from Fort Smith, Ark.

DEAR ADVOCATE: I herewith send you my hearty greeting once more. I willingly confess that your fair, intelligent face has become very necessary to my weekly comfort. Your first page gives me, in a condensed manner, valuable information in regard to Church and State in all parts of the world, which draws the mind out and sets it a thinking in spite of itself, and in doing that warms the sympathies and causes the eye to look with more eager interest on all passing events. The ADVOCATE is a real live newspaper. Things are transpiring now that will be looked back to, in time to come, as Ebenezers. Children yet unborn will look upon the great towering walls of Central University and tell their children of the generous gift of Vanderbilt. His body will then be resting in dreamless sleep, but his memory will live in the grateful minds of generations to come.

And when the spires of legions of Southern Methodist churches shall point to God and heaven on the mountain-crowned plains of far-off Mexico, I hear some aged sire saying, as he holds the hand of some sweet little grandchild that looks up with a wondering face and questioning eyes: "I remember, little one, the very first Methodist church that Bishop John C. Keener established in this grand old City of Mexico." Oh, is it not delightful to think of! Oh, on, with the great work is my prayer! May the Spirit of the living God give it impetus.

And then, dear ADVOCATE, besides the news and the pleasing and profitable family department, you are a real means of grace. Often have you cheered my drooping faith, urged me on earnestly and tenderly in the path of Christian duty and endurance. And I know that you have gone to many other hearts, like the angel to Elijah, as he slept beneath the juniper-bush. My earnest prayer is that the hand that furnishes your editorial department may long retain its unskilled skill, and that in the great day of accounts it may render up its five talents with the joyful exclamation: "I have gained other five talents!"

Our church in Fort Smith, Arkansas, is in the aggressive movement, spiritually and financially. Our pastor, Rev. S. H. Babcock, is, in every sense of the word, a faithful preacher of the gospel, "giving to each his portion in due season." My husband is earnestly at work in part of the vineyard, striving, by the grace of God, to do all he can for the Master's cause throughout the district, and frequently brings good news from the churches.

Oh! may we all with joy do our part of the Master's work, whether it be to go or stay, to struggle or endure, to move on or to stand guard on the outposts of the church. May the language of the faithful old soldier be ours at last: "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith." I am, dear ADVOCATE, your true friend,

ANNA P. GRANADE.

THE POPISH Catholics of the Canton of St. Gall have adopted a new style of argument against the Old Catholics. A number of young women have resolved that they will not dance with any young men who incline to the new heresy of denying the infallibility of the Pope. This must be to the young men worse than excommunication by the Pope.

A GENEROUS MAN can use sarcasm—it is the scorn felt by a true nature for what is base; but a sneer has always a vein of the ignoble in it, and a sneer at a fallen accomplice belongs to natures of the lowest grade.

FELLOW SUFFERERS.

Alas, poor tree,
Had I thy bravery,
Or could'st thou weep in concert to my sighing
Snow fall, thy leaves lie dead;
I wail, but thou dost spread
Bare arms of benediction o'er the lying.

Thou their first stay, and last—from bud to leaf:
And this thy thanks, poor tree,
That they all fell from thee.
Like summer friends when summer days are over:
Thus thou dost stand alone,
While all thy greenness gone,
For winds to rock and winter snows to cover.

Lightly the zephyr came, as lightly lifted:
But those, while first he wooed,
Forsook their real good,
Knowing thee faithful and the wind untrue.
Reproach them; they will heed;
Their graves are very near—
Close at thy roots thy prodigals abide.

Ah, not reproach, but rather dirge and prayer!
They, as they lie and die,
So low, who late were high,
Fare worse for loss of thee than thou canst fare;
The wind that whispered lied,
Kissed once, and flung aside,
And scent of death soon filled the autumn air.

Alas, poor tree!
Thy fate and mine agree;
All desolate, but we will not despair:
A thousand leaves left thee,
Accordingly hope left me—
Yet another spring may clothe our branches, cold and bare. Sunday Magazine.

The Pastor in the Sunday School.

MR. EDITOR: He who faithfully writes up the history of our country for the nineteenth century will devote some of his brightest pages to the subject of Sunday schools. God grant that the closing paragraphs in this momentous chapter may be even more joyous than the introductory sentences!

Viewing the Sunday school movement as it looms up before us in all its grandeur and promise, we "rejoice with trembling." While men slept the enemy sowed tares; while Christians were, with one consent, eulogizing the Sunday school cause, scarcely imagining that evil could be brought out of it, or coexist with it, the adversary was busy; and, before we were aware, the seeds of degeneracy were sown.

By means of the Sunday school satan would prevent the instruction of the children by the minister. The pastor has promised, it is true, to "diligently instruct the children in every place;" but "are not many of our disciplinary requirements now neglected?" "Are not good Sunday school books, periodicals and lesson papers rapidly multiplying?" "Are not the children properly and successfully taught in the Sunday school?" It is to be feared that preachers have but too often yielded to suggestions like these made by the tempter.

There is no point in the Methodist Discipline upon which greater stress is laid than the religious instruction of children by the minister. From heaven a voice is still heard uttering, in staccatoed accents, those thrilling words: "Feed my lambs!"

By means of the Sunday school satan would also prevent the instruction of the children by the parents. "Is not the Sunday school teacher better qualified to instruct the children than I am?" "Am I not oppressed with cares and toils, often away from home, the children absent at school?" "Will not my good friends, the Sunday school people, do all things well?"

But the articulate thunder of Sinai still publishes the command: "Honor thy father and thy mother." The voice of inspiration, which is the voice of God, still syllables the injunction: "Ye fathers, provoke not your children to wrath, but bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord." While divine law remains in full force and virtue, while the relation of parent and child is recognized in the Scriptures, so long will it be the bounden duty of parents to instruct their children in the science of salvation—the great redemption scheme.

Should ministers and Sunday school teachers be multiplied a thousandfold, and should they all be as faithful as Abraham, the obligation upon parents to give their children "the sincere milk of the word" would remain unimpaired.

Satan would destroy the efficiency of the Sunday school itself. He who had the fiendish effrontery to ask Christ to be his devotee does not hesitate to claim Sunday school workers as his allies. God being their helper, will they resist the devil as promptly and successfully as did their great Teacher and Exemplar?

To separate the Sunday school from the church—is not this one of the enemy's devices? Is it not his policy to divide and then destroy? He is after the lambs of the flock, and would fain get them away from the fostering care of the shepherd, that he may the more easily capture them. To this end is he not industriously endeavoring to make the Sunday school independent of the church—an organization which can move on in the absence of pastoral and church supervision with celerity and ease?

It is with diffidence that we speak of the failure of many of our preachers to occupy that position in the Sunday school to which they are assigned by the Discipline.

The pastor is made responsible for the organization of Sunday schools; and, if he is the most suitable person to establish them, it is reasonable to suppose that he is best qualified to superintend them.

The pastor is required, as we have seen, to take particular care of the children. Have not the lambs, on account of their ignorance and feebleness, an especial claim to the shepherd's care?

The Quarterly Conference not only has charge of all the Sunday school societies, but is to be deemed a board of managers, having supervision of all the Sunday schools. The pastor is a member of this body, and is with the rest an overseer of the important interest which we are now considering; yea, he is mainly to furnish the information upon which the Quarterly Conference acts—"a written report of the number and state of Sunday schools, and of the pastoral instruction of children."

The "supervision" of the Sunday school by the Quarterly Conference seems naturally to charge that conference with the duty of electing the superintendent. On this point, says the Manual of Discipline, there is no law, but analogy would teach us that the pastor should nominate, and the Quarterly Conference confirm or reject the nominations for Sunday school superintendent.

The preachers are annually appointed, and the stewards of the church annually elected, the superintendents of Sunday schools should certainly be annually chosen.

How much is devolved upon the pastor? He is to have full and personal knowledge of the condition and workings of all the Sunday schools in his charge, that he may be able to make a satisfactory report, and he is to be so well informed as to the capabilities and acceptability of the brethren that he will not be likely to make a mistake in his nomination for superintendent. He should know the wishes of scholars and teachers, and should reflect them in the Quarterly Conference whenever it can consistently be done.

The pastor is required to preach on the subject of Sunday schools in all his congregations; he is to impress upon the Sunday school teachers the importance of religiously instructing their scholars, and he is to see that a definite statistical report of all the Sunday schools in his charge be made to the Annual Conference of which he is a member.

Most of our preachers are eligible to seats in the General Conference, which legislates for the church on Sunday schools, as well as on other interests.

The pastor is required to visit the Sunday school as often as practicable, manifestly for the purpose of exercising pastoral oversight, just as he would conduct or superintend any other department of his work.

In the light of the foregoing considerations it is not difficult to determine the relation of the pastor to the Sunday school. He is the pastor—the shepherd or overseer of it. He will be cordial and kind to all, and he and the superintendent will be true yoke-fellows in the great work which calls so loudly for their united and persevering efforts.

Now suppose the pastor fails to occupy the position in the Sunday school to which the church has called him; suppose he is very infrequent in his attendance; and that, when he is present, he simply acts as a teacher of a class, or looks on as a mere spectator; the entire control of the school must, of course, fall into the hands of the superintendent and teachers.

These, we may suppose, are at the outset governed by correct views, and desirous of the pastor's counsel and labors. But, in the absence of the supervision which the pastor was expected to exercise, the officers and teachers soon learn to do without him; their own plans are carried out, and, having become supreme in the enterprise, the pastor's place is but imperfectly recognized or ignored.

In the course of a year or two a preacher is sent to that work who, in the fear of God, proposes to take hold of Sunday school interests after the Methodistic fashion. He enters the Sunday school room ready to work, but probably soon finds that there is nothing for him to do. The teachers elected the superintendent, it may be, and have given him to understand that they wish the school to be conducted in the way which they have indicated, perhaps, in the teachers' meeting.

There has been no intention to do harm—no set purpose to crowd the pastor out. The difficulty is that his place, not having been filled, has grown up as an unraveled path.

How can a preacher who has promised to mind every point in the Discipline, great and small, thus ignore his duties, privileges and responsibilities? When the children and youth of his charge are gathered into the Sunday school room, how can he get his own consent to stay out or to remain comparatively inactive? What a cheering and inspiring sight! What a time for songs and prayers and scriptural readings! What an opportunity for winning the affections of both young and old! What a field, fresh, fertile, already broken up, in which to sow the good seed of the kingdom! What an opportunity to increase his congregation by bringing into it the Sunday school scholars! What a fountain of inspiration to fit him for his pulpit labors!

A faithful pastor in the Sunday school, overlooking all, encouraging all, helping all, casting in the salt of spirituality on every hand, is certainly acting in accord with the teachings and example of the Chief Shepherd. There is here opened to him a well-spring of joy; from these scenes of more than earthly interest the thoughts and feelings are carried away to the New Jernsalem, with its hallowed employments and rapturous joys.

That the want of supervision and pastoral influence to which we have alluded exists in but too great a degree, we cannot doubt.

In many Quarterly Conferences nothing of importance is said or done in regard to the Sunday school further than the mere hearing of the pastor's report.

It is a fact that not a few of our preachers fail to exercise pastoral oversight in the Sunday school. Opportunity for this only as the preacher presses his way in and makes it, is, in many of our Sunday schools, exceedingly limited.

It is probable that not one-half of the Sunday school scholars in the Methodist Episcopal Church South are regular hearers of the preached word. All will admit that there are in our Conferences tens of thousands of children of Methodist parents who habitually neglect public worship on Sunday.

The effect of this is to make the impression on the children that the Sunday school is sufficient, thus in their minds separating the Sunday school from the church. The mournful fact which we would record just here is that many parents, and many superintendents and teachers in our Sunday schools do not seem to think it very important that the children should attend at public worship, and do not earnestly urge the children and young people to take their places in the church with the congregation.

As to the argument that the children are not able to endure the confinement and fatigue of both the Sunday school and the sermon, there are many of us who never heard of it in our boyhood days; it followed, as a matter of course, that we went to church. The children spend six hours a day in day schools.

We favor the plan of holding the Sunday school in the afternoon, wherever it can conveniently be done. The children are fresh and free then to attend the forenoon service, and the afternoons afford ample time for the exercises of the Sunday school. The conclusion of the whole matter is that the church, through her ministers, should embrace the Sunday school and press it to her heart. The children should constitute a large and important element in her great congregations. The Sunday school, to be efficient, must be the school of Christ. As it is the child of the church, let this honored mother guard, govern and nourish this her rising progeny with affectionate and watchful care. A. G. STAFF.

PALESTINE, TEXAS.

Rev.(?) W. P. Miller Again.

MR. EDITOR: In the Methodist Advocate, Atlanta, Georgia, of March 12, Mr. Miller undertakes to answer an article of mine which appeared in the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE of November 7, 1872. He heads his answer thus: "A Slanderous Article Answered." From the title of his answer it would seem manifest that he would take up every item of complaint, and utterly set the whole aside. But he sees fit to pass some in total silence which involve the want of consistency in his character; and some he answers by flat denials, coupled with the word "lie;" and others he answers by equivocation and prevarication. Hence his answer is a failure. Upon the whole, however, his answer shows that he was greatly excited, or else he is radically defective in accurate statements.

Mr. Miller says that the "old Alabama Conference that he joined was the same as that to which he now belongs." To me this is a very strange statement. However, it may be intelligible to one who wears "green glasses" with which to look at greenbacks. Let's look at the statement a little. The "old Alabama Conference" that Mr. Miller joined was part and parcel of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. The one to which he now belongs is part and parcel of the Methodist Episcopal Church (North.) The "old Alabama Conference" recognized the institution of slavery, as it existed in this country, as of scriptural authority. The one to which he now belongs holds that slavery, as it existed in the South, was the "sum of all evil." The "old Alabama Conference" that he joined did not believe the church had any right to intermeddle with politics and elections. The one to which he now belongs holds to the Stanton-Ames orders and the effects, and to the right of intermeddling with State and United States conventions and elections. And yet, in the face of all this, Mr. Miller says that his "church never descends to low-down measures—has no need to. With the pure all things are pure." No wonder he used to make such war-speeches, and denounce the North and Northern Methodists. No wonder he used to hunt up local Methodist preachers to keep them from being Union men; as in the case particularly of Rev. C. C. Sullivan, who happened to make a remark in jest against the Union, in Marianna, Florida, and Mr. Miller happened to hear of it while he was presiding elder of the Marianna district, and rode clear from Marianna to Bro. Sullivan's, a distance of ten or more miles, just for the purpose of lecturing Bro. Sullivan. Now I wonder if Mr. Miller can remember Mr. Sullivan? I wonder if Mr. Miller can remember the town of Marianna, Florida, and his war-sermons and war-talks in that place?

Mr. Miller denies seeking for the colonelcy of the Thirty-third Alabama Regiment. This regiment was organized just below the navy-yard, Pensacola, Florida, during the last of April and first of May, 1862. I was there at the time and heard Mr. Miller's friends advocate his claims to the colonelcy of the regiment, and they said they were authorized to use his name. Last year I saw and conversed with the lieutenant colonel of that regiment, who was present at the time of its organization, and he said that Mr. Miller's name was used by his friends for the colonelcy of said regiment.

Again, Mr. Miller denies getting the $100 from the Methodist Episcopal Church before he joined it. Now I say that he told the Rev. John Dowling, of Dale county, Alabama, that he did receive $100 from a friend of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Concerning the same matter Miller told J. T. Law, of Coffee county, Alabama, that he wrote to Bishop Clark, in 1866, stating his condition and asking what could be done for him in the way of admitting him into that church, and that the Bishop replied and sent him $100. I wonder if Mr. Miller can remember these brethren and his statements to them?

But there is a very heavy charge against him, which he denies not, except by prevarication, and that is the counterfeit money affair at Evergreen, Alabama. He says this "was gotten up by political enemies."—"Political enemies?" The statement, as I have it in this case, is from one of the oldest ministers in the Alabama Conference, who says he gets it from the lips of the express agent in Evergreen, Alabama; and he further says that there are five witnesses of this fact besides the agent. Now, while such a charge as this is spread abroad against an authorized minister of a church, how can that church be respected when she refuses to have it officially examined? She becomes particeps criminis.

With all of Mr. Miller's sins and crimes attaching to him, and vitiating his mind and spirit, he attempts to say that he is slandered! He declares "that there is a great factory in the South," and vast resources of prejudice, malice and ill will as material to manufacture falsehoods against my good man." This certainly is a truth upon which Mr. Miller happened to blunder; and in confirmation thereof I would refer the reader to the Rev. (?) A. S. Lakin, of the Alabama Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church (North,) who was before the Kuklux committee in Washington city, and was proven guilty of falsehood by the testimony of Judge Busteed, himself a Radical. I would also refer to pages 32 and 58 of the Fifth Annual Report of the Church Extension Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church for the year 1870, in which the effort is made to identify the Methodist Episcopal Church South with the Kuklux Klan. Now, sir, if that does not prove that there is a factory of falsehoods and lies in the South, under the control of the Methodist Episcopal Church (North,) it is difficult to conceive what is susceptible of proof. And yet these are our dear brethren who desire fraternal relations with us!

While looking up some of Miller's "airy" declarations, it may be proper to notice the following: "The opposition is principally with the preachers. They labor assiduously to keep us out of sight, or they black us over, so that the people may not look on us in our true light." This he says touching the relations of the churches North and South. Now, sir, I have heard laymen in the Church South make stronger declarations of opposition to the Church North than I have ever heard ministers make. I can give the names of laymen who say that if ever the Methodist Episcopal Church North and South unite they will leave the Methodist connection.

The "black-us-over" remark seems to indicate one of the hobbies of Mr. Miller's church, and it would seem that he would like to be "blacked over," so that he might exhibit Bishop Haven's ideal of great beauty: "Egyptian beauty upon the Grecian brow."

But, after all, the "blacking over" does not come from the South, but from the North. There was "blacking over" when Bishop Haven refused to sleep with the negro parson. There was more "blacking over" when all the white sisters in Chicago, in 1868, refused to board the negro delegates from the Baltimore Conference. There was a right smart "blacking over" when the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, in 1868, snubbed Bishop Jones, of the African Methodist Episcopal Church; and there was a great deal of "blacking over" when the General Conference of the African Methodist Episcopal Church adjourned its session from New York, in 1872, to keep from uniting with the Methodist Episcopal Church (North.)

After all, Mr. Miller tells another truth concerning some portions of the Methodist Episcopal Church South when he says: "They think their craft is in danger." With all the facts full in view from Tennessee, Virginia, Louisiana and Alabama, and in other places where the Methodist Episcopal Church (North) robbed us of our lawful rights, how could we be otherwise exercised than with apprehension?

ASK WHAT YE WILL.

Give me light, my Father, give me light
Through this dark world to travel without fear,
And give my soul a robe of spotless white,
And let me know that thou art ever near.

Give me hope, my Father, give me hope
To wrest me from temptations lurking here;
Nerve my weak, faltering soul with strength
And let me know, my Savior, thou art near.

Give me faith, my Father, give me faith
To pierce beyond the clouds of black despair
That shade my thorny pathway with their wrath,
And let me know, my Father, thou art near.

Give me love, my Father, give me love;
My heart is melting and the way is drear;
Help me to lift my mind to Heaven above,
And let me know forever thou art near.

An Old Fight.

Almost as old as time itself is the fight that has been going on between Christ's followers and those of satan; and though the weapons of our warfare are "mighty to the pulling down of the strongholds of sin," it seems far from a termination. Conquerors at last must be those who are contending on the right side; but alas! for the many that have ceased to fight. Such seems to be the case with the majority in one little village that shall here be nameless. In it are four churches, the pious pastors of which deeply lament their want of spiritual life. One of these churches calls itself Methodist, but its method has always been to get along with as little religion as possible, never to pay their minister his full salary, and to ignore most of the benevolent objects of the day. Its present pastor is one who fears not to declare the whole counsel of God faithfully, and the non-professing part of his congregation always seem impressed; but the precious seed of the word is scattered by professors to the four winds of heaven at the very church-door, instead of being fostered into goodly plants, bearing fruit to eternal life. Then let him attempt to form a Bible class, class or teachers' meeting, or any of those social gatherings by which spiritual life thrives, and where is his church? "Lo, I sought them, but they could not be found."

The women, too, have gone over to the enemy; not those alone too feeble for warfare, but Amazons. Joan de Arcs there are, not afraid to act in Thespian societies before a crowded house—experts at church suppers, Christmas-trees and county fairs, but all too modest to lead in prayer or give a relation of Christian experience. Indeed, if they ever had an experience, one article of our faith is palpable to the most casual observer. Perhaps at times their sickly imagination loves to explore a kind of Swedenborgian heaven, with gates ajar; but the New Testament heaven, with its high and holy Potentate, and sinless multitudes continually praising him, has for them no attractions.

Many are the Delilahs and Jezebels in this church, but no Deborahs; here and there a Martha, but no Mary; Judases and Demases, but no Peters or Johns. Would that it had even a form of godliness! What but the Spirit of God can cause this valley of dry bones to rise up an exceeding great army. C.

OBITUARIES.

DIED, at Marion Station, Lauderdale county, Mississippi, on the fourth of March, 1873, WILLIAM H. MOORE, son of Dr. James V. and Paulina H. Moore, aged six months and twenty days. J. C. BROGAN.

DEATH has again visited the happy home of our dear brother and sister, Prof. W. C. and Mary M. Day, of Marion High School, Lauderdale county, Mississippi, and laid his icy hand upon their sweet little boy, ALGERNON SIDNEY. He died on the third of April, 1873, aged two years and eleven months.

J. C. BROGAN.

JOHN W. CAZEY was born in Franklin parish, Louisiana, and died at the residence of his uncle, John Ganger, Esq., in Richland parish, February 11, 1873, aged thirty-five years. His disease was consumption. Bro. Cazey was converted and joined the Methodist Church about A. D. 1850. He lived a pious and an exemplary life. His companions in arms during the late war speak of him as a model Christian while in the army; being attentive to his religious duties amidst the bustle and confusion of the camp, and even on the field of battle; holding prayer meetings with his fellow-soldiers, urging upon them the importance of religion and a preparation for death. He did not fear death. The writer had a conversation with him some little time before his death, in which he stated that he felt himself ready and prepared to die whenever it was the will of God to call him away. His departure was so quiet and calm that those present around his bed, and who were administering to him remedies for his relief, did not know when the spirit left its clay tenement. He was the last of his father's family, save an only brother, who still remains, hoping for immortal life in heaven. J. L. WRIGHT.

LOUISA A. KNIGHT, daughter of William and Mary Knight, was born in Natchez, Mississippi, August 6, 1806. She was married to Colonel W. H. D. Denny November 23, 1828, and removed to Port Gibson, Mississippi. Colonel Denny died in 1842. In the summer of 1845, during a revival which occurred in Port Gibson under the pastorate of Rev. James L. Forsyth, Mrs. Denny was converted and received into the Methodist Church. She continued a faithful member till death. She was an exemplary Christian. Meek and lowly of heart, consistent in her daily walk and conversation, patient in tribulation, she was a bright example of Christian piety.

Her health had for some time been precarious, and it was thought early in the spring that a trip to New Orleans would be beneficial; but she returned rather worse, and soon afterward took her bed. She had finished her course, and the Master called, and it was not in the power of human means to postpone the summons. From that time she rapidly declined. The writer visited her frequently during her last illness, and always found her sustained by a good hope of everlasting life. On the night of the thirty-first of March, 1873, she breathed her last, and on Wednesday, April 2, we laid her body in the silent grave, to await the final resurrection.

W. B. LEWIS.

MRS. TEMPIE M. SCRUGGS, daughter of General Joseph and Mary J. Arrington, was born in Nash county, North Carolina, September 29, 1817. In childhood she removed to Sumter county, Alabama, where she was married to Josiah L. Scruggs, May 17, 1838. She professed religion and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church in October, 1844, and died, of pneumonia, at her residence in Livingston, Alabama, March 31, 1873.

A life such as hers deserves particular and honorable notice. It is seldom that death at one stroke wounds so many hearts, or leaves a vacant place so hard to fill in a family, in a community or in a church. Her husband is bereaved of a wife who was a helpmate indeed, and who for thirty-five years made the nuptial vow of her young womanhood to "obey him, serve him, love, honor and keep him in sickness and in health," the rule of her life. She was devoted to his interests, and by her cheerful and affectionate disposition she increased his joys, and lighted up the darkness of adversity and affliction when they came.

Into his dark and companionless grief no heart can enter but one which has suffered a similar loss.

Her children have lost a kind and affectionate mother, whose hand administered to their wants, whose heart rejoiced in their joys and wept at their griefs, and whose Christian example is their richest legacy.

The community has lost a member who, by her hospitality at home, and her unfailing presence and ministration at the bedside of the sick and in the house of mourning, as well as her cheerful companionship in the house of rejoicing, had won for her a place in all hearts.

The church has lost a pious and exemplary Christian, who, while eminently liberal in her love for all Christians, reserved her dearest love for the fold of her choice, and whose Christian profession was adorned with deeds of Christian usefulness.

Her family, the community and the church have gained in her death the testimony of another soul to the verity of the promises of God. She faced the king of terrors without one fear or the quiver of a muscle. Strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might, she leaned upon his rod and staff, and they comforted her. A few moments before her death she repented the lines:

"Jesus, lover of my soul,
Let me to thy bosom fly."

Then she

"Laid her head on Jesus' breast,
And breathed her life out sweetly there."

On Monday evening, March 31, we carried her to the last resting-place, and in the midst of a large concourse of weeping friends committed her body to the earth and her spirit to God, who gave it, hoping in the resurrection of the last day to meet her again in the home of the redeemed.

J. M. MASON.

DIED, after a painful and protracted illness, at her residence in New Orleans, on the eighteenth of March, 1873, MARY A. LANGLEY, wife of George Brewer, aged about forty-six years.

The subject of this notice was born in New York, on the twenty-seventh of March, 1827. She embraced religion, when but a child, among the Presbyterians, and united with that branch of the Christian church to which she ever entertained strong predilections and the most kindly feelings. In 1841 she removed to New Orleans, and during the following year was united in marriage to George Brewer, who, having been converted about the same time under the ministry of Dr. William H. Watkins, they together united with a little band of Methodists by whom was subsequently erected the Morgan Street church, and with which the most of her religious history and labors are identified. She removed her membership to the Louisiana Avenue station only a year or two before it was transferred to the edifice triumphant.

As a Christian she was charitable, devout, self-sacrificing, zealous and spiritual. While she loved and distinguishing doctrines and usages in the peculiar usages of the church of her choice, she appears to have never entertained unkind feelings or to have indulged uncharitable reflections toward others. While she exhibited the most ardent attachment and the most demonstrative regard for her friends, she never allowed herself to be betrayed into the utterance of unkind or uncharitable remarks for any, but was always ready with excuses and extenuations for all. Her devotion and self-sacrificing zeal for the church and cause of Christ knew no bound, except as imposed by the imperative demands of duties devolved upon her by the cares and responsibility of a large family. In the class meeting, prayer meeting, with the public congregation for preaching, when circumstances favored or obstacles opposed, whether propitious weather invited or disagreeable weather interfered, whether near by or far away, she was found constantly, devoutly at her post, and cheerfully and efficiently bearing her part, praying, praying, speaking to and heartily encouraging all around her, praising and shouting the praises of God in a manner that she will not soon be forgotten by the churches, and few seem capable of imitating. In all the commendable enterprises of the church her hands were ever ready to work and her purse open to give. Nor did she confine her labors and donations to the church with which she held her membership, or to the minister who was her pastor. She was a ready, cheerful worker wherever she could promote the cause of Christ or the welfare of her fellow-creatures. If the disease which carried her off was not brought on by labors in behalf of the Algiers church it attacked her while engaged in that work, for it was while returning across the river late at night, after an entertainment for its benefit, that she felt the first symptoms.

Then there was a deep current of spirituality running through all her conversation and conduct in all the relations of life. I never knew a person who more uniformly turned the conversation into the current of Christian experience, or who appeared more at home in the relation of giving deep experiences of personal piety. That depth of spirituality which characterized her talk in love-feasts was not peculiar to such occasions, but exhibited itself in her daily conversation. And with this profound spirituality, devoutly and self-sacrificingly zealous and unfailingly amiable Christian character was beautifully blended the practical duties growing out of her various relations in life. As a wife she was respectful, discreet, dutiful and affectionate. As a mother she was diligent but faithful, gentle but firm. While she cheerfully allowed her children any gratification which did not think incompatible with the principles of piety, she faithfully instilled into their minds the importance of virtue and godliness, and firmly insisted on that course of conduct which is in conformity to the requirements of consistent piety.

In her last illness, which was protracted and severe, it was the writer's privilege frequently to be with her, and the same cheerful resignation, spirit and confident and joyous hopefulness which she so often expressed in class meetings and love-feasts characterized her there. She spoke of death with perfect calmness and composure; frequently expressed the sentiment and on one occasion adopted the language of the apostle: "For to me to live is Christ, and to die is gain. I cannot choose. He will do what is best." On another occasion, while her surviving children, who constitute but a little over half of her family, stood around her, she, looking around on them, exclaimed: "Oh, what a group have I to meet on the other shore?" Her last end was one of calm peace and holy triumph.

EX-PA-TE.

NEW ORLEANS, LA., April 10, 1873.

"HUMBUG" is a corruption of the Irish words uim bog, pronounced oombug, signifying soft copper, pewter or brass or worthless money such as was made by James the Second at the Dublin mint, twelve shillings of which was worth only two pence sterling. At first applied to worthless coin, the words became the general title of anything false or counterfeit.

TEACH your children to sing. When troubles come, go at them with songs. When griefs arise, sing them down. Lift the voice of praise and the cares. Praise God by singing; he will lift you above trials. Angels do it. They sing in heaven. Let it among God's people on earth sound the appropriate language of Christian feeling.

NEVER fear people thinking you are infallible; for you are so, whether they think so or not.

OLD AND NEW.

New little feet
Patter on the floor;
New little faces
Peep through the door;
New little souls
Have entered into life;
New little voices
Speak in love or strife;
New little fingers
Tightly clasp our own;
New little tendrils
Round our hearts have grown.

Still the old voices
Echo in our ear,
And the old faces
Hallowed are and dear;
Still the old friends,
Who have passed away,
Live in our affection—
Love has no decay;
And the old words,
Spoken long ago,
Keep the heart tender—
Make the tears flow.

Thus New and Old
Mingle by one;
Each has its blessing;
And when life is done,
Old faces, old friends
Will meet us again—
Treasures long buried
We shall regain—
All that is lovely,
All that is true,
Will live on forever,
The Old and the New.

Sermon by Rev. Dr. Punshon.

The Toronto Daily Globe brings the following report of a sermon delivered in that place by the Rev. Dr. Punshon, who took as his text the fifteenth and seventeenth verses of the third chapter of Malachi: "Then they that feared the Lord spake often one to another, and the Lord hearkened and heard it, and a book of remembrances was written before him for them that feared the Lord, and that thought upon his name. And they shall be mine, saith the Lord of hosts, in that day when I make up my jewels, and I will spare them as a man spareth his own son that serveth him."

The old rabbis, the preacher said, loved to call Malachi the seal of the prophets, but so sad were his words, and so stern, that it had been well said that he was most like a mourning seal. The last of the seer's noble line flourishing alone in the midst of a perverse and ungodly generation, destined to have no successor for the long period of four hundred years, there was a melancholy suggestiveness both about his person and his book. He seemed to stand as one who saw his fellow on the brink of a cliff that yawned beneath him, and whose prophecy was a wailing for pity and help across the chasm. He seemed to have derived his only consolation from the gaze into the sunless darkness, and his heart grew strong as he caught a glimpse, first of the forerunner and then of the hope of Israel. In the chapter before us his heart groaned out his anguish about the iniquity of the people around him. How glad they ought to be that they had not been left the Old Testament alone. The Old Testament closed with a curse which went rolling along on the hat-hearted of the world for four hundred years, but the New Testament was the later will by which the first was reversed. One prime thought of the text was the necessity and obligation of communion. "Then they that feared the Lord spake often one to another," lest any of them should expect an inheritance that was not theirs, and from which their unbelief had expressly excluded them. He reminded them that the fulfillment to them of this promise was made in the text was conditional upon their attainment of the character of those to whom it was made. The fear of the Lord was the Old Testament expression for true religion. To some the idea that the feeling of apprehension—the feeling of vassal for the despot, or the prisoner for his captor, of the slave for his taskmaster with his lash and his goad—should be a source of pleasure, was beyond comprehension. The fear with which such persons thought of God was the inevitable result of their alien nature and of their sinful practices; it was impossible for them to regard their Maker, whom they had offended and against whom their life was one long rebellion, otherwise than with apprehension and dread. The fear of terror was the natural expression of the carnal mind; but if a person came under the power of the Holy Ghost, if he realized the wonderful transformation of a Christian's life, the passion of fear would share in that transformation. The heirs of the promise they could not be unless they feared the Lord and thought upon his name. If they found that their fear was that of terror, and not that of reverence, they should haste out of that condition.

There were four thoughts in the text that he would consider. The first was the Lord's hearing. It was a favorite practice of infidelity to represent Jehovah as distant, as in unmeasurable remoteness, as altogether beyond the supplications of men. God had been careful, however, in his word to vindicate his omniscience and his omnipresence. What was the history of nations and of the world's successive progress but a development of God in action, asserting ever and anon his own supremacy, and binding circumstances the most uncompromising to his own will? Some of the modern Sadducees, who have banished God from all personal connection with the world, had complained of his distance and his silence in what they have considered circumstances which have called for his interference. Wrongs of gigantic enormity had been perpetrated for generations. The slaveholder had gorged himself with the price of blood, and the victim of his oppression had long lifted his voice in the despairing cry: "How long, O Lord, how long?" Voltaire had blurted out his blasphemy, and yet no hand had been raised to strike him down; a poet had written what, if it had not been insanity, would have been blasphemy, and yet his hand had not withered; scoffers had sneered and said: "Where is the promise of his coming?" and pious men had become perplexed and hesitating. But God did not slumber, after all. He was patient. He knew the end from the beginning, and reposed in the conscious progress of his plans. It would but give importance to some blatant infidel if nature were to be disturbed or if God were to be roused in his wrath to punish him. The prayers of God's people were not forgotten. Though he forebare to answer them, they were not lost; no [illegible] was turning from mourning or despairing hearts was unrecorded.

It was said that a Sicilian tyrant had once had a large ear constructed in his palace by means of which he could hear every word the captives in a dungeon beneath might say. No tyrant, but a tireless and fatherly governor, an upright and unerring judge, God sat in his palace with the Babel sounds of the world going up before him; the wail of orphan hearts, the cry of imprisoned freedom, the blasphemy of the scoffer, the drunkard's ribald song, the widow's cry, the penitent's groan, the believer's prayer went up before the Lord, and he hearkened to them. And the Lord was one by whom actions were weighed; he took all the circumstances into account, the presence or the lack of opportunity, the immediate yielding to temptation, or the yielding only after long resistance and subsequent reluctance. Passing on to the next thought suggested by the text, they found that God not only heard, but he also recorded; in his book of remembrance their whole life would be written. The next thought was that God would vindicate his recorded estimate concerning good and evil, a period when the moral forces now undefined on the same arena should be separated each into its own fellowship forever. True to the spirit of the passage, the judgment-day was represented on its merciful side. It was the day when the Lord would make up his jewels; for the comfort of his people he took away the terror from the judgment. It was the day when he would smile upon those who had sincerely but imperfectly followed him, when he would gather from his churches in the world, as from so many treasure-caves, the jewels for his diadem. What a scene of solemnity and grandeur would be presented on that day; a summoned world, and not an individual absent from the gathering; a complete disclosure, and not a solitary secret hidden; nothing adventitious, nothing simulated, but there standing in his naked realness, just as he is; man! Who might abide it? The sinner with his load of sin? the hypocrite with his painted faith? the backslider, after his second crucifixion of his Lord and Savior? "And they shall be mine, saith the Lord of hosts, on that day when I make up my jewels, and I will spare them as a man spareth his own son that serveth him."

Here were the two great thoughts of recognition and salvation. Those who fear the Lord now would not fear on the judgment-day, because the fear of him would have bathed them as in a fountain of life, and they would have come from the fountain clothed in an asbestus garment, so to speak, which would preserve them from the consuming fires. The thought of recognition was one of the sweetest in life. Desolate indeed was the person who was utterly homeless and friendless, without any one on whom to put the hand and say: "This heart is mine; it cares for me, thinks of me, dreams of me, suffers for me, plans for me." But "they shall be mine, saith the Lord of hosts, in that day when I make up my jewels." Here was a promise in all its fullness, and it was for his people that the Lord presented the judgment on the merciful side. It was not for him (the speaker) to do otherwise, but he warned them that there was a judgment coming, and he besought them to be ready for it.

The Sailor's Return.

The cottage in which lately lived a widow and her little son is situated near the seashore. She had seen better days, and had hoped for a happy future when her husband would give to another the command of his own ship, and remain at home with her and her two dear boys.

Her hopes, however, were all crushed by the sad intelligence of his loss at sea, by which she was made a widow and her children fatherless. She had to leave her large house, to part with her servants, and to retire to a pretty, small cottage by the seashore. Although she had less of this world's riches, yet she would often talk to her fine boys of her treasures in heaven as never fading and ever increasing. She had given her heart to God, and knew the happiness of sins forgiven by faith in Jesus Christ. Her great desire and earnest prayer was that her children might be partakers of the same saving grace. For this she lived, and, if needful, for this she felt ready to die.

To impress the young minds of her sons with the frailty of life, she would sometimes take them to the seaside sands, when the sun was setting deep in the west, tinging the smooth, clear waters with his last yellow tints, and there would she tell them of their father, and with her finger write his name in the sand. Then they would watch the rising wave removing every trace of the name. From this she would call their attention to the writing of the names of God's children in the Lamb's Book of Life, from which they could never be erased.

A few years thus passed in the seaside cottage, where the little family lived, much respected and beloved by the villagers, till the elder of the boys was seized with an irresistible desire to go to sea and become a captain. The kind entreaties of a tender mother, and the tears of an affectionate little brother, availed not to alter his purpose. At last his mother gave a reluctant consent, and to sea he went. On leaving home he took a Bible, as his mother's last present, and promised daily to read some portion of it. A few tears fell, and some heavy sighs escaped the young sailor as he gave his last look toward his native land, and thought of his mother and of his brother. His promise to read a portion of his Bible every day he kept for some weeks, but at last the book found its way to the bottom of the chest, and there it remained undisturbed for many months.

He had gone round the globe, and transacted business in most of the great countries in both Asia and America, and, having been very successful, he returned home much richer than he anticipated. His heart seemed set upon making riches, for he thought little of his mother, and still less of God. He had neglected to write home, and his mother could not send to him, not knowing his whereabouts. The best feelings of his nature he thus blunted; and he lost the happy satisfaction he would have felt had he written home and by his letters made his mother happy.

It was a lovely autumn when the ship hove in sight of Britain, and it was not long after his landing that the son set off to see his long-neglected mother. As the sailor drew near to the scenes of his boyhood his memory recalled many happy days and many pretty faces. His eye fell on the well-known distant hills, and the well-known running stream, and the well-known village church steeple, and the still better-known cottage of his youthful home, at the door of which he stopped. All seemed strangely quiet. No one noticed the stranger's arrival. His heart seemed to fail him just when he thought he should have been elated; and he could not tell why. He knocked, and knocked again, but no answer was given. He tried to peep in the window, but the inside blinds prevented. "I wonder where she is," somewhat loudly said the sailor. With a mind agitated by fear and hope, he again laid hold of the knocker. Its loud and irregular raps attracted the attention of the inmates of the nearest cottage, who asked what he wanted. "Where," cried he, with a tremulous voice, "is my mother? I hope she is—"

"Your mother! Do you mean the widow who lived in that cottage, and had a little boy?"

"I do."

"Ah! I recollect she used to talk of a son that went to sea, but did not know whether he was dead or alive, for he never sent her a letter, and she always wept when she talked about him. Are you that son?"

"I am;" and now the big tears began to roll down his brown cheeks. "Where is my mother, good woman? Pray tell me where she is. And my little brother, where is he?"

She invited him to her cottage, and told him that "about a twelvemonth ago the little boy was taken ill of a fever, and although the principal doctors attended him for some time, yet it was of little use, for he died, and lies buried in the village churchyard. His mother was the best and kindest woman I ever knew. She watched and attended her sick son night and day, which, with her painful anxiety for her absent son, seemed too much for her strength, for she gradually became weaker, till about a week since, when she died, and was buried yesterday in the same—"

Here the feelings of the returned prodigal became intense, and he shrieked out: "Oh! have I stayed away just long enough to kill my mother? Oh! what a wretch I am, never to write to broken-hearted mother! Oh! show me her grave, that there I may die, for I cannot—I will not live!"

"Stop! stop! my friend; your mother gave me a letter to give you, if you should ever return."

On obtaining a light the letter was found. On opening it he read:

"MY DEAREST, ONLY SON: When this reaches you I shall be no more. Your brother has gone before me, and I cannot but believe he was prepared. I had fondly hoped that I should once more have seen you on the shores of mortality, but I must now give up this. I have never forgotten you in my prayers. Often, perhaps when you little expected it, even in the cold, dark winter night have I long and earnestly prayed for my dear lost son. There is only one thing that gives me pain at dying, and that is, my dear William, that I must leave you in this wicked world, as I fear, an enemy to God and your own soul. I am too weak to write more. As you visit my grave, oh! remember that you, too, must follow. Farewell. The last breath of your mother will be sent in praying for you, that we may meet above. Your dying mother."

William was not satisfied with reading this letter once or twice, but for some time continued reading it, and every time he had a fresh remembrance of a kind, prayerful and affectionate mother, which seemed to impress his soul with a deeper sense of his vileness. Lessons she had taught him, and which had for years been lying dormant in his mind, now came with a freshness and a power he never before felt. No rest could William obtain for his troubled soul, though he sought it day after day. He was often at his mother's grave, weeping; but he found no rest, no forgiveness of sins, till he turned to God and saw what he had provided in Jesus for those who are weary and heavy laden, for those who are troubled about their sins; not only sins against their parents or friends, but who see and know in their hearts that they have sinned against God himself. This poor, heart-broken, returned sailor at last found peace by accepting Jesus as his Savior, and he is now rejoicing in the Lord, and doing all he can to get little boys and girls to come to the same blessed Savior. Often did he weep tears of sorrow at his dear mother's grave. Now he knew himself a sinner—lost, lost! but Jesus' precious blood, which cleanseth from all sin, cleansed away his sin and gave him peace with God; so this sailor became a Christian simply by trusting the blood of Jesus, God's dear Son.—Labor of Love.

A CLERGYMAN who sent a notice to be read by the preacher who exchanged with him, neglected to denote carefully a private postscript, and the congregation were astounded to hear the stranger wind up by saying: "You will please come to dine with me at the parsonage."

Varieties in Literature.

There are some writings in which force shows itself, as it were, naked, and it is obviously the secret of the influence which they exert over us. Such, for example, is that masculine and nervous prose of which we have so many masters in English literature, and which sometimes looks so easy when it is really so difficult. The clear, compressed reasoning of Hobbes, the manly common sense of Locke, the incomparable energy of Swift, and the comparatively coarse dogmatizing of Cobbett, have all a kind of family or rather national likeness; and, fortunately, we are not without some modern examples of the same style. Lovers of a more florid rhetoric are apt to despise the simple downright vernacular of the writers we have named, and even to fancy that it must be easy to express such plain thoughts in plain words. Nothing can, in fact, be further from the truth; because the quality which makes such writings possible is just that intensity of mind which belongs only to powerful natures. The direct expression of the thoughts of a feeble person is simply insipid. On the other hand, the gorgeous rhetoric of Burke or Milton, or Jeremy Taylor is also good so far as it is a symptom of force taking a different direction. The energy which in one case displays itself by a strong grasp of a few leading principles displays itself in the other by overlaying them with a vast variety of illustrations and applications. The same amount of intellectual power may be displayed in Swift's attack upon Wood's copper coinage, and in Burke's on a regicide peace. Swift's power appears in the kind of bull-dog tenacity with which he throttles his antagonists; and Burke's in the versatility with which he perplexes them by every conceivable mode of assault. To decide which is the greater, we must wait for that new calculus of the future which will enable us to estimate the proper expenditure of force in either case. Hasty critics, as a rule, happen to find one variety of expression more congenial to them than the other, and fail to observe that it is a question not of the essential power, but of the mode of application. In some cases a concentration, and in others a diffusion of force may be most appropriate, and it is a great, though a very common mistake, to apply the same measure to all. There is another variety of literature in which the principle does not seem to apply at first sight. Many of our poets, for example, appear to owe their success to a weakness rather than to strength. The more accurate statement, however, would appear to be that great strength of any one faculty is apt to throw a man off his balance. The very greatest men, the Dantes, Shakespeares or Goethes are men of thoroughly healthy and equable development. But the second-rate men, the Popes or Shelleys, are apt to be morbid, because some of their talents are developed at the expense of the rest. Pope, for example, had, as Atterbury said, a mens curva in corpore curvo. But his greatness was owing not to the distortion, but to the marvelous quickness and keenness of his intellect. He abounds in the most brilliant flashes of thought, but is unable to maintain a steady pressure. He is a poet therefore by fits and starts, and has composed innumerable couplets of wonderful merit, but scarcely one satisfactory poem. He is an example therefore of intermittent power, which is to the sustained power of healthier writers what a series of explosions by gunpowder is to the continuous expansion of steam.—Saturday Review.

THE POOR.—Moore, of the Rural New Yorker, was sitting in his office one afternoon, some years ago, when a farmer-friend came in and said:

"Mr. Moore, I like your paper, but times are so hard that I cannot pay for it."

"Is that so, friend Jones? I'm very sorry to hear you are so poor; if you are so hard run, I will give you my paper."

"Oh no! I can't take it as a gift."

"Well, then, let's see how we can fix it. You raise chickens, I believe."

"Yes, a few; but they don't bring anything hardly."

"Don't they? Neither does my paper cost anything hardly. Now I have a proposition to make to you. I will continue your paper, and when you go home you may select from your lot of chickens one, and call it mine. Take good care of her, and bring me the proceeds, whether in eggs or chickens, and we shall call it square."

"All-right, Bro. Moore," and the fellow chuckled at what he thought a capital bargain. He kept the contract strictly, and at the end of the year found that he had paid four prices for his paper. He often tells the joke himself, and he says he never had the face to say he was too poor to take a paper from that day.

NEW RECIPE FOR SLEEP.—The story is told of a young dominie who was restlessly tossing on his pillow one night recently, half dreaming, half waking, when, imagining himself closing a religious meeting, he pronounced the "benediction," which dismissed all his restlessness, and he turned over and went to sleep.

A MINISTER making a pastoral call at a house where the children were kept pretty quiet on Sunday, was confidentially informed by one of the little girls that she would like to be a minister. "Why?" said the gratified but somewhat puzzled shepherd. "So I could holler on Sunday," was the reply.

AN unsophisticated Roman Catholic woman of Paris, Kentucky, who felt it to be her duty, bought a "roman candle," and sent it to the church to decorate the altar. When the candles were lighted there was trouble.

"HOW MUCH did he leave?" inquired a gentleman of a wag, on learning of the death of a wealthy citizen. "Everything," replied the wag; "he didn't take a dollar with him."

Religious Intelligence.

INDIA has 1,600 Methodist Sabbath school scholars—800 of them in Lucknow.

THE churches of Maine are enjoying a general revival influence, commencing on the week of prayer.

A PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH has been organized in Denison, Texas, being the first Northern Presbyterian church in northern Texas.

THE representatives of the late F. W. Robertson, of Brixton, England, have received upward of £30,000 for the various volumes of sermons left at his death.

THE 65,000 Protestant clergymen in the United States receive salaries on the average as follows: Of the Presbyterian Church, about $650; of the Protestant Episcopal, about $600; of the Baptist, about $600; of the Lutheran and German Reformed, still lower; of the Reformed Dutch, about $650; of the Methodist, about $700. These salaries, which are only about one-half what our mechanics earn, are the salaries of refined and educated persons.

A NEW Protestant journal has appeared in Rome under the title La Roma Evangelica, and representing all the evangelical denominations. The sixth number contains a warm protest by Gavazzi against those who would have Evangelicals to be Deists or Rationalists; an address by Salvatore Ferretti, and the commencement of the Lives of the Popes, by Sciarelli; also several notices. The new journal is bi-monthly, edited by Prof. N. Nardi-Greco, and printed in Borgo Vecchio, "near the Vatican."

SPURGEON, a free communion Baptist, is again at work with renewed health. The quarterly meeting of the Pastors' College was a joyful session on account of his presence and the cheering report of work done. During the past year the 169 pastors sent out by this college have baptized 1,738 believers. In seven years they have baptized 13,029. A new college-building is to be erected, for which $25,000 have been quietly collected by Mr. Spurgeon, almost unknown to the public—free-will offerings from very dear friends of the cause.

A CORRESPONDENT of the Episcopal Register from New York city mentions quite a number of Episcopalian clergymen in that city who are able extemporaneous speakers. Among them are the names of Stephen H. Tyng, D. D., rector of St. George's church, Rev. Dr. Haight, Rev. H. C. Potter, Rev. Dr. Smith, Rev. Dr. Montgomery and Rev. Dr. Heber Newton. In respect to extemporaneous speaking, the writer says the day of intellectual buckram has well-nigh passed away. The church has been mobilized, and with a loss of some dignity has made a solid gain in freedom of speech.

THE Catholic Almanac gives us the Roman Catholic statistics of the United States. According to this authority there are at present in this country seven archbishops, fifty-eight bishops, besides four episcopal sees or positions vacant, 4,398 priests, a very large number of clerical students, 5,368 churches built, besides 867 chapels, and 133 churches building. The Catholic population of all the dioceses except eighteen amounts to 3,539,000, which the Pilot says "is probably less than half the Catholic population of the country." But these "populations" are all given in round numbers, and are probably greatly exaggerated, as all ecclesiastical estimates are.

ITALY is now placed upon the list of the mission-fields of the American Board. We learn from the Congregationalist that Rev. W. S. Alexander is to be transferred from Austria to the new mission, and that another missionary is to be sent there as soon as possible to take hold of the work with him. "This is an opportune moment to take this step, and if judiciously conducted, by avoiding the sectarian differences and jealousies that unhappily exist among the Protestants in Rome, the board's move into Italy will have the pillar of promise before it. The American and Foreign Christian Union has withdrawn from that field, leaving it clear to its sister society.

"THE JEWS AND PALESTINE.—A New Departure.—We find in the Jewish Times a report of the Jewish commission sent out from this city to Jerusalem. The report discourages all emigration thither, a fact which the London Times says "is an additional argument against the folly of encouraging the emigration of the Jews to a country which has no other claim than that of a venerable monument of the past." The report suggests "the general elimination from all Jewish prayer-books of the portions referring to the hopes of Israel in the restitution of the Holy Land to the possession of Israel, and the rebuilding of the temple by Divine Providence."—Methodist.

THE General Theological Library of Boston, though less than eleven years old, numbers 600 members. Its increase of books has been on the average 1,000 a year, and they are now circulating in forty-two towns and villages of Massachusetts and New Hampshire. Books are taken to any distance. It was founded for the benefit of all the religious denominations, is managed, supported and used by all. About half of the persons using the library and reading-room are clergymen, while the other half are laymen and females. The rooms are open ten hours every secular day, and all religious readers and students will do well to visit them, and learn how valuable is the sacred literature there to be found.

THE "SANTHALS" OF INDIA.—Since last May a spirit of inquiry has pervaded this wild tribe of northern India. Two hundred and twenty adults have been baptized. Seven villages have, in whole or in part, embraced Christianity, and the interest is spreading widely in all directions. Many inquirers are coming to the missionaries, and these excellent men are greatly straightened for help. The most hopeful thing about this movement is that it is being mainly pushed forward by the people themselves. Not a single man among the converts is put upon mission pay. A few teachers are paid very small salaries, and of the former native helpers the highest salary paid to any one is six rupees, and that to an ordained native preacher! All the converts are learning to read, and the best spirit prevails among them.

THE Woman's Methodist Episcopal Missionary Society (American,) which is but three years old, had the first year about 100 auxiliary societies. This year over 1,000, with a membership of over 10,000. The receipts for the first year were $7,000, the second year $22,000, this year $48,500. The society support five missionaries in India, four in China, 100 girls at the Bareilly Orphanage and has purchased a Ladies' Home at Lucknow. It has also done much Zenana and school work in both India and China. Miss Clara A. Swain, M. D., of Bareilly, besides treating 950 patients at the mission house, has made during the year 325 professional visits. Sixteen girls are studying medicine with Miss Swain. A fine location has been given the society, by the Nawab of Rampore, for hospital purposes.

THE number of the Nazarenes, a Baptist sect known in Wurtemburg and Switzerland as Frolichianer, who believe in regeneration by baptism, has been greatly increased of late throughout Hungary. As they refuse to do military service, as well as to swear in court, although their moral reputation is good, they have been exposed to a great deal of opposition, if not absolute persecution. Some of this persuasion in the southern district of Hungary have suffered severely in the way of fines and imprisonment on account of their faith. In particular a man and his son are instanced in a communication from Tregh, who were imprisoned a year since, on account of their religious convictions, whose imprisonment was occasionally varied by their being compelled to march around the market-place with a Bible suspended from their necks.

ACCOUNTS of the great Conference of Missionaries from all parts of India, held at Allahabad during Christmas week, are just reaching us. It was a notable gathering—the first of its kind—representing all the evangelical missions now established in that empire, both English and American. The meeting-place was the spacious Park of the American Presbyterian mission, on the banks of the Jumna, where a camp of fifty tents was pitched for the accommodation of the missionaries, who numbered over 130. As for the exercises, the programme was a weighty one—forty papers having been read and discussed during the six days' sessions, embracing every subject of interest to the Conference, as "Preaching to the Hindoos," "State of the Churches," "The Christian Village System," "Brahma Somaj," etc. How much work was done may be inferred from the length of the sessions, which began at seven o'clock in the morning with a prayer meeting, and ended at nearly ten in the evening. Altogether, it was an impressive and inspiring Conference—a union of Christians such as India has probably never witnessed before. Perhaps the most refreshing meeting of the entire week, says one paper, was the united communion service on the last Sabbath of the old year, when almost every section of the Christian church had a representative, and almost every country—at least Europe, Asia and America. "English Episcopalians and American Methodists sat side by side; Irish Presbyterians and Scotch Free Churchmen united in the same service; German Lutherans and English Baptists took the same cup, and all felt how much nearer they were drawn to Christ and one another, by fellowship in his death, than they were separated by denominational differences and theological controversies."—Christian Union.

IT IS NOT OFTEN, says the Christian Union, that we hear anything from that vast stretch of territory lying north of us in the cold front of the continent, where Esquimaux, stunted Indians and the Hudson's Bay Company alone are supposed to thrive; and what intelligence does come is generally far from being of a religious character. But that region has a colonial bishop over it; and he has lately been to England, and given, in his public addresses, some interesting facts respecting his bleak and extensive charge. The headquarters of this mission (called Moosonee) is Moose, which is seventeen days' journey from the head of Lake Superior, and the bishop's diocese is so large that he can visit all the stations but once in four years, and then only by traveling over 2,000 miles a year. The people in the charge are mixed, settlers, besides Indians and Esquimaux. The Indians are not the warlike rovers of our Western prairies, but a quiet race, and three-fourths of them are now Christians. Among the Esquimaux but little missionary work has been done, and Bishop Horden calls for one or two laborers for this department of his field; and he gives assurance that of all the people with whom he has come in contact, he has not met any more docile or more desirous of receiving instruction than the poor Esquimaux living on the borders of Rupert's Land, on the Littlewhale river. If any man who wishes to engage in that work should consider the cost, he would be 600 miles from Moose Factory, and entirely secluded from pleasant intercourse. The bishop has been there himself at the beginning of August, when it was quite impossible to find the river in consequence of the vast masses of ice which lay at its mouth. Nevertheless, says the bishop, the Esquimaux are a most interesting people, and labor among them is sure to be rewarded. In fact the whole field is encouraging, and one interesting feature of it is that the Hudson's Bay Company gives the work a liberal support, having erected no less than five churches in the diocese without any expense to the Church Missionary Society. Bishop Horden has been blessed in the prosecution of his work, or he could not, he says, have remained in this field for twenty-two years; and he expects to return to his diocese soon to continue his labors.

The Wisdom of the Preacher.

Preaching is something more than mere teaching, and, it may be also, something higher. If it were only teaching, the Bible class, and not the pulpit, would be the field of the preacher's labors. Beyond piety and facility in imparting instruction, he would require no other qualification, and there would be no distinctive and special call of God. But, after all, the teaching is essential, and should have prominence in our ministrations. It is written: "And because the preacher was wise, he still taught the people knowledge." Paul was after the same style, "warning every man, and teaching every man in all wisdom." Thus testifies the Old Testament and the New—the author of Ecclesiastes, and the great apostle to the Gentiles. The advice to Timothy to "give attendance to reading, to exhortation, to doctrine," exhibits the teaching element to be developed in the labors of the evangelist. And Jesus himself, in addition to his own example and character as "the great Teacher," declares: "Therefore every scribe which is instructed unto the kingdom of heaven is like unto a man that is a householder, which bringeth forth out of his treasure things new and old." The notion of teaching as a feeding is here probably in the old store and the new. The flock of God must be fed, "nourished up in the words of faith and of good doctrine." The food must not only be appetizing, but it must be nutritive and wholesome. Whatever the dressings and flavorings may be, there must be a substantial provision to build up and perfect every man in Jesus Christ.

It is a noticeable fact that doctrine and exhortation have declined together. Although the hortatory and the didactic are usually regarded as scarcely compatible in the same mind, and are considered as belonging to very different temperaments and orders of intellect, still they seem strangely enough to decay or to flourish together. If the exhorter is almost obsolete in some quarters, so also is the doctrinal and expository preacher. The common opinion on this subject is doubtless wrong.—"Reading, exhortation, doctrine" are put together by Paul. The fathers, especially in Methodism, preached habitually what would be called doctrinal sermons, and their exhortations were like the march of a tornado. A revival of this kind of preaching would doubtless awaken the old-time hortatory gifts and power. We once asked a brother to exhort after another had preached. In a very perplexed way he replied that "he saw no point to splice on." It is not difficult to see that the exhortation must have a good foundation, and that a clear and forcible exhibition of Scripture truth is the very life and inspiration of an appeal to move men to repentance and holiness. We imagine that Wesley exhorted with terrific force after one of his clear and conclusive expositions. Whitfield, whom we usually think of as delivering those wonderful orations, and as existing in an atmosphere of emotion, habitually read and expounded the Scriptures, verse by verse and chapter by chapter, to the people. The pulpit power of Jonathan Edwards has probably never been excelled; but the weapons of his warfare were doctrinal discourses, which he wielded and hurled with the fire and force of thunderbolts. His own explicit testimony is that doctrinal preaching was most successful in promoting and carrying forward the remarkable revival which prevailed in his day.

Robert Hall somewhere says, in substance, that while expository is less exciting than topical preaching to the preacher, it is more instructive to the people. Paushon is a model preacher for the richness and fullness of scriptural matter, and for the inimitable manner in which he unfolds the meaning of his text. Let it be said to the credit of Spurgeon that he gives good gospel measure, and usually explains what he takes in hand. He may indeed be set down as a doctrinal and expository preacher, and, wonderful to tell! one of the most popular and useful. Dr. McClintock, all in all the best of American preachers, made his sermons out of his texts. He sought for no quaint and far-fetched topical titles, but gave the mind of the Spirit, as exhibited in what he took in hand. The sermon is rooted in the text even as the shrub, laden with foliage and blossoms, is rooted in the soil of the garden. We might mention examples of eminent preachers among us, as the Pierces, Bishop Doggett, Bishop Kavanaugh and others, not a few, we are glad to say, who preach "the word." Our young men have the purest and best models in their chief pastors; but the sermon literature of the period, as it teems from the press, is full of pernicious examples. They are often exceedingly thin and vapory—moral speculations and sentimental twaddle. We fear this evil is spreading. The Brooklyn sensationalists are multiplying followers to the great damage of the church, and to the serious detriment of the pulpit. We are in danger of getting away from the inspired models, and from the wisdom of the preacher. "He still taught the people knowledge."

The people are ignorant exceedingly of religious truth. In general they are mere smatterers in science and philosophy, and worse smatterers still in the things of God. They may know more than they practice; but do they understand? General intelligence and high civilization do not necessarily imply religious knowledge. The people need to be taught; and without this kind of preaching, while the world is full of churches and Sunday orations are plentiful, there will be "a famine of the hearing of the words of the Lord." A good old-fashioned sermon now-a-days on repentance, justification, the new birth or the future punishment of the wicked would be a refreshing novelty in some sections. If the preacher is a fisher, he must also be a feeder of men; and, after all, it is the gospel net rather than the baited hook to which the Savior referred. A distaste for instruction there may be, and many may be repelled by the preacher's method, but results will justify the course adopted. It is not the drawing but the saving of the people to which we must look. And yet why may not the attractive and the saving be united? "Because the preacher was wise, he still taught the people knowledge," but it is added most suggestively that he "sought to find out acceptable words"—words of delight, as the margin has it—"and that which was written was upright, even words of truth." Let all imitate, as they may, this wisest of the ancients, and put their "apples of gold in pictures of silver."

A Good Rule.

Boswell said to Dr. Johnson: "It appears to me, sir, to be very difficult to unite a due attention to this world and that which is to come; for if we engage eagerly in the affairs of this life we are apt to be forgetful of a future state; and, on the other hand, a steady contemplation of the awful concerns of eternity renders all objects here so insignificant as to make us indifferent and negligent about them?" To this Dr. Johnson replied: "Sir, Dr. Cheyne has laid down a rule to himself on this subject which should be imprinted on every mind: 'To neglect nothing to secure my eternal peace, more than if I had been certified I should die within the day; nor to mind anything that my secular obligations demand of me, less than if I had been insured to live fifty years more.'" This certainly is a wise rule. Dr. Johnson was right when he said that it ought to be imprinted on every mind. It is not only the teaching of purest religious wisdom, but the highest expression of true philosophy. It is very certain that our heavenly Father does not wish his children to be gloomy and dark-minded. There is an inheritance of sunshine in a bright countenance, and a fountain of comfort in a cheerful heart. To think too much and too constantly of our own frailty, and look always upon the dark side of death, would have a tendency to gloom the heart and cover the face with shadows. Therefore, to a certain extent, man wisely forgets his own mortality, and loses sight of the useful concerns of eternity. There is no wisdom, however, but the supremest folly, in man in becoming so forgetful and so absorbed in his earthly surroundings as to render him indifferent or forgetful of the approach of death. His rule should be the one laid down by the pious Scotchman: "To neglect nothing to secure my eternal peace, more than if I had been certified I should die within the day: nor to mind anything that my secular obligations demand of me, less than if I had been insured to live fifty years more."

Yet this wisdom is not in man. He can turn his eye to no single object about him in the world of nature but that contains reminders of the slight tenure he has upon life. An exhaustive effort is being made continually to teach him wisdom, but he is deaf to the pleading voice and blind to the legible words. An eccentric friend, at whose house we were once visiting, complained of a little fancy brass-mounted clock that he said was knowingly and wickedly ticking away his life. Certainly there are tones of warning even in these insensate tickings—a constant outcry of Time's swift flight. But who are properly arrested by the certain fact of his passage? Alas! but few. To husband our resources, to attend faithfully to all secular obligations, and at the same time make just as due preparation for our eternal interest, is the only true wisdom. Men live as though life was only a hollow laugh—a ray of sunshine, to last for a moment, and then go out in perpetual blackness. In point of earthly duration it is but a moment—a dream. But in point of fact man is as undying as the great God that made him.

"It is not all of life to live,
Nor all of death to die."

Man is to live forever. He does not die with the body. There is life in the bare grain, though the parent stock, the body, perisheth. It dies in order to life. Much more so with man. Temporal death is only the gate opening to life proper—the life of eternity. Now, with the certainty of this fact staring him in the face, is it not strange beyond all expression that man should forget his own frailty? that its seriousness should be trifled with? that its paramount interests should be crushed down and smothered up in the petty, transitory things of earth?

Among many others, we may assign three reasons for this incongruous action on the part of man: First. The fact that dissolution is gradual in its coming—that time moves stealthily along in velvet slippers, and the end comes as a thief in the night. Then, in earnest harmony with this, we find a strong auxiliary to forgetfulness in the exciting pursuits of the world. There is rivalry and opposition to be met at every turn in life, so that in the very act of living men forget the opposite, death. As in the constant strain for wealth, pleasure and honor men not unfrequently disqualify themselves for their enjoyment when possessed, they as frequently disqualify themselves for dying. But, after all, perhaps the main reason is found in the fact that men do not like to think of death, and would not like to think about it if the way was never so clear. So the two reasons above are strengthened, and thoughts of death are banished.

We would not act so foolish a part in secular matters. Preparation would be made, in the midst of other claims, for a long journey. A wise man will not permit "seed-time" to pass before getting ready to plant, neither will he wait for death to get ready for eternity.

For Mexico.

The preachers should be stirring up the people on the subject of missions, and especially calling for money for the Mexican mission. The following letter to Bishop Keener indicates a right spirit and an excellent method.

BISHOP J. C. KEENER—Dear Bro.: Last Sunday, after reading the last part of your letter to Dr. McFerrin to my congregation, I took up a collection, and the result is here—$45 in currency and $10 in gold. It is no use for me to wish that this was ten times as much as it is, unless the wishing would be a sort of multiplication, which it is not. We pray that this contribution may do as much good as any other of the same amount. Our little ones contribute twenty-five cents apiece. My wife sends you the $10 in gold.

We earnestly pray the Lord to bestow upon the churches the "grace of liberality" toward the Mexican mission, so that we may be able to plant the gospel in the City of Mexico, and from that center its roots may spread through the whole land.

Your friend, C. W. CARTER.

MANSFIELD, La., April 7, 1873.

OUR old and esteemed friend and brother, Moses U. Payne, says in a private note:

"I see Dr. Moss is dead. He was a valuable member. Since I was in your city old Bro. Price too, and William H. Dameron, the oldest and most substantial members of that charge. I hope the good Lord will raise up others in their stead, and the work will still go on. Your paper with me is always a welcome visitor, and I believe it is not a whit behind the other Advocates."

Great Bible Meeting in Rome.

La Roma Evangelica of March 15 says: "On the tenth instant took place in the Argentina Theater the great meeting which had been announced by large placards posted all over the city. What an imposing spectacle! The whole place was crowded with the most cultivated citizens, Roman and foreign. Pit, gallery and boxes, the latter for payment, were crammed with persons of both sexes and distinguished position. We remarked several deputies members of Parliament. It was one of those scenes which never will be obliterated from memory, and which religious history will proudly register in her ever-living pages.

"Here in Rome, once mother of the republic, then servant of the Cæsars, and afterward slave of the Popes, who swathed her in ignorance and superstition during centuries of religious despotism, and at last smothered every effort toward political or religious liberty under infallibility; here in Rome, so humiliated, so degraded, under sacerdotal servitude, where the Index poisoned every holy work, and the Inquisition extinguished every throb of generous endeavor; in this Rome, fabricated on the spoils of a conquered world, into an immense sacristy hung with saints and Madonnas, or rather into a huge confessional for the Catholic universe; here, where the vicar of the Vatican had made for himself a god of silver and gold, and given up to temporal cares, amid the barbaric luxuries and delights of the Vatican, full of Falernian and Bolsenor eels, and finest grapes, preaching to credulous throngs the words of Christ: 'Sell what ye have and follow me;' here, in fine, where a couple of years ago the possession of a Bible had been a crime which the Loyolaites of the Vatican had punished by at least the stake—here was held such a splendid Bible meeting as may lead to those reforms and transformations necessary to make the church Christian once more. Ideas are marching; the mist of the papacy is dissipating at the breath of heaven, and the gospel of Christ even here shall break the fetters of the Pope.

"At half-past seven o'clock prayer was offered and a hymn sung, accompanied by the harmonium. Admiral Fishbourne took the chair and read an address. Mr. Wall read the report. Prof. Comba delivered a speech which was hailed with reiterated plaudits. Mr. Hoare spoke in English, and Signor Meille interpreted. Signor Rosetti next spoke; then followed a hymn; and next came Gavazzi, hailed with three cheers of applause. He began: 'I am like God, because I am infallible,' and on this terrible text delivered a speech of which the conclusion was, we must clasp the Bible to our breasts and push the syllabus away from us. Mr. Piggott was the next speaker, who closed by saying that the quotations which the Italians praised in the English were beneficial effects of the Bible.

"Then another hymn was sung, and Mr. Stoare, apparently a Scotchman, spoke, Mr. Wall translating. Signor Cocordo followed, remarking on the unrest of nations which have not the Bible. The secretary read the names of the committee, and the assembly of two thousand was dismissed amid enthusiastic applause, but in perfect order."

An ordinary political journal, La Liberta, on the twelfth said: "We should never have supposed that in a single year the Protestant propaganda would have made such great progress. In ten years of such labor who can say what may result?"

Missionary Notes.

The Old School Presbyterian says the children of the Southern Presbyterian Church have been doing wonderfully liberal things for foreign missions. A little while ago they provided the means to build a boys' school-house at Hangchow, China. After that, as the letter of Secretaries Wilson and McIlwaine informs us, they quickly furnished money to put up a decent building for Mrs. Randolph's girls' school, at the same place. And now they are to contribute to the erection of a school-house at Campinas, Brazil. We have no doubt they will respond nobly to the appeal in behalf of this very important enterprise.

The foreign mission office at Columbia, South Carolina, have received a letter from Rev. J. Rockwell Smith, who had reached his field of labor at Pernambuco, Brazil. On the way out, the vessel in which he was a passenger had a narrow escape from destruction by fire. He reports that no difficulties present themselves in the way of establishing a mission in Brazil that would not be found in connection with any new position that might be taken in any other part of the evangelized world.

From Taos, New Mexico, we learn that progress is being made in the establishment of the mission by Rev. J. M. Roberts, although many hinderances are interposed by the Roman Catholic priest.

It illustrates the endurance of woman that of the first company of missionaries who went to the Sandwich Islands in 1819, the three that survived latest were the widows of Thurston, Whitney and Ruggles. Two of these have recently died, leaving only Mrs. Thurston to tell the story of that wonderful year.—Christian Intelligencer.

A GENTLEMAN, well known for his large benefactions, was asked what part of his income he was in the habit of contributing to the Lord's treasury. "I do not know," said he; "I do very much as the woman did who was famous for the excellence of her rhubarb pies. She put in as much sugar as her conscience would allow, and then shut her eyes and put in a handful more. I give all my conscience approves, and then add a handful without counting it."

REV. CHARLES WILSON, of the South Carolina Conference, died at the parsonage of the Eastern Orange circuit, April 13, aged seventy-one years.

Woman's Work—China.

In a letter from our devoted missionary in China, Mrs. M. J. Lambuth, dated February 27, 1873, her heart seems greatly aroused to the field of usefulness open to Christian women in China, and the help that may be afforded them by the women of the church at home. She thus refers to the words of cheer and substantial aid recently sent her from a society of ladies organized for the Methodist Episcopal Church South, Baltimore:

"We have longed for such societies, feeling sure that by them our hands would be more strongly upheld, and we be better enabled to work among women and children. Last mail brought us a letter from Mrs. Juliana Hayes, president of 'The Woman's Bible Mission at Home and Abroad,' of the Methodist Episcopal Church South in Baltimore, and who inquires what they can do for us. A greater pleasure has not been ours for many days and weeks—yes, years you might say.

"The women and children of China are especially the objects to which America's Christian women should turn their hearts at this time (of course, after the wants of home have, in a measure, been met.) I feel to thank and carry with me a spirit of thanksgiving for this most acceptable letter of Mrs. Hayes, and I do trust that other churches will organize the same kind of societies. You may remember Mrs. Hayes as being the wife of a merchant living in Richmond nineteen years ago, and with whom Mrs. Lambuth and I stopped when we were all there, previous to leaving for China. She speaks of that time—says, too, that she has been a widow for fifteen years. She says: 'The vicissitudes common to our beloved Southern people brought me to Baltimore.' And now she comes to form a link in the great chain of woman's mission in China. Would that I could lead you, my dear friend, to know, in heart, how I rejoice over this good news. Tell it to all your good, pious mothers, sisters and daughters, and invite them to come up to the help of ignorant, degraded heathen women in China. Are there not some to support a school—provide means whereby these women can be gathered into classes and taught? Can there not be a pious woman found to come and live among and work for them? Let us ask God for such a prize—such a blessing."

Are there not many churches and women who will follow the good example of the Baltimore churches and Mrs. Hayes?—Mrs. M. L. Kelly, in Nashville Christian Advocate.

College Items.

Some gentleman who withholds his name has bequeathed $25,000 to the Massachusetts Institution of Technology.

The trustees of Hamline Methodist University have accepted the eighty acres offered to them half way between St. Paul and Minneapolis for a site, and good Minnesotians are busy raising money for the institution. The land is worth about $80,000.

The centenary of Hampden Sydney College, Virginia, occurs in 1875, and its friends are moving to raise $200,000 by that time as a permanent endowment fund to commemorate the completion of the hundredth year of the institution.

The trustees of Girard College, Philadelphia, propose to create a working department, to carry out still more fully the design of Mr. Girard, who desired that the orphans should be instructed in facts and things, and so trained as to acquire habits of industry. The work is to be limited to manufacturing paper boxes and tinware, until it is found expedient to add other departments of productive industry. Experts to be employed to conduct the business for a percentage of the profits; the boys to have moderate wages, to give zest to their labor. The Lawrence Todd legacy, hitherto unused, now amounting to $28,000, will provide buildings and appliances for the department.—New York Observer.

THE spontaneous manner, says the Christian Union, in which a worthy object is often taken up by our Methodist brethren was happily illustrated the other day at the New York Conference in Hudson City. Among the preachers put on the retired list was Rev. Philip Hoyt, who had been forty years in the ministry; and in referring to his case, a speaker, Mr. Wakely, said, in some feeling remarks, that Dr. Hoyt was positively worn out in the service, and was now leaving it without money and without a home, and the Conference ought to give him one. Mr. Wakely added that he would give as much as any present toward buying such a home, whereupon Dr. King responded: "I'll meet you with $500." Mr. Wakely then grasped his hand with the words: "Very well, I meet you, and that makes $1,000. Now who will help along?" Voices immediately shouted out sums of $5, $10, $25, etc., until in less than twenty minutes enough was raised to buy a small house, and the veteran preacher's heart was made glad accordingly.

THE REVIVAL SPIRIT IN MEMPHIS. The good word of God preached, and prayer offered in faith, God is blessing unto the salvation of souls. At Central the protracted services are increasing in interest. Six conversions were reported on Tuesday last, the first, we understand, that have occurred in the new house. The Rev. S. B. Surratt and the brethren of his charge are encouraged. He informs us that he has received seventy-one members during this year. At First church Dr. Rosser continues his zealous labors, and much good has been done. Congregations are large and deeply interested in the earnest and able ministrations of Dr. Rosser, whose faith is unabated; and with the continued co-operation of the pastor, Dr. Slater, and his people, it is hoped that a great work of grace will yet be accomplished.—Western Methodist, April 26.

SUSTAINING grace supplies a richer blessing than the removal of affliction.

New Orleans Dist. Camp Meeting.

The trustees of the camp ground, at a recent meeting, resolved to hold another camp meeting at the ground near Biloxi, beginning on Friday, August 1. A meeting of all interested in the camp meeting is called to be held at the Carondelet Street church on Monday night, May 5, at half-past seven o'clock. The object of the meeting is to confer in reference to ways and means, and to enlist our people in the support of the enterprise. There is a debt at present of over $1,300 to be met, and the trustees will be compelled to expend about $1,500 more to make adequate preparations for the meeting in August. This amount of say $2,500 should be raised or pledged at once in order that the trustees may go forward without embarrassment. We would suggest that persons or parties who intend to tent communicate at once with the president of the board, W. H. Foster, of this city. We suppose there will be a public boarding-tent, and lodging-tents also, for the accommodation of visitors; but it will be well for all who purpose attending to make their own arrangements beforehand. This will prevent disappointment and inconvenience, and insure their comfort. The friends of the camp meeting, whether in New Orleans or at a distance, who wish to contribute toward meeting the expenses can remit to J. L. Dunnica, of this city, treasurer of the board of trustees. There are now three months of preparation, and by moving thus early we hope to have everything fully ready before rather than a little after the time.

Rev. Greenberry Garrett.

MR. EDITOR: The article in the ADVOCATE of April 8, from the pen of the Rev. A. D. McVoy, giving an account of the death of my much loved cousin, Greenberry Garrett, and incidentally of his positions in the councils of the church, omits some items that should be added in justice to the memory and services of the faithful minister, and the trusts that were reposed in him by his brethren of the ministry.

Bro. McVoy says he was a member of the General Conference of 1844. This is true, but it should be added that he was also a member of the convention of the Southern division of the church, which met in Louisville, Kentucky, in 1845, to provide for the complete organization of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, a delegate to the first General Conference of that church, which met in Petersburg, Virginia, in 1846, also of that held at St. Louis in 1850, and of that which met in Columbus, Georgia, in 1854, at which session the work of organization was fully consummated by the establishment of the Book Concern at Nashville.

Such a record of service, running through a decade so full of interest to Southern Methodism, is no small distinction in the history of these stirring times. Bro. McVoy will pardon this addition of facts, which he would no doubt have furnished cheerfully if before him when he wrote his kind and just tribute to this good man and minister.

Truly yours, W. GARRETT.

BRADFORD, COOSA CO., ALA., April 21, 1873.

THE death of Judge W. L. Sharkey of Mississippi, is announced in our news column. He died in Washington on the morning of April 29, aged eighty-three. For some years the judge has been in the habit of spending a part of the winter in New Orleans, so that we have of late rather claimed him and his excellent wife as citizens of New Orleans. In intellect, and as a lawyer and jurist, Judge Sharkey was the peer of the first minds in the nation. He was a gentleman of spotless honor and integrity, and we believe he had been for many years a member of the Methodist Church.

Sunday School Anniversary.

The twenty-seventh anniversary of the New Orleans District Sabbath School Union of the Methodist Episcopal Church South will take place on Sunday, the eleventh day of May, 1873, in Carondelet Street Methodist Episcopal church. Exercises by the children will commence at four o'clock P. M. On Saturday, May 10, the schools will meet at the same place, at half-past three o'clock P. M., for rehearsal.

W. H. FOSTER, Prest.

DR. GREEN informs us, says the Nashville Christian Advocate, that General Whitthorne, of Columbia, Tennessee, subscribed last week $4,200 to the endowment fund of the Vanderbilt University. We should like to hear of a good many more cases of the same sort.

IT IS beyond contradiction that unsanctified men never have communion with God; they never have what in Scripture is so termed; and it is undeniable that the saints do realize what is meant by this phrase when they are engaged in the exercises of religion.—Flavel.

Ancient Assyrian Inscriptions.

We learn from the Book-Buyer that Mr. George Smith, of the oriental department of the British Museum, has published the Chaldean account of the deluge, to which attention has recently been called, with two photographs, translation and text. The photographs are the size of the original, and comprise front and back views of the fragments, some twenty in number, from which the three different copies of the text are derived. These fragments were brought together during a search through several thousands of smaller pieces. "It is difficult," says the Book-Buyer, "to conceive anything more hopeless to an uninitiated eye than the attempt to decipher these almost indistinguishable scratches; yet, from Mr. Smith's account, it is clear that he is able not only to read, but to critically weigh and estimate the correctness of their texts. He shows that, though written in the Semitic-Assyrian language of Nineveh, they must have been translated from originals in the Babylonian language current in Lower Mesopotamia, and even then of so old a date as not always to be intelligible to the Assyrian translator. They are clearly due, in fact, to the race who founded the first oriental empire at the head of the Persian gulf, and in whose language, Semitic and Hamitic or Ethiopian elements are largely mixed. The very existence of this community, from whence human history begins, has only been known to us for a few years."

The appearance of the fragments is thus described by the London Telegraph: "All around lie—on table, chair and shelf—shaped or shapeless fragments of potsherd, yet with an evident care in their arrangement, for all are symmetrically grouped, and some are carefully cradled in cotton-wool. These bits of pantile are the oldest known books in the world's circulating library. Look closer and it will be seen that, while some are black, others white or cream-colored, others again red or pink, every piece, large or small, bears on one side a neat, close inscription in the cuneiform character. Some are as large as a boy's slate, others as small as a Barcelona nut. But the tiniest portion bears the Royal Assyrian Scripture, and may contain, for aught the visitor knows, the record of an invaluable date, fact or declaration. What astonishes the visitor, innocent of Babylonian lore, is the precision of the script. Its lines are packed together nearly as close as those of the leading columns in this journal; and each character is impressed with a delicacy and exactness of touch almost equal to type. Familiar with the large and rough style upon the Ninevite bulls, one wonders at this proof of perfect mastery over the arrow handwriting. The Mage, by long practice, can even recognize individual autographs among his precious rubbish; he knows where one scribe left off and another took up the reed or stylum. Vertically, the lines are as near as they can be 'spaced;' horizontally, the letters are often prolonged, with fine, slight dashes where the writer has wished to fill up a gap or terminate a paragraph. It is plain how they were inscribed—the ancient copyist took a fresh slab of wet clay, rolled it neatly, picked out every smallest speck or grain of grit, and, having fined off the edges and trimmed his clay page nicely, he then marked the words with a point of hardened wood or bronze, if bronze were then invented. This done, the 'copy' went to the potter's oven, where it was tenderly cooked 'to a turn,' and, having been drawn forth, was stereotyped with a vengeance, for that same page was good for thousands of years, given the protection of the warm desert-sand. We examine the 'proof,' and find each little line as clear and fine-cut as when the literary baker brought home the 'new number' of the King's Historical Magazine. There is a cunning museum chemist below stairs, who cleans these little tablets for the Mage as carefully as a jeweler 'brushing up my lady's diamonds;' and they come back to the cell where the decipherer sits, with exquisitely clean faces, every bit as new and finished as when Assurbanipal looked them over, and gave them, with a royal sign of approval, to the chief secretary of the archives to put away in the palace-cylinder. The print of an Assyrian thumb and the nib of an Assyrian pen might be found upon one or other of them—nothing is more immortal than pottery—and these have lain in the library of Nineveh for at least four thousand years without light, air or rain to mar them."

The key by which these inscriptions are deciphered was discovered twenty years ago in a sculptured rock found at Behistun, Persia, which bore inscriptions in three distinct characters. One of these characters was the arrow-headed; the others were Persic and Median or Scythian respectively, and, like the Rosetta stone in Egypt which divulged the hieroglyphics, this carved crag became the lithographed lexicon for cuneologists. Guided by the Persian writing, Sir H. Rawlinson constructed a vocabulary for arrow-headed scripture, and, though the sound of these Assyrian letters is no more known than that of hieroglyphical signs, their signification is now thereby easily and surely obtained. Only four men living, it is said, can read them. Mr. Smith has labored at his work of deciphering fourteen years. The London Telegraph has made a contract with Mr. Smith to visit Assyria and spend six months in exploring among the monuments.—Methodist.

Romulus and Remus in India.

The Amherst Student contains a letter from Prof. J. H. Seelye, dated Allahabad, India, November 23, 1872, detailing a strange fact which came under his observation in his recent travels. The letter is as follows:

"Not far from Agra, in Northern India, is a mission station of the Church Missionary Society, connected with which is an orphanage with several hundred children, now under the efficient care of the Rev. E. G. Erhardt. The region around is infested with wolves, by which, every year, numbers of children are carried off and devoured. But in two instances at least, instead of being killed and eaten, the children have been kept alive and nourished with, if not by, these beasts. Whether the story of Romulus and Remus be a myth or not, this is an actual reality, for the children themselves have been captured from among the wolves and brought to the orphanage above mentioned. They were both boys, and apparently of some seven or eight years of age when taken. They were found at different times, the last one in March of the present year.

"Some hunters, smoking wolves out of a cave, were startled when the wolves appeared by the appearance among them of a creature looking strangely human, but running rapidly on all fours like the wolves, though not so rapidly as they. He was caught with difficulty, and there was no mistaking that he was a child of human parentage, but with the habits and actions and appetites of a wild beast. The hunters brought him to the orphanage, where he was received and cared for. Though his physical form and features were sufficient to show that he was a Hindoo child, there were no other indications about him of anything human. In all other respects, in the language of Mr. Erhardt, 'a perfect animal.' He had no speech, but a whine. He would wear no clothes, tearing from him everything of the sort whenever put on. He would eat nothing but raw flesh, and when he drank he lapped the water with his tongue. Left to himself he would hide in some dark spot during the day, from which he would come out at night, and prowl about the inclosure, picking up bones, if any were to be found, and ravenously gnawing them. It at first seemed impossible for him to walk erect, but after much difficulty he was taught to do so, and also to use a fork and a spoon, and to drink like a human being. Though treated with the utmost care and with great patience and kindness by the Christian hands and hearts which received him, he pined away and died, after he had been in the orphanage a little over four months. In all this time he could not be made to utter a word; he was never seen to smile, nor show any signs of joy or shame or gratitude. But Mr. Erhardt, who gave me this account, assured me that his face looked more intelligent than the average Hindoo children, and that his color and features indicated that his parentage must have been of a family of high caste. The other boy I saw myself, a few days since, at the orphanage, where he was brought about six years ago, having been then captured, much as was the first-mentioned boy, and having shown precisely the same habits as belonged to him. He has not yet spoken a word, but has exchanged the whine, which was his only utterance, for sounds expressive of pleasure, and apparently also of gratitude. He no longer prefers raw flesh for food, but eats bread and fruits with ravenous avidity. He walks erect, but with a strangely awkward gait, throwing out his hands with every step. His hands are perfectly formed, but he uses them awkwardly. A piece of bread tossed to him from a little distance, which he was eager to get, he could not catch, but let it fall clumsily to the ground. He wears clothes, to which he was at first as adverse as the other boy. His forehead is low, but his face would hardly be called dull, and certainly not idiotic. His eyes have a wild and restless but not an inquiring look. His jaws are not protruding, and his teeth are well formed and thoroughly human. On his left cheek are scars bearing plainly the marks of teeth, which he must have been fearfully bitten. He has been taught to do some kinds of work, but not faithfully. He seems to have lost all desire to escape; he mingles freely with the other children, among whom he has his favorites. When the boy first mentioned was brought to the orphanage this one was made to understand that he must teach the other how to eat and drink and walk, and much of the improvement of the younger one in these respects seemed due to the efforts of the older one.

"The inference from these extraordinary instances is strangely at variance with many affirmations now current. It does not point in the least to man's derivation from the lower creation, but exactly the reverse. If we only look accurately and think closely, we shall find much more evidence, both in nature and in history, that the lower creation is man's descendant rather than his ancestor."

Books and Periodicals.

CLINICAL LECTURES ON VARIOUS DISEASES. By Nathan S. Davis, A. M., M. D. Edited by Frank H. Davis, M. D. Chicago: J. J. Spalding & Co., 1873.

This is a handsome 12mo, 262 pages, cream-tinted paper. The volume contains eighteen lectures, and embraces a large amount of practical information in reference to the nature and treatment of the principal diseases. Dr. Davis has long been at the head of his profession, and his large experience and attainments make these lectures peculiarly valuable.

THE LOGIC OF ACCOUNTS. By E. G. Folsom, A. M. A. S. Barnes & Co., New York and Chicago, 1873. 128 pages.

The work purports to be a new exposition of the theory and practice of double-entry book-keeping, based in value as being of two primary classes, commercial and ideal, and reducing all the exchanges to nine equations and thirteen results. Price, $2, sent by mail.

MEMOIR OF SAMUEL JOSEPH MAY. Boston: Roberts Bros., 1873.

Mr. May was a preacher of liberal Christianity, a great anti-slavery champion, and, in spite of both, apparently a good man. The most of his ministerial life was spent in Connecticut. He was born in 1797, and died in 1871. From Knin & Co., New Orleans.

MARRIED.

TALLICHET—COMPTON.—January 7, 1873, by Rev. R. H. Crawford, Mr. A. C. Tallichet to Miss Kate R. Compton, all of Demopolis, Alabama.

ROYAL—QUINNEY.—By the same, March 25, Mr. Henry S. Royal to Miss Maggie Quinney, of Marengo county.

WAIT—SHELLEY.—By the same, on the tenth of April, at Easonville, St. Clair County, Alabama, Mr. Jesse G. Wait to Miss H. M. Shelley.

JOHNSON—HUDSON.—By Rev. B. F. Alexander, at Tensas chapel, in the parish of Tensas, Louisiana, on the ninth of April, 1873, Mr. Joseph E. Johnson, of Concordia parish, to Miss Amanda J. Hudson, of Tensas parish.

DYEING, RENOVATING, DRESSING AND CLEANING.—The establishment of Messrs. E. Boursier & Co. propose to renew as near as possible to making old clothes new. They can certainly make a vast improvement in the appearance of soiled suits, and at a time when every one should exercise the most careful economy. We refer to see their factory, on the corner of Louisiana avenue and Chippewa street, assuming such proportions. See their advertisement elsewhere.

THE life-size steel engraving of General R. E. Lee is sold in the interest of the Lee Monumental Association. Messrs. H. L. DeLea & Co., No. 112 Camp street, the agents for this State and Mississippi, report that only $4,536.25 are now needed to complete the original plan. Messrs. DeLea & Co. have yet a large portion of their territory to dispose of to reliable canvassers, and we recommend their advertisement to the attention of our readers.

PLUMS.—A most useful and important article to householders and plantations is the improved Blatchley cucumber-wood pump, for which our worthy fellow-citizens, Messrs. Danner & Tessmer, 288 Toland street, are general Southern agents, as they are also for Tingley's patent horizontal ice-cream freezers, and commission merchants in lumber, staves, naval stores, etc. See advertisement in another column.

EAGLE COTTON GINS.—We call the attention of planters and others to the advertisement of W. L. Cushing, No. 61 St. Charles street, the sole agent for the Southern States of the Eagle cotton gin. Mr. Cushing is an extensive dealer in all kinds of machinery, and obtained many premiums, medals, etc., for the articles on exhibition at the present State Fair.

MACHINIST AND ENGINE BUILDER. We take pleasure in directing attention to the advertisement of Mr. Lewis Johnson, engine and machine builder, corner of Julia, Delta and Water streets. Mr. Johnson is ready to receive and execute orders for repairing and building engines and machines, and will fill orders for castings of all kinds.

MINERAL WATERS ON DRAUGHT. Aleix & Gaudet, corner of Bourbon and Customhouse streets, advertise Vichy, Kissengen, Seltzer, Bhalon and other mineral waters on draught at five cents per glass.

TRAVELERS by rail or river via Cairo can obtain full information of Mr. James T. Tucker, No. 26 Carondelet street, general Southern agent of the Illinois Central Railroad Company.

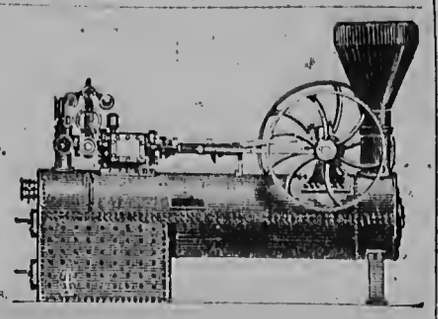
MATTRESSES.—Messrs. Watson & Phillips, manufacturers of the unique machine-filled mattress, 135 Peters street, claim for this mattress a superiority over those made by hand.

COAL, wholesale and retail, delivered by boat-load or less on the coast, and shipped in casks or bulk, at the lowest market rates, by B. D. Wood & Bros., 106 Common street.

THE National line of iron steamships sails weekly between New York and Queenstown and Liverpool. For information apply to P. F. Gogarty, agent, 151 Camp street.

PERIQUE TOBACCO.—Mr. E. Bourgeois is the agent in this city of the celebrated Grand Point Perique tobacco, and has always on hand a large stock, for sale in lots to suit.

OIL, LAMPS, TRIMMINGS, etc., at the two stores of the Septoline Oil Company, No. 82 Camp and 15 Dauphine street.



NAVRA & OFFNER, No. 174 Canal street, offer a complete line of China and crockery-ware at reasonable prices.

IMPROVED

EAGLE COTTON GINS.

The great popularity of the EAGLE COTTON GINS is established from the well-known fact that they are the most reliable, strongest and best built Cotton Gins ever made. The Eagle Cotton Gin runs lighter than any other gin, thus having a great advantage for planters who wish to run by horse power. All the prominent planters who use the Eagle Cotton Gin will certify to the fact that when their cotton is sent to market it always brings the highest market price, as no other gin can produce a finer or a better sample of cotton than the Eagle Cotton Gins. Over seventeen thousand of the Eagle Cotton Gins have been made and sold. During a period of twenty years the makers and has had the agency of the Eagle Cotton Gin in New Orleans. He has never had a gin returned or rejected out of the immense number sold. The saw cylinders of all the Eagle Cotton Gins are twelve inches in diameter, which is two inches larger than most other kinds of gins, thus giving one forty-saw gin more teeth, and they are more than equal to the fifty-saw gins of other makers, who use only a ten-inch cylinder, and the same great advantage of the twelve-inch cylinder in larger-sized gins can be easily estimated. Planters who wish a reliable cotton gin, with an established reputation, can purchase an Eagle Cotton Gin with a certainty that they are not making an untried experiment, but will obtain a cotton gin which is indorsed by the oldest and largest planters in the country as the best in use. A large stock of the Eagle Cotton Gins are always kept on sale in New Orleans, ready for immediate shipment. Planters should be particular to state if they want right or left-hand motion gins.

The Humpbacked Maiden.

A GERMAN STORY.

There lived once a poor woman with an only child, a little daughter, who was so pale and small that she was quite different from all other children. When this poor woman went out with her little girl people would turn round to look after them and then whisper to each other. And when the little girl asked her mother why every one stared at them so, the mother would tell her, "Perhaps it is because you have such a pretty new frock," and so the child was satisfied. But when they got back home the mother would clasp her little one in her arms and cry, kissing her over and over again: "My child, my darling! what will become of thee when I am gone? No one knows what an angel she is; no, not even her father."

Not long after the poor mother was taken suddenly ill, and on the ninth day she died. The father of this little girl was in despair; he threw himself on his dead wife and vowed he would be buried with her. His friends, however, persuaded him to be comforted at last, and he consoled himself at the end of the year by taking another wife, younger, prettier and richer than the first; but, alas! not half so good!

As for the child, since her mother's death she had done nothing but sit in the window-seat and look up into the sky from morning till night, for nobody troubled themselves now to take her out. So she became paler than ever, and never grew a bit the whole year.

But when the new mother came she said to herself: "Now, then, I shall go about again outside the town, into the merry sunshine and along the beautiful roads with the green hedges, where the lovely flowers and bushes grow, and where all the fine ladies and gentlemen walk." For this poor little girl lived in a narrow street into which the sun never shone, and it was only when you sat in the window-seat that a bit of blue sky could be seen, and then it was not bigger than a pocket-handkerchief!

The new mother began very soon to go out every day, morning and afternoon, and dressed herself always in a lovely dress of brilliant colors, which was much finer than any the old mother had ever worn; but she never took the little girl with her.

At last she took heart, this poor child, and begged hard to be allowed to go at least just once. But the new mother sharply told her: "No. For what would the people say," she exclaimed, "if I were to show myself about with such an object? Why, bless the child, don't you know you're a perfect hunchback, and who ever heard of humpbacked children going out walking? They're always left at home!"

The little girl said not another word, but as soon as the new mother had gone out she jumped up on a chair before the looking-glass and looked at herself a long time. Yes, she was humpbacked; there it was, a regular round hump between her shoulders; there was no mistake about it. She got quietly down and mounted into her place in the window-seat, looking into the street beneath, and thinking of the days when that old mother had taken her out—and then she thought of her hump.

"I wonder what there is inside," she said to herself; "there must be something inside such a hump."

And the summer passed and winter came, and the little girl was paler and thinner still, and at last, when the snow-drops began to peep from the hardened earth, the old mother came one night and told her how lovely the golden heavens above were, and in the morning the little maiden lay dead.

"Don't take on so, husband," said the new mother; "it's much the best that could happen to such a child." But the husband said not a word, only shook his head mournfully and thought of his dead wife and child.

As soon as they had buried her an angel with wings of snow came flying from heaven and sat himself down close to the little grave, and knocked upon it gently as though it had been a door, and presently the child came forth from her grave and listened as he told her he had come to take her home to her mother in heaven. But the little maiden looked shyly into the shining face, and asked if humpbacked children might go to heaven, since everything there was so fine and grand and beautiful.

"My little one," the angel answered, "thou art no longer humpbacked," and, striking his white hand across her shoulders, the old hump fell away like an empty nutshell, and—what was in it? Two beautiful swan-like angel's wings; and, spreading them wide, as if she had been always used to flying, away she sped with the angel-guide through the blinding sunshine—on, on, into the blue heavens above, and in the highest place of all sat that good mother of old, with arms outstretched toward her, and with one more sweep of her swan-like wings she flew straight to that old mother's breast, never to be parted more.—Good Things.

I HAVE read a story of a child who was on a California steamer. The vessel was on fire, and one of the passengers was buckling a belt filled with gold around his waist, ready to plunge into the water. The child said:

"Please, sir, can you swim?"

"Yes, child," the man replied, "I can swim."

"Won't you please to save me, then?" the child continued.

"[illegible]" gold if he saved the child, and he did not hesitate long, but threw the belt into the water and took the child to the shore. Why did he not hesitate? It was because he knew a life was worth more than gold. The body is worth more than money, though it must die and be left behind when we go to the next world. But how much more valuable is the soul, that will not die at all! Let us be very careful not to sell our souls for gold. The whole world is not worth so much as one soul.

Cookies on the Lower Shelf.

Some one asked Charlie whom he liked to visit best—Aunt Jane or Aunt Mary.

"Oh, Aunt Mary, of course," said he, "'cause she keeps her cookies on the lower shelf."

Last Sabbath, when I heard the Rev. Dr. S. preach, I thought of dear little Charlie's longing for cookies, and they put away on the upper shelf, or locked securely up. Dr. S. never took out one. The sermon and the prayer were all for grown-up people. Not a sentence was meant for the lambs, and nothing that would find them. Some of them looked, oh! so hungry and tired. They were so weary—kept looking at the clock and wishing the meeting would stop. "He never even prayed for little boys and girls," said Charlie when he got home, "and I don't like him a bit."

Ah, reverend doctor, you missed a chance to please the Master and feed the lambs!

Last Sabbath I sat near a Sunday school class of bright boys, and I think their teacher must have been one of the Aunt Janes. I know that her cookies, if she had any, were on the upper shelf. She asked questions from a book. (They didn't believe in the uniform series there.) Then she told what Scott and Henry and others thought; and when she had gone over all the questions in the book she took Barnes' Notes (I know the dear old man would feel sorry, even in heaven, if it were possible, to see his book used this), and she filled up the time by reading from that. Such a rustling and looking into Sunday school books and looking at the clock, and playing and nodding, I never want to see again.

Aunt Jane, let me advise you a bit. Make plenty of cookies—good, simple, healthy ones—and put them on the lower shelf. Give the children liberty to help themselves; or, better still, pass the cookies round. Give them lessons they will love to hear—precepts for them, stories they can understand and enjoy. No more gaping and looking at the clock. They will lean forward to hear better. No matter—yes, all the better—if they smile once in awhile. Smile back. Don't carry that doleful face into your class again. Some children think religion is a gloomy thing. Don't let them read this in your face.

Be earnest, be faithful, be serious, but be cheerful and wide-awake. Love those dear little fellows, and let them know it. Please next Sunday give them cookies, or something fresh and good, and not any more dry, stale bread.—Sunday School Times.

Sowing Discord.

"Aunt Allee, I think Sarah Lee is the most disagreeable girl in our school; she is always making mischief. Now I have helped her ever so many times in her lessons, and lent her my history, but she is not in the least grateful. She told Mabel that I was very proud of my curly hair, and that my composition was not half as good as Mary Gray's."

"Were not both statements true?" quietly asked her aunt.

Laura blushed, but presently said: "I think it is very bad of her to talk about me in that way. I suppose she was provoked because I got above her in spelling. I am sure it was not my fault that she missed. I told Mabel I thought that was what made her so spiteful."

"You never talk against her, do you, Laura?"

"No, indeed; I am sure I never did."

"Take care, my child; I think I can convince you that you said she was the most disagreeable girl in school, that she was always making mischief, that she was ungrateful, and spiteful because you got above her. Now did she ever say anything half as bad about you? How would it sound if what you have just said was told her, exactly as you have said it? Would you not be very sorry indeed to have her hear it?"

Laura looked, as she felt, very much confused, and she had no apology to offer.

"Always look carefully within, when one speaks ill of you, and see if you do not deserve it, and cannot learn a lesson from it. Then, before you allow yourself to get angry, ask if you have not said quite as bad things about the other person. There are a great many hasty words spoken, which hurt nobody but the speaker, unless they are repeated. To do this is a tale-bearer's business; that is strictly forbidden in the Bible.—'Thou shalt not go up and down as a tale-bearer among my people.' It was wrong for Mabel to repeat the words that gave you so much pain, and it is quite likely that she reported your answer also. Of all seed-sowing, it is the poorest to sow discord among those who should be good friends. I think the true course for you, dear, is to repent truly of your unkind words, and seek, by constant kindness, to be at peace with your friend. As you are much the greatest offender, it is proper that the first step toward peace-making should come from you."

JUST as the leaven, by its mere presence, changes the particles of meal in the midst of which it is hid, so does each human being, by his mere presence, affect for good or evil those with whom he associates.

Farm, Garden and Household.

Buying Poultry.

Few housekeepers, and fewer cooks, are as good judges of the age of poultry as they ought to be. We all know, when poultry comes upon the table, whether it is tender or tough; and there should be no difficulty of knowing just as certainly whether a chicken, duck, goose or turkey is old or young, when it is offered for sale. Now the following is offered as a rule by which poultry can be safely judged, which, if read over for a few times, and then laid away for ready reference when needed, no person need purchase old, tough poultry unless from choice.

If a hen's spur is hard, and the scales on the legs rough, she is old, whether you see her head or not, but the head will corroborate your observation. If the under bill is so stiff that you cannot bend it down, and the comb thick and rough, believe her, no matter how fat and plump, for some one less particular. A young hen has only the rudiments of spurs; the scales on the legs are smooth, glossy and fresh-colored, whatever the color may be; the claws tender and short, the nails sharp, the under bill soft, and the comb thin and smooth.

An old hen turkey has rough scales on the legs, callosities on the soles of the feet, and long, strong claws; a young one is the reverse of all these marks. When the feathers are on the old turkey-cock has a long tuft or beard, a young one has only a sprouting one; and when they are off, the smooth scales on the legs decide the point, besides the difference in size of the wattles of the neck and in the elastic shoot upon the nose.

An old goose when alive is known by the rough legs, the strength of the wings, particularly at the pinions, the thickness and strength of the bill, and the fineness of the feathers; and when plucked, by the legs, the tenderness of the skin under the wings, by the pinions and the bill and the coarseness of the skin.

Ducks are distinguished by the same means, but there is this difference—that a duckling's bill is much larger in proportion to the breadth of its head than the old duck. A young pigeon is discovered by its pale colors, smooth scales, tender, collapsed feet, and the yellow long down interspersed among its feathers. A pigeon that can fly has always red-colored legs and no down, and is then too old for use.—Germantown Telegraph.

Bees—Swarming.

When a swarm issues from a hive it is generally the cause of some excitement. This is not necessary.—Have your apiary located at some point near the house, so that the home folks can see when a swarm is coming out, but don't let them call all hands, and ring bells and gongs like the Chinese in battle. Go quietly among them, watch them, and when you see them near a place you would like them to settle, or they show signs of going away, pick up a handful of fine dirt and throw among them, or throw among them the sunrays from a looking-glass. Throwing the dirt will generally settle them. If they settle on the end of a limb of a tree, shake them down on a sprea[illegible] sheet, on which the hive is placed. Brush some in to start them, and they will all soon go in. Should they settle on the trunk of a tree, or a thick limb, don't cut the tree or limb off, but place your hive convenient. Get a flat oyster-can, and bend one side of it to lit; [illegible] the can up among the bees till it is filled, then empty it in or in front of the hive. Continue to do so till all are in. My wife carried a swarm of bees three hundred yards to a hive in this manner. After the bees are hived give plenty of ventilation until night, then close up." "Why, you talk as if bees do not sting," I hear some one say. I always wear a vail to protect my face. When bees are full of honey they will not sting, unless you pinch or bruise them. If you smell of whisky or tobacco, I'll not be responsible for them, or you, as they hate bad odors. Move quietly among them; no quick movements. When brushing them into the hive use a feather or bunch of broom-straw.—A. J. Murray, in Rural Alabamian.

HOW TO CLARIFY HONEY.—A good way to clarify honey is to add two pounds of a mixture of equal parts of honey and water, one drachm of carbonate of magnesia. After shaking occasionally during a couple of hours, the residue is allowed to settle and the whole filtered, when a beautiful, clear filtrate is obtained, which may be evaporated in a water bath to the proper consistency. The only drawback to this method is the length of time it takes to filter the solution; and this may be much abbreviated by taking the same amount of white clay instead of magnesia, when a nearly equally good article is obtained in much less time.—Druggists' Circular.

EXCELLENT SIRUP FOR COUGHS.—Common sweet cider, boiled down to one-half, makes a most excellent sirup for colds and coughs for children, is pleasant to the taste, and will keep for a year in a cool cellar. In recovering from an illness, the system has a craving for some pleasant drink. This is found in cider which is placed on the fire as soon as made, and allowed to come to a boil, then cooled, put in casks, and kept in a cool cellar. Parties who have tried it say it is just the thing.

SIMPLE CURE FOR RHEUMATISM.—Boil a small potful of potatoes, and bathe the part affected with the water in which the potatoes were boiled, as hot as can be applied, immediately before going to bed. The pain will be removed, or at least alleviated, by the next morning. Some of the most obstinate rheumatic pains have lately been cured by one application of this novel and simple remedy."

FRANCE imported a hundred thousand pounds of human hair from Japan last year.

MACHINERY, TIES, ETC.

THE DUROIS FLANGE COTTON GIN.

By the Flange the Cotton is kept in contact with the teeth on each side, until the fiber is taken from the seed, without allowing them to be taken up by the return undbar of the roll, as in other Gins.

The Flange prevents hulls, sticks, sticks and hard substances from being cut, consequently making a better sample out of roughly-picked cotton than other Gins.

We have said more from this point than any agency of any other Gin for the crop of 1872-73; consequently we can furnish more and better references, and they are warranted to order up to all that is said of them.

We keep constantly on hand all sizes, from 40 to 80 SAW STANDS, left or right. Price, $5 per Saw.

MEDICAL.

PHŒNIX OIL.—PREPARED BY J. J. LINK, New Orleans.—This valuable Liniment has no equal, and can be depended on as one of the best offered to the public. The proprietor, therefore, leaves it in them to judge of its merits, feeling satisfied that its virtues will speak for itself. This Liniment will cure the following diseases if the directions are strictly followed, viz.: Piles or hemorrhoids; cases of twenty-five years standing have been cured in [illegible]. Who will suffer with this painful disease any longer, when so cheap and easy a remedy is offered? For burns or scalds the proprietor challenges the world to produce its equal; it will instantly give relief. For old indolent sores it has effected cures where the most scientific failed. For fresh cuts, sprains, bruises, tetter-worm, ringworm, scald head, erysipelas, sting of a wasp, spider or snake-bite, chapped lips, chapped hands, sore mouth, sore throat, sore or caked breast, rheumatism, and pain in the side, breast or back. In cases of pneumonia it will give great relief, where there is much pain in the side or breast, by rubbing the patient with it. For wounds and cuts it is good, and will remove them if the directions are strictly followed. This Liniment will be found a certain cure for the following diseases in Stock: For foot-evil it is a sovereign remedy; fistula, poll-evil, galls, scratches, sprains, bruises, sweeny, and mange on dogs. In fact no plantation or family will be without this valuable preparation after it becomes generally known. Liberal discount to retailers. For sale by

New Orleans Markets.

From the New Orleans Price Current.

The weather has been clear and pleasant. Later accounts confirm the previous reports of the injury to the new crop from the recent frosts, which in some districts prevailed for five nights, and state that it only left enough unscathed, which had merely sprouted, has been so much injured as to require replanting. With a late crop much more than usual will depend on favorable fall weather. Estimates of the present crop range from 3,500,000 bales to 4,000,000 bales.

The river is 3 feet 2 inches below high-water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the twenty-fifth ultimo:

|---|---|
| Louisiana and Mississippi | bales... 7,428 |
| Lake | 2,377 |
| Tennessee | 700 |
| Arkansas | 2,820 |
| Mobile | 171 |
| Texas | |
| Total | 13,576 |

On Saturday the market opened with a moderate demand and light supply of the kinds wanted. The business during the morning was consequently of limited extent, but the movement subsequently exhibited more animation, and 4,900 bales changed hands at prices showing some unsteadiness, but hardly any quotable decline, low ordinary, only slightly dusty, selling at 11@11¼c., good ordinary as low as 15½c., strict good ordinary at 16¼c., and low middling at 17 3/16@17½c., all showing a decline, but at the close the weight of opinion was in favor of no reduction in quotations. On Monday both the supply and the demand were limited, staple cottons being offered sparingly and commanding previous rates, while other kinds were irregular and easier, showing a falling off of ¼@¾c. On Tuesday the market opened with a fair inquiry, but mostly from buyers who claimed further concessions. A decline of ¼@¾c. in futures at New York and of 1-16d. in middling uplands at Liverpool, combined with a falling off of ¼ cent. in sterling exchange to express prices. The sales, however, were of fair extent, summing up 1,700 bales. Low ordinary sold at the 11c., ordinary at 12¾c., strict ordinary, clean, with good staple, at 14c., strict good ordinary, at 15@15½c., strict good ordinary to low middling at 16¾c., and low middling at 16¾@17 3/16c. for high style.

The above makes an aggregate for the past three days of 12,000 bales, against 15,220 for the corresponding time last week and 11,900 the week before.

The receipts proper at this port since the first of September, exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas, are 1,115,235 bales, against 998,973 bales to the same date last year, and the increase—in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 555,894 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 167,455 to Great Britain, of 57,294 to France, and of 112,000 to other foreign ports. PUBLISHED BY ROBT. J. HARP, FOR THE ALABAMA, MISSISSIPPI AND LOUISIANA CONFERENCES, METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH SOUTH.

VOL. 19. NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, MAY 8, 1873. NO. 19.

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

ST. LOUIS, April 30.—The round-house of the St. Louis and Kansas City railroad was burned. Loss, $60,000.

Arrangements for the Congressional convention, to be held on the fifteenth of May, are nearly completed.

The Governors of all the States are invited.

The railroad excursion to Galveston starts on the sixth of May.

SAN FRANCISCO, April 30.—A Yreka dispatch says that the people of that place and Scott's valley are arriving, fearing a general Indian war.

The citizens in the valleys of Oregon above the lakes and lava beds are moving away with their cattle and property.

WASHINGTON, May 1.—The reason for the postponement by the Supreme Court to-day of the application of counsel for Warmoth, for the allowance of an appeal from Judge Durell, in the Louisiana case, was that the court had nothing but the application before it, and therefore could not act. Counsel was granted leave to file the record and other papers in the case, preliminary to its consideration.

Several eminent lawyers, practicing before this court, are of the opinion that the Supreme Court will not immediately act upon the subject at the fall term—to which it has adjourned—but will delay it in order to give Congress another opportunity to act upon the subject of the Louisiana complications as a political question, thus removing it from judicial review.

BRENHAM, TEXAS, May 2.—The sleeping-car and rear coach ran off the track within half a mile of Brenham last evening, the rail breaking and the engine and three cars passing over safely.

Mr. Magill, of the firm of Magill & Spencer, Austin, Texas, was terribly hurt in the head, and but for the timely aid of Dr. Beaumont would now be dead.

Mr. S. F. Nichols, of Texas, in addition to many severe cuts, had his collar-bone broken.

ST. LOUIS, May 3.—Advices from Cloud county, Kansas, state that another fearful storm had occurred in that region, by which a number of lives were lost and much property destroyed. The roof of the house owned by Mr. Snyder was blown off, and Mr. Snyder, his wife, five children and a farm laborer were buried in the snow and frozen to death within a few miles of neighbors' houses. A family named Uricher shared a similar fate, all being frozen to death.

SALT LAKE CITY, May 4.—At a special conference of the Mormon Church assembled to-day it was rumored that Brigham Young will resign the presidency of the church during the session.

A conference application has been made upon the commander at Camp Douglas for two companies of troops to protect the settlers in the Sanpete valley in south Utah.

The Indians assumed a threatening attitude and the settlers were greatly alarmed.

RICHMOND, VA., May 5.—Dr. William H. McGuffey, professor of moral philosophy at the University of Virginia, and author of the well-known McGuffey's school-books, died in Charlottesville, Virginia, to-day, after a long illness.

NEW IBERIA, LA., May 6, 11 A. M.—The metropolitans took quiet possession of St. Martinsville on Sunday at twelve M. On Sunday night two metropolitan scouts were dangerously wounded in the suburbs of that town, one of whom has since died. Skirmishing has been constant since.

A conference between General Badger and a representative of the citizens was held yesterday. The former desired to know which of the officers he was about to install were objectionable to the people, and what they wanted. He was answered that the men were satisfactory if commissioned by McEnery, and the citizens only wanted the metropolitans to leave the town and not interfere with their local affairs.

The women and children are yet in town.

Judge Train went to-day, in company with District Attorney Beiden and Congressman Darrall, to open court.

The citizens' force is variously estimated from two hundred to four hundred men, and two pieces of small artillery.

It was reported this morning that the Kelloggites are organizing the negroes, and in consequence the entire population is anxious and watchful.

No general light up to last accounts.

Business is generally suspended.

A severe storm has prevailed since noon yesterday.

MONROE, LA., May 6.—At two A. M. a fire broke out in Jethro Moore's drug store, at Tronton, Louisiana, and, spreading rapidly in all directions, destroyed the entire business portion of the town in a very short time. Only two business houses escaped total destruction; these were the establishments of S. Hirsch and Picard & Spiro. The total loss will probably exceed $300,000.

ST. LOUIS, May 6.—The twenty-fourth annual meeting of the American Medical Association occurred here to-day. Three hundred and fifty delegates were present.

BOSTON, May 6.—Oakes Ames is insensible from paralysis. The symptoms are extremely dangerous.

FOREIGN.

CITY OF MEXICO, April 27.—The press reports as to whether Roscerns or Plum have proved successful in the railroad project are contradictory. The Diarez asserts that the government has rejected the narrow gauge offer, and consequently Roscerns has nothing now pending before the government. The Diarez is known to be in the Plum interest.

The importation of coffee from Mexico to the United States is beginning to assume large proportions.

Merchants expect great advantages from the line of steamers to be established between Vera Cruz and New Orleans.

Congress is discussing amendments to the constitution, and is making further reforms.

Gangs of workmen on the Texas and Pacific railroad have reached El Paso.

The Associated Press of the capital has proposed the establishment of an asylum for superannuated indigent journalists.

BERLIN, April 30.—Provincial correspondence says: The visit of the Emperor of Germany to St. Petersburg confirms the peace policy agreed upon by the Emperors of Germany, Russia and Austria. It is especially significant at this time because the prospects of quiet in western Europe were growing gloomier.

Two cases of cholera were reported to-day in Magdeburg.

LONDON, April 30.—The sharp shock of an earthquake is reported in Doncaster.

Jerusalem advices state that the Latin and Greek monks are fighting at Bethlehem. Five Latin and six Greeks hurt.

RIO DE JANEIRO, April 30.—The ministry are divided upon the proper course in the dispute between the clergymen and the Free Masons.

The yellow fever has almost disappeared from Rio and from other seacoast towns.

HALIFAX, April 30.—The wreck of the Atlantic has been blown up. No bodies were recovered.

VIENNA, May 1.—The exhibition was inaugurated to-day by the Emperor, in the presence of the members of the imperial family, royal and illustrious guests and State and civil dignitaries. The weather was unfavorable, but the crowds of people, from all parts of the world, who witnessed the splendid and imposing ceremonies were immense, filling the rotunda and terraces of the building and that portion of the grounds surrounding it. At noon the Emperor entered the rotunda, with the Crown Princess Victoria, of Germany, on his arm. He was followed by the German Crown Prince Frederick William, who escorted the Empress Augusta. After these came the eldest son of the prince, accompanied by the prince imperial of Austria. The Emperor took his seat on the throne, when the combined bands, numbering several hundred musicians, performed the Austrian hymn, which was succeeded by the Prussian anthem and the cheers of the multitude.

The Archduke Charles then rose and, addressing the Emperor, said: "Sire—Filled with gladness, I salute your majesty in these halls, donated to progress and peace. Your participation has fully brought to completion the work which now draws upon Austria the eyes of the world. May it please your majesty graciously to receive this catalogue, and to declare the exhibition open."

The Emperor, on receiving the casket containing the catalogue, replied with lively satisfaction:

"I behold the completion of this undertaking, the importance and significance of which I appreciate in the highest degree. My confidence in the patriotism and capabilities of my people, and the sympathy and support of friendly nations, has accompanied the development of this great work. My well-wishes and grateful recognition are devoted to its termination. I declare the Universal Exhibition of 1873 opened."

Prince Von Auersperg, president of the Council of the Empire, advancing to the foot of the throne, addressed the Emperor as follows:

"With feelings of modesty, and at the same time of pride, the people of Austria gaze on the work which testifies to the increasing power of and growing esteem for the Fatherland, and to its active participation in the great task of culture. We owe this work entirely to you. It is the embodiment of your motto: 'Power and respect come from union, which is strength.' We therefore lay our efforts at the foot of the throne."

The prince was followed by Dr. Felder, the burgomaster of Vienna, who expressed the gratitude of the people of the capital to his majesty, and added:

"Under your government Vienna has become a metropolis. You now confer the highest consecration upon an undertaking whose noble purpose is to show what the human mind in every zone is capable of achieving in mechanics, science and art, so that progress may become common property, and be fostered and furthered by the co-operation of all the rivalries of invention and dexterity, with the blessing of peace among nations. This sublime creation has arisen, immortalizing the history of culture in Austria. The city of Vienna, whose lot it is to welcome hospitably visitors from all quarters of the globe, feels proud and elated under your imperial protection, and, inspired with gratitude, rings forth the words: 'God protect your majesty; long live the Emperor.'"

The cry was taken up by thousands of voices and re-echoed from all parts of the building. The ceremonies closed with the chorus, "See the Conquering Hero Comes," sung by the united musical societies and choirs of the city.

The Emperor and Empress, followed by the distinguished personages, then traversed the western and eastern wings of the exhibition building, being received everywhere with thunders of applause.

Having completed the circuit of the exhibition they departed, amid thunders of artillery and the cheers of the immense crowds gathered outside the building.

PARIS, May 2.—Cardinal Alexis Billiet, Archbishop of Cambrey, is dead.

LONDON, May 3.—The steamer Hibernian leaves on Monday to repair the French cable. The Great Eastern and Edinburg leave the latter part of this month to lay the cable from Valentia to Heart's Content. The Great Eastern will then return to repair the broken Anglo-American cable, and the Edinburg will proceed to lay two new cables between Placentia, Newfoundland, and Sydney, Cape Breton. It is expected that four cables will be working across the Atlantic and five across the Gulf of St. Lawrence before the first of September.

ST. PETERSBURG, May 3.—Fifty thousand Russian troops, stationed in and near this city, were reviewed yesterday evening by the Emperor of Germany and the Czar.

Last evening St. Petersburg was illuminated in honor of the imperial visitor.

ST. PETERSBURG, May 5, via London, May 6, 5.30 A. M.—Hon. James L. Orr, embassador of the United States, died in this city to-night of inflammation of the lungs. He had been ill from cold some time, but his death was wholly unexpected.

GENEVA, May 5.—Pere Hyacinthe said mass in a private building in the presence of twelve thousand persons. A decree of excommunication has been pronounced against those who attended the ceremonies.

PARIS, May 6.—The idea of the formal proclamation, at an early day, of a conservative republic as a permanent form of government in France absorbs public attention, and is gaining ground everywhere.

Napoleon's Will.

A Herald London special gives the following text of the will of the late Emperor Napoleon, under which letters of administration are now applied for. The estate is sworn to under £120,000, and this sum is subject to claims which will reduce it one-half.

"This is my will. I commend my son and wife to the high authorities of the State, to the people and the army.

"The Empress Eugenie possesses all the qualities requisite for capably conducting the regency, and my son displays the disposition and judgment which will render him worthy of his high destiny. Let him never forget the motto of the head of our family: 'Everything for the French people.' Let him fix in his mind the writings of the prisoner of St. Helena. Let him study the Emperor's deeds and correspondence; and finally let him remember, when circumstances permit, the cause of the people is the cause of France.

"Power is a heavy burden because one cannot always do all the good one could wish, and because cotemporaries seldom render justice, so that in order to fulfill one's mission one must have faith in and conscientiously appreciate his duty. It is necessary to consider that from heaven above those whom you have loved regard and protect you. It is the soul of my illustrious uncle that has always inspired and sustained me.

"The like will apply to my son, for he will always be worthy of his name. I leave the Empress all my private property. I wish, at the majority of my son, she shall live at the Elysee and Biarritz. I trust that my memory will be dear to her, and that after my death she will forget whatever unhappiness I may have caused her. With regard to my son, let him keep as a talisman the seal I wore attached to my watch, and which comes from my mother. Let him carefully preserve everything that came to me from the Emperor, my uncle, and let him be convinced that my heart and my soul remain with him. I make no mention of my faithful servants, as I am convinced the Empress and my son will never abandon them. I shall die in the Catholic, Apostolic and Roman religion, which my son will always honor by his piety.

THE Montgomery (Alabama) Advertiser has been making an estimate of the last cotton crop. It says:

"The incoming cotton crop is, or will have been by September 1, the most valuable crop ever raised in the United States. The average price has been better sustained and higher than ever before. The money paid for it in its raw state will not fall far short of $330,000,000.

"Of this sum about $35,000,000 have gone to the speculators and first purchasers, leaving $295,000,000 to the producers. Alabama's share of this magnificent sum is nearly $35,000,000, estimating her crop at four hundred thousand bales. Events have shown that the disasters to the crop in Alabama last season were more numerous and extensive than any other cotton-producing State."

From the Work.

LIND GROVE CIRCUIT, LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: Lind Grove circuit lies along both sides of Bayou Bartholomew, from a short distance above the town of Bastrop, in Morehouse parish, extending northward to the State line, embracing both swamp and hill lands. It is about eighteen miles in length and ten in width, mostly a fine farming country. A little labor properly expended, removing the already cut timber that lies along its winding way in drifts, etc., would be a decided advantage to our country—so much of this fertile land would not be idle.

We have on this circuit three organized churches, with tolerably good buildings (not all ours,) with a membership comparatively small. We have six appointments, with prospects of preaching to large numbers who are not members of any church. Our church is almost the sole representative of the Redeemer's kingdom in the above-given area. There are a few scattered members of other denominations, but all without a pastor. Our congregations are in the main of good size, the people orderly, intelligent, courteous, and give strict attention to the preaching of the gospel. We have some good and faithful members; but alas! I find quite a number of gentlemen, who ought to be occupying prominent positions in the church, outside of its pale. "Other sheep (said our Lord) I have which are not of this fold." So we, as the ministers of Christ, claim these as his "lawful heritage," praying that they may soon be made to feel and realize the power of his sanctifying Spirit. O what a pity it is that men possessing talent, intelligence, refinement, influence and wealth should thus unintentionally bury their Lord's money.

The Sabbath school interest is looking up. The ADVOCATE is taken, though not as extensively as it should be. We expect to send the names of some new subscribers ere long. Others are indebted to the ADVOCATE, but do not know how much. Suppose you send us a list.

PLANTERSVILLE, LA., April 23, 1873.

FLOYD AND DELHI CIRCUIT, LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: After the adjournment of the Mississippi Conference at Brandon, last December, having obtained my transfer, I set out, in company with wife and two little boys, for a new field of labor, I knew not where—only it would be in the Louisiana Conference. None but those who have experienced it can tell what one feels on severing the ties of Christian association, especially when the best of feelings have always prevailed. Finding no parsonage on the circuit, we were at some inconveniences not necessary to repeat, as they are of common occurrence in an itinerant's life. We say no parsonage. Perhaps it is just to all to state that there have been two excellent ones destroyed on this circuit since 1863—one by the Federal army in the town of Floyd, the other by accident in Delhi. We pass, as these are not pleasant things to dwell on.

Our first Quarterly Conference came off in February, at which time we agreed to make up money and buy another parsonage for the circuit. We have succeeded admirably so far—bought the house and lot, and furnished everything necessary for convenience. So, you see we are snugly domiciled in the parsonage, surrounded with as kind people as live in north Louisiana or anywhere else. The cloud is being lifted, God's blessings begin to attend our labors, and we thank Heaven that our lot has been cast among these kind-hearted people.

Bro. Daves, our beloved presiding elder, has just closed his second Quarterly Conference for this circuit at Delhi, thirty-five miles west of Vicksburg, on the North Louisiana and Texas railroad. We commenced preaching on Wednesday night before conference; large audience, good order and attention. Bro. Wright, from the Rayville circuit, was with us, preaching with great power and acceptability. On Saturday the conference convened. Under the head of miscellaneous business we took up and discussed the propriety of having a camp meeting on the circuit this summer or the early part of the fall. After some discussion on the subject they unanimously passed resolutions to have one in or near Midway, ten miles north of Delhi, on Bayou Macon, and appointed a committee to select and lay off the ground, fix the time, etc., of which due notice will be given to the editor and publisher of the ADVOCATE, as we would be pleased to see them in the northern part of Louisiana during the summer.

I cannot close without referring to our love-feast on Sabbath evening. To be sure, it was a feast of love to many. I do not recollect that I ever witnessed just such an one before. I thought of the one hundred and thirty-third Psalm, especially the first verse. O for the time when class meetings and love-feasts shall occupy their old position in our church! What a means of grace to the juvenile members. I fear their neglect is the cause of the low degree of piety in many of our congregations. Brethren, if we be lights of the world, let us show forth that light in all meekness and humility. The meeting is over, and we feel to-day as if we had been with Jesus.

Wit Made Easy.

A HINT TO WORD-CATCHERS.

A.—Here comes B., the liveliest yet most tiresome of word-catchers. I wonder whether he'll have wit enough to hear good news of his mistress. Well, B., my dear boy, I hope I see you well.

B.—I hope you do, my dear A., otherwise you have lost your eyesight.

A.—Good. Well, how do you do?

B.—How? Why, as other people do. You would not have me eccentric, would you?

A.—Nonsense. I mean, how do you find yourself?

B.—Find myself? Where's the necessity of finding myself? I have not been lost.

A.—Incorrigible dog. Come, now, to be serious.

(B. comes closer to A. and looks very serious.)

A.—Well, what now?

B.—I am come to be serious.

A.—Come, now; nonsense, B.; leave off this. (Laying his hand on his arm.)

B.—(Looking down at his arm.) I can't leave off this. It would look very absurd to go without a sleeve.

A.—Ah, ha! You make me laugh in spite of myself. How's Jackson?

B.—Nonsense! How's Jackson! Well, I never should have thought that. How can I owe be Jackson? "Surname and arms," I suppose, of some rich uncle. I have not seen him gazetted.

A.—Good by (Going)—I saw Miss M. last night.

B.—Ah! What's that? Where was it?

A.—(To himself.) Now I have him, and will revenge myself. Where was it, eh? Oh, you must know a great deal more about it than I do!

B.—Nay, my dear fellow, do tell me. I'm on thorns.

A.—On thorns! very odd thorns, I never saw a thorn look so like a pavement.

A.—Come, now, to be serious.

(A comes close to B. and looks tragic.)

B.—He, he! very fair, very. But do tell where was she? How did she look? Who was with her?

A.—O, ho! Hoo was with her, was he? Well, I wanted to know his name. I could not tell who he was. But I say, Jack, who's Hoo?

B.—Good. He, he! Very fair! But now, my dear Will, you know how interested I am.

A.—The shovel you are! I always took you for a disinterested fellow. I always said of Jack B.: Jack's apt to overdo his credit for wit; but a more honest, disinterested fellow I never met with.

B.—Well, then, as you think so, be merciful. Where is Miss M.?

A.—This is more astonishing news than any. Ware is Miss M. I know her passion for music; but this is wonderful. Good heavens! To think of a delicate young lady dressing herself in man's clothes and going about as a musician under the name of Ware.

B.—Now, my dear Will, consider. I acknowledge I have been tiresome; I confess it is a bad habit, this word-catching; but consider my love.

(A. falls into an attitude of musing.)

B.—Well.

A.—Don't interrupt me. I am considering your love.

B.—I repent; I am truly sorry. What shall I do? (Laying his hand on his heart.) I'll give up this abominable habit.

A.—You will? Upon honor?

B.—Upon my honor.

A.—On the spot?

B.—Now, this instant. Now and forever!

A.—Strip away, then.

B.—Strip! For what?

A.—You said you'd give up that habit.

B.—Now, my dear A., for the love of everything that is sacred, for the love of your own love.

A.—Well, you promise me sincerely?

B.—Heart and soul!

A.—Step over the way, then, into the coffeehouse, and I'll tell you.

Street Sweeper.—Please, your honor, pray remember the poor swape.

B.—My friend, I'll never forget you, if that will be of any service. I'll think of you next year.

A.—What, again?

B.—The last time. Here, my friend, there's a shilling for you. Charity covers a multitude of bad jokes.

Street Sweeper.—God send your honor thousands of them.

B.—The jokes or the shillings, you rascal?

Street Sweeper.—Och, the shillings. Divil a bit the bad jokes: I can make them myself, and a shilling's no joke, anyhow.

A.—What? Really silent? And in spite of the dog's equivocal Irish face? Come, B., I now see you can give up a jest, and are really in love; and your mistress, I will undertake to say, will not be sorry to be convinced of both. Women like to begin with merriment well enough; but they think ill of a man who cannot come to a grave conclusion.—From advance sheets of "Wishing-Cap Papers," by Leigh Hunt.

Items.

WHAT hinders the success of your school?

HAVE you visited that scholar whom you missed from his place in the class last Sabbath?

THE advice of a preacher in Brooklyn to young men preparing to preach Christ is: "Get warmed up in the Sunday school."

MANY pastors are making the current International Lesson the basis of their Sunday morning's discourse.

A SUPERINTENDENT should know by name and by sight every child as well as every teacher in his school.

How many teachers forget to take the hand of their scholars, as they come into the class each Lord's day morning?

SOMETHING must be wrong, some one says, when a large church, with a flourishing Sabbath school to feed it, has none but old and middle-aged people in its community.

TEACHERS should, if possible, guard against affording occasions for the awakening of social antagonisms in their classes. Even among children they may prove irreconcilable.

LOT lingered and came near being lost. There are many lingering Lots in our schools—teachers who are always a little late. They will probably enter heaven among the last ones.

IT IS SAID that a man whom Dr. Chalmers had engaged to manage a disorderly Sunday school kept his eyes wide open during praying, and, when one boy thrust a pin into another, he marched up the aisle, still praying, and cuffed the boy's ears, and went back again, praying all the way.

THERE is a demand for sunshiny teachers. Be sure you always go to your class with a smile on your lips. By this we do not mean that artificial light which plays over the face for awhile, and then gives place to a settled gloom or seriousness. But we mean the sweet, genuine reflection of the settled joy and peace of the heart. A smile of this description is the charm by which you secure your children.—Sunday School Times.

Letter from Texas.

MR. EDITOR: An item or two from Texas may not be unwelcome to your favored readers. So to the task. We are having a very unusual spring in Texas. Weather rather dry, with continued cold winds, and often white frosts. The farmers and horticulturists are much discouraged. Some pieces of land have been planted the third time in corn, and destroyed each time by frost. Gardens are almost destitute of vegetables. In the far west the grasshoppers have appeared, eating up what the frost left.

This is truly a gloomy picture; but we are not without hope yet. It may be, and I think will be, that the succeeding portion of the season may be adapted to that which is past, so that good crops may yet follow. I have seen good corn raised in Texas which had been planted in May and June. Our wheat is pretty good, and will doubtless afford a fair yield at harvest-time.

The health of our people is not so good as we are accustomed to enjoy, but still it could not be justly complained of, especially considering the inclement weather.

Railroads are traversing our great State rapidly, and population is slowly but steadily flowing in.—Farmers and citizens are giving more attention to fruit-growing of various kinds than heretofore. This is well.

Religiously we are doing something, but ought to do more. We need more earnest Christian zeal and greater devotedness to God's good cause. "O for a terrible sinking among the dry bones!" We ought to have weeping penitents and happy conversions all over the land. Success to you and the ADVOCATE. More anon. Yours truly, G.

WAXAHACHIE, TEXAS, April 25, 1873.

A Correction.

MR. EDITOR: Mistakes will occur sometimes with the most accurate calculators and best business men.

In justice to myself and the Franklinton circuit, Summit district, I make the following correction: Franklinton circuit paid last year $24 missionary money, $8 of which was for the Mexican mission exclusively. I so reported to the secretary of the Annual Conference, yet Franklinton is reported blank so far as missions are concerned. H. P. LEWIS, Mississippi Conference.

THE Western Methodist of May 3 says: "The blessed work of grace is progressing in this city. At Central conversions are occurring from day to day—the number we are not able to state with accuracy. The pastor, Rev. S. B. Surratt, has been assisted in the pulpit by the Rev. S. A. Steel. It was announced that the Rev. J. A. Heard, of Jackson, would preach on Wednesday evening—after we go to press. At the First church the work has increased in interest and power. There were nine conversions on Tuesday evening last, and many are serious about their souls. We give place again to Dr. Rosser, whose letters we trust will be blessed of God not only to people in our city, but to many other readers.

THERE is a great famine in Java. No rain has fallen since last August. The rice crop has failed and the people in some parts of the island are perishing of hunger.

THURSDAY, MAY 8, 1873.

THE THREE LAST CALLS.

O slumberer! rouse thee; despise not the truth,
But give thy Creator the days of thy youth;
Why standeth thou idle? The day breaketh. See!
The Lord of the vineyard is waiting for thee.

Holy Spirit, by thy power
Grant me yet another hour;
Earthly pleasures I would prove,
Earthly joys and earthly love;
Scarcely yet has dawned the day;
Holy Spirit, wait, I pray.

SIXTH AND NINTH HOUR.

O loiterer! speed thee, the morn wears apace;
Then squander no longer the moments of grace;
But haste while there's time, to thy Master agree;
The Lord of the vineyard stands waiting for thee.

Gentle Spirit, stay, oh, stay!
Brightly beams the early day;
Let me linger in these bowers—
God shall have my noontide hours.
Chide me not for my delay;
Gentle Spirit, wait, I pray.

ELEVENTH HOUR.

O sloner, arouse! arouse thee, thy morning is past,
Already the shadows are lengthening fast.
Escape for thy life, from the dark mountains flee;
The Lord of the vineyard yet waiteth for thee.

Spirit, cease thy mournful lay,
Leave me to myself, I pray;
Earth hath flung her spell around me,
Pleasure's silken chain hath bound me;
When the sun his path hath trod,
Spirit, then I'll turn to God.

(Tolling bell.)

Hark! borne on the wind is the bell's solemn toll,
'Tis mournfully pealing the knell of a soul.
The Spirit's sweet pleadings and strivings are o'er;
The Lord of the vineyard stands waiting no more.

Infant Church-Membership and Salvation.

MR. EDITOR: It were good for us and the world if our theological phraseology was so defined as to rid it of its ambiguous perplexity. From unintelligible definitions of original sin with its fearful sequences, I fear many have been driven into the dark labyrinth of fatalism as a subterfuge, while others have taken shelter under the milder sway of universalism, and the remaining adherents are so poorly versed in metaphysical ethics as to be unable to "give a reason for their faith."

Our idea of original sin is this: We are born into this world totally incapable of any good, independent of the blood of Christ and the sanctifying influence of the Holy Ghost. It would be vain jangling and ignorance to ask if by this I mean total depravity? I mean such a depravity as renders us totally incapable of any good, unaided by Christ and unenlightened by the Holy Ghost.

But that we are not the recipients of these blessings until we reach a majority that holds us responsible for overt acts is alike contrary to Scripture and reason, and is therefore unintelligible. The idea that prevails is that we are saved by "grace through faith," and that infants are incapable of understanding the one or exercising the other; therefore they are not and cannot be recognized as Christians. Yet all agree, if they die in infancy, that God recognizes them as the redeemed of Christ cleansed by the Holy Ghost, and takes them home to heaven.

Glory to God in the highest! The little ones can say: "If God be for us, who can be against us?"

Let no one inquire why it is that all men are not Christians? When Christ wept over Jerusalem he said: "But ye would not." Again; "If any man will be my disciple," etc.; "Whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely," etc.; thus plainly showing that God charges the whole matter to the will. Indeed if all men but willed so, with a true heart, the love of God would flow from heart to heart like a river, and nations would be born into God in a day. Now it is evident that little babes make no such resistance to the Holy Ghost, whereby we are sealed heirs of heaven through Jesus Christ our Lord.

Dr. Summers' first argument in favor of infant baptism, whether so intended by him or not, is a powerful and unanswerable argument to this point. He says: "They (infants) are all the subjects of redeeming grace, and they do not place any bar to the blood-bought privileges of the gospel to exclude themselves from participation in them."

If they place no bar, Christ does not. Hear him (Matthew xviii, 1-6:) "At the same time came the disciples unto Jesus, saying, Who is the greatest in the kingdom of heaven? And Jesus called a little child unto him, and set him in the midst of them, and said, Verily, I say unto you, except ye be converted and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven. Whosoever, therefore, shall humble himself as this little child, the same is greatest in the kingdom of heaven. And whosoever shall receive one such little child in my name receiveth me. But whosoever shall offend one of these little ones which believe in me, it were better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck, and that he were drowned in the depth of the sea."

There are three points in this text that are of weighty importance. 1. The apostles wanted to know who was greatest in the kingdom of heaven or church. Now if we were asked who was the greatest man in the Mississippi Conference, we would not feel at liberty to go into the Louisiana or Alabama Conferences to find him. We should feel bound to make a selection out of the Conference designated, for that alone would answer the question propounded. Now Christ was not asked who was the greatest person out of the kingdom of heaven, but who was the greatest in the kingdom.

If Christ and the apostles had not recognized the child as a member of the church, and therefore in the kingdom, it would have been an inappropriate illustration. The apostles would have said: We did not ask thee who was greatest in the world, but who was greatest in the kingdom of heaven; and thou hast gone into the world and got one that is neither of us nor our kingdom to illustrate by. Such a course on the part of our Savior would have been absurd, and Christ did no such a thing.

2. "Except ye be converted and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven. Whosoever, therefore, shall humble himself as this little child, the same is the greatest in the kingdom of heaven."

Are little children humble, and are they converted? If not, our becoming humble and converted would make us unlike little children. But Christ says we will be like them. If, then, our becoming humble and converted make us like the child, what is its spiritual condition? Is it not humble and converted too? It must be, or else there would be no similarity between us.

3. "And whosoever shall receive one such little child in my name receiveth me." What is the consequence of our rejecting Christ in these little ones? He declares it were better for us if a millstone were hanged about our neck and we drowned in the depth of the sea. There is nothing obscure about this text; neither is it an allegory. It simply means, if we do not do our duty toward these little ones that we ourselves cannot be saved. Some may think this strong language. Be it so; it is Christ's, not ours.

But perhaps the next strongest text is Romans v, 17, 18. It requires no critical analysis nor metaphysical application of this text to arrive at its real purport; it is so plain that "he who runs may read and understand."

1. "By the offense of one judgment came upon all men to condemnation." Here we give the all-men its broadest scope, so as to include each individual person under this condemnation.

2. "So by the righteousness of one the free gift came upon all men unto justification of life." Now shall we so limit the scope of the all-men as to deny that all are justified through Christ? We cannot without taking from the word of God. Now we do not believe that this text teaches the expurgation of depravity from our nature; this is the office of the Holy Ghost.—John iii, 5. This is a personal work that has to be accomplished in the heart of each individual, so that it is not a holiness to be transmitted from parent to child. Hence as we find it in the goodness of Christ to be "born under the law," and to die to satisfy the demands of the law that we had transgressed in our federal Head, we conclude that we are no longer held guilty for the transgression, but that we are justified. Then, as Christ justifies universally from its guilt, the Holy Ghost purifies us personally of its effects.

The cause of our being cleansed from the guilt of original sin, we presume, is not a subject of controversy. None can be so ignorant of the teachings of inspiration as to deny it. All those texts that represent Christ as the second Adam, and tasting death for us, indubitably demonstrate this fact. If, then, infants are in a justified state, they are also regenerated; otherwise every system of theology falls to the ground. Calvinists make justification and regeneration one and the same thing. If, according to this system, infants are justified, they are also regenerated. Arminians distinguish between the two, but agree that they take place at the same instant. If, then, there be a distinction, and yet both take place at the same time, if the infant is justified, it is also regenerated.

Neither does this theory fall with any weight against those numerous texts that call upon us to repent and be saved; for if every person in the world was to-day an adult, with the "Spirit of God witnessing with his spirit that he was a child of God," those texts would not be less pertinent than they are; for when the Lord "shall say to the righteous that he shall surely live; if he trust to his own righteousness, and commit iniquity, all his righteousness shall not be remembered; but for his iniquity that he hath committed, he shall die for it."—Ezekiel xxxiii, 13. Let it be remembered that we are not writing for the perseverance of saints, but for the conversion of sinners.

But some may ask, If all this be true, why is it that our Savior was not more explicit in his declarations on this point? Do you not hear our Savior say it were better for us if a millstone were hung about our necks and we drowned in the depth of the sea than we should offend one of these little ones that believe in him? In what sense could we offend them as to so stir the ire of God against us? Surely none other than a spiritual sense. When God declares a truth, is it necessary to reiterate it ofttimes to induce us to believe it? If so, we may question whether "God so loved the world as to give his Son to die for us." But you say there are numerous corroborative texts that place this truth beyond the bounds of question. And are there not corroborative texts attached to Christ's declarations in regard to infants? But suppose there was not one to be found that did corroborate, if there are none to explain it away, what is our duty in the premises? Shall we strike it out and pass on? If so, we do it at our own peril.—Revelations xxii, 19.

But will any contend that these declarations are a mere nodum pectus till children come to years of discretion? What, then, is to become of all idiots and dying infants? Are they saved independent of faith? Then they are regenerated without it; for no one can get to heaven without regeneration: "Ye must be born again."—John iii, 7. "Whatever is true of a whole is true of a part."

Others may think us too liberal in our idea of God's mercy. Do you not preach that God wills the salvation of all men? Do you not urge all to come to the fountain of life, wash and be clean? Or do you contend that because the little ones cannot pronounce the adult Shibboleth they cannot be regenerated? Show us the Scripture, and it sufficeth us. We do not contend that everybody gets to heaven, but we do contend that all are regenerated in infancy.

While others may contend that our theory savors rather of fatalism, as it necessitates the conversion of infants without their asking for it, we contend that it uproots fatalism, as it gives the Holy Ghost to all savingly. But if it be urged that it destroys their personal agency to convert them in infancy, the same objection falls with equal weight against saving them in heaven when they die. If they cannot ask for one, they cannot ask for the other; and if one destroys their agency, so does the other. But we contend that neither affects the agency of man nor the principle upon which God deals with adults. But as they offer no resistance, the goodness of God has compassion on them. God would rend every heart but for the rebellious will.

Manner of Keeping the Sabbath.

The commandment begins with: "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy." The word remember is intended to secure the necessary preparation beforehand, that we may have no occasion to work when the day comes: "Six days shalt thou labor and do all thy work; but the seventh (now first) day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God; in it thou shalt not do any work, thou nor thy son, nor thy daughter, thy man-servant, nor thy maid-servant, nor thy cattle, nor the stranger that is within thy gates." This commandment is exceedingly broad. Whoever works on the Sabbath himself, or suffers his children for him or for themselves to work, or allows his servants to labor in doors or out, or his animals to be employed to carry on any temporal business, or the stranger that sojourns with him for a season, to work on his premises, is a Sabbath-breaker. But are there no exceptions to this rule? Yes; works of necessity, such as cannot be done before, and cannot be put off until after, may be done on the Sabbath. We must eat on the Sabbath, but our food may and should be prepared beforehand; we must kindle our fires, but the wood should be cut previously; we must dress, but our garments should be washed, ironed and made ready for use before Sabbath; we must feed and water our animals, but not work them; we may pull the sheep out of the mire, but may not mark the lambs; and though we loose the ox and lead him to the watering, we may not hunt strays or train young horses or cattle to lead, ride or work on the Sabbath. Works of humanity are also excepted. Thus we may visit and nurse the sick, bury the dead, and impart spiritual instruction on the Sabbath day. Preaching the gospel to save souls is a work of charity; and, if need be, we may employ our animals in going to and from places of religious worship on the Lord's day; all of which is implied in the commandment which requires preachers to go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature, and the one which requires the people to "forsake not the assembling of themselves together." To keep holy the Sabbath day is not only to abstain from all temporal business thereon, but to spend it in God's service—to employ the day, not a part thereof, in spiritual improvement by reading the Bible and other religious books, secret prayer, holy meditation, attending places of religious worship, and so on, that we may make "a Sabbath day's journey" in the way to heaven. This, and this only, is keeping the Sabbath. But if we have not mistaken the subject, how will many, alas! too many, answer for the abuse thereof?—some of whom employ their Sabbaths in idle or fashionable visits, either made or received; others in reading political papers and talking on politics; some in expeditions of gallantry or other kinds of pleasure, such as jaunts from town to country, or country to town; others in reveling and dissipation at public houses; some in journeying upon temporal business; others in posting up their books. One party of children is seen at swings, mill-ponds or playing in the fields or streets, and others hunting nuts or fruits. In the domestic circle we see the servants cooking and men shaving; in social circles we see people employed on the Lord's day in routes and voyages, parties of popular amusements and vain carousals; in circles of business we see men employed to make money on the Sabbath by opening shops and groceries, running hacks and stages, steamboats and steamcars. The smoke from these furnaces on the Sabbath day should remind them of the smoke of their torment, which will ascend forever unless they repent, and that speedily.

These are but a few of the many ways which men have to break the Sabbath.

Ministerial Change.

MR. EDITOR: The two communications in the ADVOCATE of April 10, 1873, viz.: Methodist Finance in Louisiana and Ministerial Support, have developed facts which are worthy of the consideration of those who lead in the onward march of Southern Methodism. I accept the statements contained in the articles mentioned as a correct representation of the subjects treated therein: "I am sick and worn out on the subject of finance." But let us examine the figures of "Ontis." Speaking of the contributions for the cause of missions, he says: "Now if we take out the New Orleans district, whose membership contributed about $1.10 per member to this cause, we find the entire church, outside of that district, contributing the sum of $800. Making the average, we find nine thousand six hundred and sixty-five members contributing $800, which is about eight cents apiece." Now there must be some cause of this great difference in favor of the New Orleans district. Will it be said that it is ability to contribute, and nothing else? I grant that some districts are abler to pay than others, and that New Orleans may be blessed in that respect; but I think there is another cause, Mr. Editor. Is it not possible for this wholesome state of church finance in New Orleans to be the result of an exception that has required but few changes in the ministry there? The long-continued labors of the same ministers among the same people endeared them to the church, and the members have learned to respond to the calls of their pastors. Is it not so? The ministry of such men as the author of "Post Oak," in New Orleans, has perhaps done far more to improve the finances of the church than "Post Oak Circuit" and all the rest of the articles on church finance.

Now listen to what S. P. Richardson says in his article on Ministerial Support: "I saw a noble man going to his circuit, crying and weeping, and when asked what was the matter, he said: 'I am called to preach, and have been sent to that circuit—no parsonage, the preacher and his family get less than $100, and it will cost nearly half that amount to move.'" It is easy to see that two such moves as this will cost what the preacher gets in one year to support himself and family. If he needs $100 to support his family on the circuit, $600 will be necessary if he moves, and anybody who views it properly will see that moving often, under such circumstances, is ruinous to the preacher. It also increases the burden of supporting the ministry; and the uncertainty about keeping the same pastor for a longer term than one year serves as an excuse for not satisfying his claims. "We need more permanency." Yes, and let us have it in the direction I have hinted at; and then, if the premises are sound from which this conclusion has been drawn, "parsonages, better churches, school-houses" and a better-supported ministry may be expected. "We must do something to keep on the advanced line." We have tried to raise the people up to our scriptural view of Christian liberality before they were ready for it. Let us adjust ourselves to the situation. I have touched this subject gently, yet thoughtfully. My thoughts run on in this field, but perhaps this is more than will get into the ADVOCATE.

ALL THE SONS OF GOD SHOUTED FOR JOY.

BY H. WALTER FEATHERSTUN.

For many rounds of ages, ere the earth
Was spoken from th' abyssmal depths of naught,
The sons of God, in admiration high
Of His unmeasured attributes sublime—
His boundless knowledge, omnipresence and Omnific pow'r, with love for them supreme—
Had rolled a never-ceasing flood of song,
Now trilling sweetly low, soft cadences,
Now quivering plaintive strains, not sad but sweet,
Then rolling grandly deep and swelling high,
From glittering, golden lyres, various-toned,
And seraph voices unrestrained and full;
Until when they saw a new design divine
Unfolding with this mundane sphere, as it
Emerged from nothing into chaos, and
From chaos into beauteous symmetry,
All clothed with verdure robes bestud with life,
They saw Omnific Power's new display,
And love for them, in making for their love
And guardian care a fellow-creature like Themselves somewhat, and love for man which they
Discovered in his grand designs, deep-laid;
And, seeing this, their admiration swelled
Too high to be expressed in fettered song,
By rhythmic rule prescribed, and so they raised
Their voices higher still to shouts of joy.
A rapturous hallelujah burst from that Vast choir of worshipers seraphic, and
Hurl'd upward through the depths ethereal,
Commingling with th' unwritten "music of
The spheres," and echoing 'mongst remotest worlds.

Ministerial Support.

MR. EDITOR: I read a great deal in our Advocates and hear a great deal said upon this subject; and many plans are suggested as a remedy. I am persuaded that there is no remedy which will ever succeed but that laid down by Christ. "Seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you. If God so clothe the grass that to-day is in the field, and to-morrow is cast into the oven, will he not much more clothe you? O ye of little faith!"

As long as the preacher tries to drive the church to its duty, he will fail. As long as the preacher tells the church he is dependent upon them for a living, and tries to beg a support out of them, he will fail. He will get their contempt for his trouble. If he grumbles at them, he will get their ill-will. If he urges the stewards to more zealous exertions in his behalf, he soon finds it difficult to get stewards.

If God has called me to preach, he has also pledged himself for my support. If I discharge my duty as a faithful minister, then God will fulfill his promise as a faithful steward. I have just as much right to believe God will support me and my family, while I am faithfully engaged in his service, as I have to believe I am called to preach. "Trust in the Lord and do good; so shalt thou dwell in the land, and verily thou shalt be fed." (Read the entire thirty-seventh Psalm.)

Are not the promises as pointedly made by our Savior who has promised to be with his servants always? (Read Matthew vi, 19 to the end.) Are these idle words? God will crush this world to atoms before these promises shall fail.

Never will the ministry succeed until they withdraw their hopes from churches, stewards, financial schemes and all other worldly appliances, and, in humble supplication before a throne of grace, go to God and ask for daily bread. Has he not taught us to be careful for nothing, but in everything, with supplication and thanksgiving, make our requests known to God? Why did he tell us that if he expected us to go to begging men. "It is not begging, though." That is what it is commonly called, and the evil is the same. Put off the very appearance of evil; show the church you are not dependent upon them, that you expect your support from God, and that you are not afraid to trust him for it.

Teach them that giving is a privilege, and not a mere duty. Teach them that they are all stewards of God, and he will require of them an account; and if they have been unfaithful, they will be charged with robbing God. But be sure to tell them God will feed you, whether they help or not. And to show our people that we are willing to trust in God, we have had our Quarterly Conference to adopt this resolution: "That stewards do not ask anybody for anything for the preacher."

I used to be ashamed to speak about my claim under our rule; but now I can stand up and preach about my support with as much grace as I can preach salvation to a ruined world.

H. B. SMITH.

STEPHENSVILLE, TEXAS, April 21, 1873.

"MARY, MY DEAR," said a doting husband to the lady that owned him, "if ever I turn Mormon and marry another helpmate she shall be a Mary, too, for your own dear sake!" "Be content with one Mary, my duck," said the loving wife. "In my opinion another would be a super-new-mary."

OBITUARIES.

LOU. PEARCE, daughter of Rev. P. and Mrs. M. E. Howard, was born in Carroll county, Mississippi, on the tenth of November, 1868; was baptized by Rev. George W. Brooks, of the North Mississippi Conference, May 30, 1869, and fell asleep in Jesus March 28, 1873.

Her funeral was preached by the writer at old Bethel camp ground, March 29, after which we laid her away until the song of the resurrection shall arouse her from her slumbers.

"Asleep in Jesus! blessed sleep!
From which none ever wake to weep;
A calm and undisturbed repose,
Unbroken by the last of foes."

WILL. H. LEITH.

JACKSON, LA., April 22, 1873.

DIED, January 31, 1873, after a few days' painful sickness with pneumonia, MRS. MARY MOORER, wife of Nelson J. Moorer. Her maiden name was Steene. She was born March 10, 1831; was married to Bro. Moorer July 29, 1847, and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South twenty-two years ago, in which communion she lived acceptably until removed to the church triumphant above. She lived an humble, pious, godly life, and was meek, quiet, patient and kind to all. She had many friends and but few enemies. When asked, just before death, if she was afraid to die, she replied calmly and with much confidence: "Oh, no, I am not afraid to die." After other questions in reference to her prospects being satisfactorily answered, she made her exit from this to the world of spirits, leaving a kind but sorely-grieved and afflicted husband and seven children to mourn their bereavement and loss. May the Lord administer the comforts of his grace to their smitten hearts, and save them in heaven.

J. M. SCOTT.

FARMERSVILLE, ALA., April 13, 1873.

DIED, at her residence near Coffeeville, Clarke county, Alabama, April 6, 1873, Mrs. CHASTE E. TURNER, wife of Abner Turner, and daughter of David and Jane Love. Sister Turner was born in Troupe county, Georgia, in 1788; was married to Abner Turner in 1806, and in 1809 moved to Clarke county, Alabama—then the Mississippi Territory. Here, during the year 1848, she joined the Methodist Episcopal Church. From the hour of her union with the church till the Master called her hence she labored assiduously to advance the Redeemer's cause upon earth.

For twenty-five years or more Sister Turner's house was ever a home for the way-worn itinerant preacher. Doubtless many ministers who read this tribute to her memory will call to mind many pleasant hours spent beneath her hospitable roof. For a long while Sister Turner had been waiting patiently to hear the Master say: "Well done, good and faithful servant; enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." Suddenly the summons came, but found the aged Christian ready to depart and be with the Lord. Having lived an exemplary life, Sister Turner died in the triumphs of a living faith, and has gone to meet her loved ones on the other shore. She rests near the old homestead, and almost in sight of the beautiful little church she erected for the worship of God, and which will long remain a standing monument of her devotion to the cause of Christ. Here let her peacefully repose till the morning of the resurrection:

"Till the trumpet end her rest,
Till the tramp which shakes creation
Through the circling heavens shall roll,
Till the day of consummation,
Till the bridal of the soul."

W. A. R.

DIED, in Jackson, Louisiana, November 6, LEWELLA CAMPBELL, daughter of Rev. L. Campbell, of the Mississippi Annual Conference. Though consecrated to God in holy baptism, and religiously nurtured, she was not a subject of renewing grace until within a short period of her death, although, as she confessed in her sickness, she had often and again resolved to seek the salvation of her soul. But the allurements of gay society interfered, and the admonitions of conscience were repelled. During the early part of her illness of five months she thought to recover, at least measurably, and said but little concerning her spiritual state; but as time wore on, and she became weaker day by day, she turned her thoughts within. At this time she awoke me one night and said: "My ma, what do you reckon will become of me?" I hesitated, not knowing certainly to what she referred; and she presently added: "If I die?" I said: "I think you will recover, darling; but, if not, are you afraid to die?" She replied, after a pause: "I am not ready." I then urged upon her to seek a preparation for heaven, adding: "You knew the way." She replied that she had been a great sinner, a neglecter of salvation, so long that she would not be accepted; that could she recall her misspent life she would live very differently—would be a church-member, a teacher in the Sabbath school, and do good in various ways; but that it seemed a mockery, when she could no longer enjoy the world, to offer the poor remnant of life to God, after she had spent so many years in sin and folly. She was despondent, discouraged, and feared to be rejected. I referred her to Christ's beautiful parable of the master of the vineyard, who went into the market-place to hire laborers, and called some at the eleventh hour, but that when the time for payment came those who had wrought but one hour and those who had borne the heat and burden of the day received every man a penny; that it was all of grace, and that this parable was given for our encouragement in just such a case as hers. She eagerly wished to read it; said she had often read it, but that it seemed in a new light; that it just suited her, for she too had been standing all the day idle. About this time she sent for the Rev. J. L. Forsyth on business; but when that had been talked over, true to his high mission, he spoke of the concerns of her soul, gave her religious counsel, and asked her to promise to pray for herself every day, especially at a certain hour named, when he would meet her at a throne of grace. She told me of this, and added that he seemed so interested for her it looked as though she ought to feel some interest for herself; that it was a great task, but she had promised. To this promise and its fulfillment I have no doubt she was deeply indebted for that religious peace which soon flowed in upon her soul. From this time she seemed deeply engaged, and kind friends counseled and aided her. She regretted she was not enrolled in the church. I told her she could join at home; that I had long wished her name on the church record; that she might recover and do much good; but that, whether for life or death, she ought to be in Christ's fold. So it was done. She ripened rapidly for heaven. She knew the way, and had only to believe; and, as she expressed it, faith was easy. She said she had never been troubled with doubts; had always believed in the efficacy of prayer, except under one long temptation to doubt. This was her brother's death. He fell at Gettysburg, and she told me she had prayed so much and so fervently for his safety that when he fell she thought either God did not answer prayer or her prayers would not be heard; but that two years since she had recommenced praying. She read the Bible herself till too weak to hold it. Then I read frequently at her request, often repeating both Scripture and hymns to her in the hours of the night. Her humility was very marked, and in striking contrast to her high-toned, independent character before the renewing grace of God had touched her soul. Once, when I repeated

"Nearer my Father's house, where the many mansions be,"

she replied that it would be a very humble mansion which she could claim. She was visited several times by the Rev. Mr. Andrews, pastor of the church here, and enjoyed his religious counsel and prayers very much. But his duties as president of Centenary College prevented his calling as often as she wished, or as he otherwise would have done. She was passionately fond of music, and now wished to hear our beautiful hymns sung, and he sung several of her selection.

A few days before her death she received the sacrament of the Lord's Supper, in company with a few dear friends. It made a deep impression on her, and the next day she asked for the hymn used on the occasion: "According to thy gracious word," etc. She read it several times, saying it was so beautiful. A few nights before she left us, as she saw me kneel for my evening prayer before retiring, she said: "My ma, pray for me." I told her I always did—that thousands of prayers had gone up to heaven on her behalf, that were now being answered. She suffered greatly, at times, from difficulty of breathing, but was always patient, resigned and uncomplaining. She sank very rapidly toward the close; none of us, not even she, thinking death so near. A dear friend arrived a few days before she left us. Her greeting was: "Your prayers are answered; I love the Savior." The day before her death I had left her, at her request, to get some things she needed. I returned just before dark, and asked how she felt. She said: "The same as when you left me." Later in the evening she seemed sinking, but we imputed her condition to the morphine she had taken. She called me to her bedside and said she could not move a bone in her body. This surprised and alarmed me, and I asked: "Can you not move your fingers?" She said: "Yes; but no other part of my body." We sent for her physician and other friends, and for her pastor, who prayed with her, conversed with her, and repeated portions of Scripture, which she repeated word for word with him. He also sung, at her request, "The Sun-bright Clime" and other hymns, among them the beautiful one, "O sing to me of Heaven." When he commenced this she turned her eyes toward him, her countenance irradiated with a heavenly smile, and while the stanzas were being sung she listened with clasped hands, and made low responses. After this she said but little, except in readily replying to questions as to her state, etc. When passing through the dark valley I asked: "Is the Savior still precious?" She replied, just audibly: "Very precious;" and thus passed calmly and peacefully to her heavenly rest.

To us she will never more return,
But her blissful home we can gain;
To rejoin her there our fond hearts yearn,
Where is no more sorrow and pain.

THE chapel-oak of Allouville (Pays de Caux,) France, is a specimen of the common oak which is believed to be about one thousand years old, and is the object of a considerable amount of veneration to the inhabitants of the district, from the circumstance that its hollow trunk has long been used as a chapel. Properly speaking, it contains two chapels, one above the other, access to the upper one being obtained by means of a spiral staircase on the outside. The tree is now about fifty feet high, its top having been broken by the wind or cut off, at some remote period, and in its place a sort of bell-tower has been erected, the top of which is about on a level with the highest branches. The lower part of the trunk is more than eleven feet in diameter.

CIRCUMSPECTLY.—The Rev. Mark Wilkes was, in his day, one of the marked men in the dissenting ministry of England. He had a quaint and striking method of illustrating scriptural truth. An American minister of our acquaintance once heard him introduce his text in this manner: "My hearers! did you ever see a cat? Did you ever see a cat walk? Did you ever see a cat walk upon the top of a wall? Did you ever see a cat walk upon a wall covered with broken glass? How carefully she lifted each foot! How slowly and cautiously she set it down again! So would the text from which I propose to speak have you act. 'See that ye walk circumspect-ly.'"

ANYWHERE.

Any little corner, Lord,
In thy vineyard wide,
Where there toilest maidens
Where there would I abide;
There would I labor
Mid the sowing grace
Anywhere.

Where we pitch our nightly tent
Surely matters not;
If the day for thee is spent,
Blessed is the spot;
Quickly we the tent may fold;
Cheerful, march through storm and cold
With thy care.

All along the wilderness,
Let us keep our sight
On the moving pillar fixed,
Constant day and night;
Then the heart will make its home,
Willing, led by thee, to roam
Anywhere. Evangelist.

The Judgment-Seat.

"We must all stand before the judgment-seat of Christ." The colossal dimensions of that assemblage utterly stagger me. I try to imagine all the present population of the American republic—forty millions strong—convened in one vast meeting. To them I add all the existing people on the globe. Then I begin to add the generations of the dead. But the tremendous total breaks me down. There is not room in one little finite mind to put the bare idea. But there is room in God's mind; and there will be room enough too for them all "before the judgment-seat of Christ." He who telleth all the stars of heaven by name will recognize every individual so closely that not even a beggar child will be missed. Each person will stand distinct and alone before the eye of the Judge. No one must imagine that he will be "lost in the crowd," or escape that flame-bright eye.

Upon that throne of judgment Jesus shall sit; for the Father hath committed all judgment to the Son of Man. The despised Nazarene shall then come in his glory to that great white throne, and all his holy angels with him. Is it a violent supposition that he will then bear the marks of the nails and the spear of Calvary on his glorified form? We judge not. Sinners shall then look upon him whom they have pierced, and shall wail because of him. The heirs of glory shall see in those scars of the cross their title to an everlasting inheritance. It will be upon the brow that once wore the crown of thorns that the imperial diadems will then be placed. John in his vision saw "on his head many crowns."

Before that dazzling tribunal, we are told that "the books shall be opened," and that every man shall be judged out of those things which are written in the books, according to his works. The wonder grows. All the myriad millions of the globe in one assemblage! And every act of all these innumerable myriads brought out and weighed, and passed upon with the most infallible equity! Yet we must accept this statement, or reject the whole revelation. For we are distinctly told that God "will bring every work into judgment, with every secret thing, whether it be good or evil." Fasten your mind to that fact. Just consider that you will be called to give account for every mercy and every moment, every talent and every trust, for every Sabbath and every sermon, for every line and letter of God's law, and every token of God's love. For all these the Omniscient Judge will "reckon with you." And, for nothing may you expect a closer and more searching inquiry than of your use or abuse of your influence. And suppose that your influence may have thrown some fellow-creature off the track that leads to life! Are you sure you will be admitted to the realms of bliss from which you have helped to keep another out? Think about this a moment before you sing again those self-assuring lines about "reading your title clear to mansions in the skies." It will certainly require an infinite wisdom in the Supreme Judge to unravel the tangled thread of daily life in which so many good men have been instrumental in producing so many bad sets of their fellow-creatures. Will all these sins of God's people, which lead them into iniquity, go entirely unpunished? I tremble at the very question.

"There's pity for the hardened knave,
And mercy for the thief that stole;
But God in justice ne'er forgave
The murder of a human soul."

At that august judgment-seat every one will be dealt with in the impartial spirit of "a justice that cannot err a hair's breadth." There can be no bribery in that court. No titled sinner will reap any favors from his rank. No cunning sinner can take advantage of the technicalities of law. No appeal can be made to a higher tribunal. No wily advocate can befog the case, or move for an arrest of judgment. For once the universe will behold a tribunal on which Infinite Justice will preside, and dispense decisions with a spirit of unspeakable love.

We learn beforehand that in that Supreme Court, those who "knew their Master's will, and did it not," shall be "condemned to "many stripes." Oh, it will be a terrible thing to go up to that judgment-seat of Christ from before some pulpits, and out of some communities! It will certainly fare better with the poor wretch who stumbles headlong into perdition from the heathenish haunts of Sodom, than with the cultured sinner who tramples on ten thousand gospel truths in his guilty road to the judgment-seat. To topple over into hell at the very summit of the hill of Zion will be a frightful fall. If faithful pastors ever shudder at that judgment-seat, it will be when they see what is becoming of some of their own congregations. The very people who once melted and wept under revival sermons may then be calling for the rocks and mountains to fall on them, and hide them from the wrath of the rejected Lamb. Perhaps the reader of this paragraph may be one of those very people.

There is another thought which always weaves itself into every conception I ever form of the judgment scene. And that is the excruciating separations which that day will make. All the heart-breaking farewells of earth melt into nothing when compared with those leave-takings for eternity. Who dares to conceive of them? How well I remember the shudder with which in early childhood I used to listen to that homely but thrilling hymn:

"O there will be parting, parting, parting—
All the judgment-seat of Christ;
Brothers and sisters there will part,
Parents and children there will part,
Will part to meet no more!"

If we would but run that dividing line—even in our imagination—more often now, it would make us more tenderly faithful to the souls of those we love. God save us from the agony of breaking away from our own children then—and forever!

Such are a few of the thoughts which crowd into my mind as I sit to-night alone and let the light of that tremendous judgment scene break in upon me. It is an awful mystery; but through the mystery I see clearly a righteous Savior on his throne—a heaven of glory—a lake of fire—and every single human being bound either to the one or to the other. With the "fierce light" of that judgment-seat beating upon our path, let us all pass on, remembering that every year brings us the nearer toward it.—Dr. Cuyler, in the Evangelist.

The Temple at Jerusalem.

No spot on the surface of the planet can appeal more powerfully to the imagination than the Great Altar Mountain of Moriah; no place is so luminous in historic association. It is the very mooring-stone of monotheistic faith. On the rocky crest of its lofty summit, in the belief alike of the Jew, the Christian and the Moslem, the vail that shrouds the invisible world has been most often and most evidently raised. Here, according to the oral tradition handed down by eighty-eight successive occupants of the dignity of high priest, the common ancestor of all the Arabian tribes laid the wood in order for the meditated sacrifice of his son. Here the shepherd who won the throne on which, as reigning over an undivided people, only three kings sat, saw the angel stand between the earth and the heaven, with a drawn sword in his hand stretched out over Jerusalem. Here was believed to dwell, at least for the 428 years of the first temple, if not for the full millennium during which sacrifice was offered on the altar, the shadow of the cloud and the glory of the Shekina, and to whisper the small still voice of the Bath Col. Here again, according to a second group of sacred traditions, to the priest Zacharias, at the Feast of Lights in the thirty-fifth year of Herod the Great (when the course of Abia was in attendance,) appeared an angel of the Lord standing on the right side of the altar of incense. In one of the numerous chambers within that colossal wall sat the divine Child, in the midst of the elders of the Sanhedrim, both hearing them and asking them questions. Under the royal cloister, cresting the great southern wall, twenty years later, the Son of Mary walked in the winter, at the Feast of the Dedication. Here again, in the belief of the present guardians of the sanctuary, from the very place where Abraham and David and Solomon had prayed, the great Arabian prophet took his upward journey, in a vision more momentous to the world than either of those in which Isaiah, Amos and Ezekiel had been rapt to the same place. No spot so consecrated by sacred legend exists on the surface of the earth.

The skill, the art, the mighty toil that have been devoted to the adornment, and to the desecration of this most ancient place of worship, have been of extraordinary magnitude. The grandest legacy of Egyptian antiquity, the Great Pyramid, demanded, indeed, a larger amount of naked human labor; but in Moriah there is a compulsion of the features of nature herself to the service of the builder. In actual bulk the Great Pyramid is to the temple rock as five is to nine, if we descend but as far as the sills of the five double gates of the Mountain of the House. If we carry the comparison down to the level at which the lowest foundation of the walls is inlaid in the rock at the angles of the inclosure, the bulk is three times that of the Great Pyramid. The cubic contents of the mason's work may not amount to a tenth part of that piled up by Souphis. But the hill has been honeycombed with chambers and galleries; and the declining part to the south covered with vaults and arches, to which Gizeh can show no parallel. No merely artificial structure could have so successfully resisted the resolute efforts of the two greatest military nations of the ancient world to destroy its existence and to obliterate its memory. No other monument long surviving the era of Asiatic and Italian power can ever, like the Noble sanctuary, mark by its very ruins the successive periods of its glory and its fall.

If we regard not so much the evidence of the labor devoted to the work of the temple as the effect produced on the mind by its apparent magnitude, we may suggest the following comparisons: the length of the eastern wall of the sanctuary is rather more than double that of one side of the Great Pyramid. Its height from the foundation on the rock at the south and near the northern angles was nearly a third of that of the Egyptian structure. If to this great height of one hundred and fifty-two feet of solid wall be added the descent of one hundred and fourteen feet to the bed of the Kedron, and the further elevation of one hundred and sixty feet attained by the pinnacle of the temple portal, we have a total height of four hundred and twenty-six feet, which is only fifty-nine feet less than that of the Great Pyramid. The area of the face of the eastern wall is more than double that of one side of the pyramid. Thus the magnitude of the Noble sanctuary of Jerusalem far exceeded that of any other temple in the world. Two amphitheaters of the size of the Coliseum would have stood within its colossal girdle and left room to spare. The Coliseum is said to have seated eighty-seven thousand spectators, and accommodated twenty-two thousand more in its arena and passages. For such a number to have been crammed within its circle, the space for each person must have been limited to seventeen inches by twenty inches. Allowing in parallelogram way, or four square cubits for each worshiper in the temple, the sanctuary would have contained thirty thousand; the Chel, excluding the Priests' Court, twenty-six thousand more; and there would yet have been room in the Great Court and the cloisters to make the total reach to more than two hundred and ten thousand.—Edinburg Review.

Dress in Church.

In ancient and in comparatively modern times various States have attempted to establish sumptuary laws for the regulation of the styles and cost of clothes, but with little success. The question of clothes seems one of most difficult adjustment. The early Methodists, who were nearly all persons belonging to the less opulent classes, and the Quakers made strenuous efforts to check display and extravagance in dress. The modern Methodists seem to have given up any effort to control the question of dress. The Quakers still adhere to a peculiar costume as to cut and color, but wear clothes proverbial for their fineness and high price.

The dress of males throughout Christendom has been reduced to the minimum of plainness. Lace, feathers and ruffles have entirely disappeared, and jewelry nearly so, save may be a watch-chain or a pin or a few buttons. There is in most youths and young men a jewelry period that passes away with the coming of soberer years.

But this cannot be said of female attire; ornamentation still forms a distinguishing feature of their style, and a large item of the expense of their dress. We know not that this will be or can be changed, but we most ardently desire to see one reform in the matter of female dress or fashion, and it is this: let church-going cease to be a dress occasion.

In the Catholic countries of southern Europe it is not fashionable, and is not considered in good taste to be gay in dress at church. We were pleased to read that the ladies of a large and wealthy congregation of Baptists, in Nashville, Tennessee, had resolved to dress in calico at church. Now we do not care or desire that ladies should confine themselves to calico—though it is neat and pretty—but we do most sincerely and religiously desire to see our lovely and beautiful women adopt a plainer style of dress at church than that which now prevails. "But," says some fair lady reader, "why do you wish us to be plainer at church than at other public or social assemblies?" For more reasons than one, but our chief reason is that you may not dress poor women out of church and away from church, as we, alas! have too much reason to believe that you are now doing. Now we know that this is no part of your design or desire; indeed we doubt not you will hear with regret that this is the effect of your fine dressing at church. But you will ask: "Why does our finery effect for harm the poor at church more than elsewhere?" For this simple reason: the church is the only place where the poor and rich meet together. The poor do not visit in the circle of the rich—do not attend grand dinings, parties and places of public gayety. It is only in church that they are brought in contact, and the poor made to feel the contrast between their cheapness and plainness, and the costliness and splendor of the well-to-do. Now it ought not to be so, but so it is. This contrasting is humiliating to the poor, and they shrink away from it, and will not go to church at all, or, if they do, go with a feeling of mortification or else with an effort at display beyond their means.

Many poor women are kept from church in the morning, and some at night, because they shrink from contrasting their poverty and plainness with the wealth and show of the richer classes. We cannot hope to correct this feeling in the poor. What, then, can be done? This: let it become fashionable and be regarded as a matter of good taste to be plain at church. If the ladies who are the leaders in society will take this in hand, it can be carried through and be the means of great good. Now cannot sensible and godly women be persuaded, for Christ's sake, and the sake of the poor, to make this effort of self-denial?

Those who now spend so much of the Sabbath morning in elaborate toilets will have time for better Sabbath service. At church their thoughts will be less tempted to stray in the direction of dress. Instead of examination and criticism of costumes, they can give their hearts to praise and prayer, and careful attention to the sermon, so that they may apply its lessons to their spiritual needs.

Sisters beloved in the Lord, when you read this, will you think, talk and act in regard to it? May the spirit of all grace help you!—Galveston Christian Advocate.

FOLLOWING THE LORD FULLY.—Walking once in a pitch-dark night, in company with a friend who knew the road well, I said to him: "I shall follow you, so as to be right." After a little I stumbled into a ditch. "You have led me into a ditch," I said. "Then you have not followed me exactly," was the reply, "for I have kept free." I had to acknowledge that I had gone a little to one side, thinking that of no consequence. So it is, thought I, with the Christian following Christ; as long as he follows him exactly he is safe; but when he turns aside, however little, he is liable to stumble into the ditch.

PROF. AGASSIZ says that "trilobites are not more closely related to the phyllopods than to any other entomostracha or to the isopod." Of course not.

Long Sermons.

The speaker's time should be measured out by wisdom. If he is destitute of discretion, and forgets the circumstances of his auditors, he will annoy them more than a little. In one house the pudding is burning, in another the child is needing its mother, in a third a servant is due in the family; the extra quarter of an hour's prosiness pits all out of order. A country hearer once said to his pastor: "When you go on beyond half-past four in the afternoon service do you know what I always think about?" "No," said the orator. "Well, then, I will tell you plainly; it is not about what you are preaching, but about my cows. They want milking, and you ought to have consideration for them, and not to keep them waiting. How would you like it if you were a cow?" This last remarkable inquiry suggested a good deal of reflection in the mind of the divine to whom it was proposed, and perhaps it may have a similar beneficial effect upon others who ought to confess their long preachings as among the chief of their shortcomings.

In general, a great sermon is a great evil. Length is the enemy of strength. The delivery of a discourse is like the boiling of an egg; it is remarkably easy to overdo it and so to spoil it.—You may physic a man till you make him ill, and preach to him till you make him wicked. From satisfaction to satiety there is but a single step; a wise preacher never wishes his hearer to pass it. Enough is as good as a feast, and better than too much.—Spurgeon.

THY KINGDOM COME.—A poor, wounded boy was dying in a hospital. He was a soldier, but a mere boy for all that. The lady who watched by his bedside saw that death was coming fast, and, placing her hand upon his head, she said to him: "My dear boy, if this should be death that is coming upon you, are you ready to meet your God?"

The large dark eyes opened slowly and a smile passed over the young soldier's face as he answered: "I am ready, dear lady, for this has long been his kingdom," and as he spoke he placed his hand upon his heart.

"Do you mean," questioned the lady gently, "that God rules and reigns in your heart?".

"Yes," he answered, but his voice sounded far off, sweet and low, as if it came from a soul already well on his way through the "dark valley and shadow of death."

And still he lay there with his hand above his heart, even after that heart had ceased to beat, and the soldier-boy's soul had gone up to its God.

God doth plead with us all: "Give me thine heart." O let us all be quick to answer: "Father, thy kingdom come."

FOOLSCAP PAPER—ITS ORIGIN.—The term "foolscap," to designate a certain size of paper, no doubt has puzzled many an anxious inquirer. It appears that Charles the First, of England, granted numerous monopolies for the support of the government, among others the manufacture of paper. The water-mark of the finest sort was the royal arms of England. The consumption of this article was great, and large fortunes were made by those who purchased the exclusive right to vend it. This, among other monopolies, was set aside by the Parliament that brought Charles the First to the scaffold; and by way of showing contempt for the king, they ordered the royal arms to be taken from the paper, and a fool with his cap and bells to be substituted. It is now over two hundred years since the fool's-cap was taken from the paper, but still the paper of the size which the Rump Parliament ordered for their journals bears the name of the water-mark placed there as an indignity to King Charles.

THE WAY TO THE POORHOUSE.—A physician was walking along a road in the country one day. An old man met him, who had a bottle of whisky sticking out of his coat pocket. "Is this the way to the poorhouse, sir?" asked the old man, pointing in the direction in which he was walking. "No, sir," said the physician; "but this is," laying his hand on the bottle of whisky.

THE first act of divine justice in the infant church at Jerusalem was to punish covetousness. And yet the church has never dealt with this sin as it should. Who ever heard of a man being disciplined for covetousness? For other sins men are cast out of the church; but in this sin, which the Bible calls idolatry, they live and die without one honest rebuke.—Hall.

HANDEL happened once to be presiding over the oratorio of "Israel in Egypt." The first tenor began entirely out of tune: "I am an Israelite." Handel, who was at the organ, turned around, and glaring upon the offender, in a voice of ten thousand thunders exclaimed: "You are von great beast!"

GENERAL BLOCKER, of the Indiana Legislature, recently went to get a preacher for a funeral sermon. He found one in the woods cutting hoop-poles for a living, and "with nit enough clothes on his back to wad a shot-gun." The general forthwith introduced a bill to pay clergymen for officiating at funerals.

"SOME of the domestic evils of drunkenness are houses without windows, gardens without fences, fields without tillage, barns without roofs, children without clothing, principles, morals or manners."

"IS THAT MARBLE?" said a gentleman, pointing to a bust of Kentucky's great statesman. "No, sir; that's Clay," quietly replied the dealer.

WE SHOULD stand with our eye on the land of promise, but with our feet in the land of uprightness.

Religious Intelligence.

LOUISVILLE, KY.—The Baptists have ten Sunday schools and 1,200 scholars.

SYRIA.—The Presbyterian Board have made Zahleh a permanent station. It is a town of 10,000 souls related to a promising field.

A [illegible] Presbyterian church was organized in Brooklyn last month, at which forty members were received by letters and confession.

THE latest stretch of ritualism in England is the strenuous advocacy, by some of its clergymen, of prayers for the dead, while the introduction of the confessional is also agitated.

THE Methodist Episcopal Church in India has seventeen churches and seven parsonages, an increase for the year of three churches and one parsonage. Total valuation, $66,590.

EARL RUSSELL'S book on Christianity, soon to appear, is "The Rise and Progress of the Christian Religion in the West of Europe, from the reign of Tiberius to the end of the Council of Trent."

MISSIONS.—Dr. Shuver, in a vigorous editorial on missions, says that American Baptists contribute, for all forms of missionary work, an average of thirty-one cents per member, and only $1 for $89 worth of church property.

MR. WOODROW, Inspector of schools in Bengal, says that "only two and a half to three per cent. of the people in that presidency can read and write their mother tongue. And yet lakhs and lakhs of rupees are being spent on the higher education."

CORNWALL, the scene of many gracious revivals since Wesley's day, is again being visited in several places with "times of refreshing." Services are held almost nightly, and large numbers attend the word, and the prayer meetings which are afterward held.

THE Archbishop of Canterbury, England, has addressed a pastoral to his suffragans, calling attention to the spread of intemperance, and urging them to get their people to support the Church Temperance Society, lately formed in Lambeth Palace under his auspices.

TENNESSEE.—The agents of the American Sunday School Union, in the last six years, have organized in Tennessee 280 schools, with 1,600 teachers and 14,700 scholars; have visited 941 schools, have distributed 5,000 Bibles or Testaments, and delivered 1,400 addresses.

THE decision of the committee of arrangements of the Evangelical Alliance, to dispense with the service of the Lord's Supper at the approaching meeting, out of regard for the feelings of the Baptist brethren, is exciting considerable comment in some of the religious journals.

THE first marriage ceremonial in any Presbyterian Church, Paisley, Scotland, recently had a large attendance. The clergyman was dressed in plain clothes. Marriages are generally celebrated in the house of the bride's parents or relatives, and there are no "canonical" hours.

IN BRAZIL.—A Baptist church, composed of emigrants from the South, has been organized in Brazil. Elder R. Ratcliff, formerly of Louisiana, is pastor, and William H. Meriwether clerk. It began with twenty-three members. Three more have been baptized, and others await the ordinance.

THE edict against Christianity, which has been in force in Japan for centuries, under which thousands of professed Christians were put to death, has been formally revoked by proclamation. The mikado has also released the Christians who have been imprisoned since 1870, in whose behalf repeated efforts have been made by Christian nations.

THE Mount Vernon Place Methodist Episcopal Church, Baltimore, is pronounced the most elegant Methodist church edifice in the United States. It is lighted by electricity. The organ cost $10,000, and is worked by water-power. The cost of the lot and building was $300,000. The ordinary Sabbath morning congregation is 1,500.

THE revival connected with Mr. Hammond's labors in Denver, Colorado, has been a powerful and beneficent one. The number of conversions reported in the Denver Leader of March 27 was upward of 400. The whole city has been stirred by the movement. Scores of hardened and reckless men have professed conversion, and the character of the town will be greatly altered in the future. Results like these are certainly beyond all criticism.

THE revision of the Scriptures, now in progress under the superintendence of English and American scholars and divines, moves slowly. Bishop Ellicott, of the British and Foreign Bible Society, says the new translation cannot be completed for many years, and after that the printing and proving would occupy a long time. The Bishop is of the opinion, moreover, that the English public will hesitate before they accept the revised translation, and that probably this generation will pass away before its general adoption, if, indeed, the present edition of the Bible is ever given up.

THERE has been a large diminution in the number of the Episcopal clergy of Ireland since the disestablishment of the Irish national church. In the year 1869 there were in Ireland 2,380 incumbents and curates, and, according to the Clerical Directory, just published, there are at the present time only 1,971 clergymen of all ranks. The difference is partly accounted for by the fact that large numbers have commuted and compounded, the elders retiring from work, and the juniors leaving for more promising or more congenial spheres of duty in England.

IN CONNECTION with the opening of Mr. Hepworth's Tabernacle on last Sunday, the following from the New York Examiner will not be uninteresting: The audience-room is an immense place, capable of seating, it is said, 3,500 people. It is semi-circular, the seats radiating from the platform, and gently rising to the door. There are 347 pews, which are reached by ten aisles. The organ is behind the platform, and it is enough to take a man's breath away to look at the immense area to be filled with the human voice. The audience-room is a slight improvement on the Tabernacle of Talmage and the Iron-clad of Scudder. The cost of the building is over $100,000. The singing will be purely congregational.

THE TOBACCO WAR. The New York Methodist Conference, at its recent session, unanimously adopted the following preamble and resolution: "WHEREAS, The practice of using tobacco in its various forms has become an evil of great magnitude, and the moral sense of the church is becoming more and more decided as to its evil nature and tendency; therefore, be it Resolved, That we deplore its existence among our brethren in the ministry, and most affectionately and solemnly advise all our people, both the ministers and laity, and especially the former, to refrain from indulgence in what we deem a useless and pernicious habit."

THE Russian Church is reported to be rapidly spreading in Japan. Paul Sarvate, a Japanese bonze, or former priest of one of the oriental sects, is its active apostle. In Hakodadi recently the Bishop of Kmutschatka received ninety-five Japanese into the communion of the church, and 500 persons asked baptism. The government has taken active measures against the spread of the new religion, but without avail. It has imprisoned the catechists and dismissed all Christian officials. Notwithstanding these persecutions, however, the work has spread, and at length, after the energetic protest of the Russian consul at Hakodadi, the imprisoned Christians have been released.

IN THE Eastern Turkey mission, which embraces a wide range of country, the churches are now twenty-eight, pastors twenty-three, members 1,181; added within the year, on profession, 107; licensed native preachers, twenty-seven; registered Protestants, 6,686; pupils in theological schools and classes, seventy; in female boarding schools, eighty-four; in 115 common schools, 2,083. "The Protestant churches and communities are growing more stable, better educated, and more capable of self-government; and sifting processes are going on, which may seem like retrogression, but which are really important agencies of progress." The happy influence of the women of the mission, in their work for women, is abundantly manifest.

MORE GRIEF FOR THE POPE.—The Young Men's Christian Association, which we recently reported as just organized in Rome, is prospering beyond anticipation. The headquarters are nearly opposite the Propaganda, in the heart of the city. Two branches have been formed, one of English and one of Italian young men. Both are full of zeal, and are working with a will. It is announced that a number of gentlemen in London have agreed to pay the rent of suitable rooms for them, and also to employ and send out a young Italian, now in London, who can assist them very much in their work. A free reading-room has been opened, and about twenty periodicals are already on file there for use. Among the recent visitors to Rome, whose gifts to the cause were of special service, was Philip Phillips. He contributed a most delightful service of song.

THE American and Foreign Christian Union has just decided upon an important change in its policy, by which it gives up its entire foreign department. This step has become necessary in view of the fact that the three leading denominations that have hitherto supported the society have commenced a religious work of their own in almost all the papal countries. They have entered those very fields where the success of the Union has been most conspicuous; and even into Mexico, where its most hopeful and remarkable work has been prosecuted, they have sent not less than fourteen missionaries within the last six months. The work of the society in Italy has been assumed by the American Board, and the missions in Chili by the Presbyterian Board. There is no intention to dissolve the Union; on the contrary, the home operations will be advanced especially toward resisting Catholic aggression.—Christian Union.

MISSIONS OF THE M. E. CHURCH, PEKING.—All will read with interest, says the Methodist, the following letter from Rev. L. N. Wheeler, written at Peking, near the first of the year, but received too late for the March Missionary Advocate: "We have just purchased from the Presbyterian mission in Peking their chapel premises on one of the great streets of the city. This arrangement has been effected in consequence of the intention of our Presbyterian brethren to change their location to the northern part of Peking. We have thus secured a first-class position within convenient distance of our compound. We are receiving new encouragement in our labors. The Sunday services in our domestic chapel are still well attended. There are several inquirers, who will probably soon be received into the Tartar City class. All the members of the mission are devoting themselves to their work. Bro. Lowry keeps up daily preaching in the southern city, with very encouraging prospects, and he is now no longer disturbed by unfriendly official influence. Bro. Pitcher has also been doing an important work in the southern city, and is preparing for a protracted tour through his circuit. Bro. Davis has rented and opened a chapel in Tientsin, where many hear the word preached. We hope to see him speedily reinforced, for it would be suicidal to occupy so important a center with but a feeble force. Misses Brown and Porter are laboring in their department with zeal and fidelity. They have a promising school of young girls, and are making their impression on the women of the neighborhood."

OUR SCHOOL-BOY remarks that when his teacher undertakes to show him what is what, he only finds out which is switch.

Condition and Prospects.

The political and business state of the country has its effect upon the church. In several of the Southern States the people are passing through trials even graver than those which they encountered during the war. The sequel of subjugation is now manifesting itself far more clearly and terribly than they apprehended at the time of the surrender. The recent effort in Louisiana to obtain a better government, although fairly successful at the polls, has been rendered vain by the intervention of Federal power. A state of oppression and wrong more galling to the spirit, and more destructive to the material interests of the people, does not exist anywhere than here in our State. The taxation of property, on a just cash valuation as it was before the war, is not less than ten per cent. This is the worst form of confiscation. Better for the people if they had been all sold out for rebellion and treason at once, as this course would have been understood and have given them an opportunity to take a fresh start.

The recent bloodshed in Grant parish grew out of violence and usurpation, initiated and prosecuted by negroes, incited by white political emissaries. However much to be deprecated, we cannot see how the conflict could have been avoided on the part of the white citizens. It was not merely the parish offices, but their own lives and the safety of their families were at stake. That this unfortunate affair has been widely misrepresented to and by the Northern press is not strange. Here is the mildest paragraph in a long article of the New York Christian Advocate on "The Louisiana Outrage:"

> The government and people of this country have been trying very hard to believe, and to persuade others to believe, that the Southern rebels have become very good and loyal and law-abiding citizens, but the wolf persists in displaying his real nature in spite of the fleecy covering laid upon him. We have done a good deal of "shaking hands over the bloody chasm," but in spite of the fraternal hand-grasping there seems still to be among those who first made the chasm, and rendered it bloody, a persistent purpose that it shall be neither narrower nor less crimson. How long is this course of self-deception to be pursued, with its natural sequences of "Kukluxing" and wholesale massacres of negroes? A peril scarcely less fearful than that encountered when armed rebellion was clutching at the nation's vitals is now upon us. That same spirit of rebellion is still rampant through all the South, and waits only the opportunity of probable success to again inaugurate a reign of terror. It will be criminal in the national government to ignore these facts; and though occasional outbreaks may not be entirely avoided, yet by proper precautions they may be rendered very few in number, and when they do occur true clemency not less than justice will demand their exemplary punishment. In the name of right, of good government, of peace and of safety to all law-abiding citizens of the South, the country, we demand severe and exemplary chastisement for these assassins of Grant parish.
> We hope the real assassins—the miscreants who instigated the whole affair, and those who murdered men whom they had decoyed by a flag of truce—may receive "severe and exemplary chastisement." But this we do not expect. If the Northern Methodist Church were to judge in the matter, the white people of the South would have nothing but utter ruin to expect. The Nation, a secular paper of New York, is capable of taking a juster view of the subject than its religious neighbor. Says the Nation:
> There is now a great outcry for the punishment of these "demons," [illegible] outcry, or at least no adequate outcry, over the disgraceful connivance at Washington at the state of things which has converted Louisiana into a South American republic, and destroyed all confidence on the part of all classes, not only in the law, but in a popular vote which produces the law. How can any people put any confidence in anything but rifles who see men like Casey and Packard not only kept in office, but put back into office when their term has expired; and the majority in Congress refusing to do their duty in the settlement of the local difference, and going calmly home with their pockets full of stolen money, without one word of rebuke or disapproval from the President?

Since the South surrendered, and in good faith accepted her fate as a subjugated section, we have expected the troubles and wrongs which now prevail. We are entirely at the mercy of the conquerors, and must accept such treatment at their hands as they choose to bestow. It will be a good while yet before the North will be capable of doing us justice, or of truly understanding things here as they really are. As a section, the North has the power to crush us altogether, and to Africanize the best portion of the country. If we are to be delivered from the present oppression and the prospective disasters which many now anticipate, the relief must come from those who have brought these calamities upon us. We believe that a considerable majority of the white people in Louisiana and in some of her sister States would leave for Texas or the West if they were able to get away. They wish for peace, and for so much liberty as may enable them to support their families and educate their children. To secure these moderate ends they must seek a white man's country, where the voters have a common interest and where a war of races is impossible. Such, however, is the depreciation in the value of property, and so utterly depressed is business of nearly every kind, that the most of our people are unable to move.

Sagacious men differ in their estimate of the condition and prospects. Of the present there can hardly be any difference of opinion. The fruits of negro and carpet-bag legislation, supported by Federal bayonets, are manifest. But what hope is there of better times? Some are disposed to look upon the present as a transition state, and that a few years of patient endurance will bring about a change for the better. Others look forward to increased depression and misfortune, until the property goes into other hands, and until white emigration sets in sufficiently to be felt in the political and industrial affairs of the country. The work of the church, amidst these disturbing and discouraging circumstances, is more or less hindered. Where many are moving away, and the minds of the people are diverted to other subjects, the increase in membership will probably be small. Then there is danger to the piety of the church while subjected to the heaviest and most irritating provocations. The wrongs, insults and robberies we are compelled to endure will try our faith to the uttermost. The weak may be tempted to doubt, and they may even be led to distrust God. Many will find it difficult to keep themselves in the love of God while they are the witnesses and victims of injustice and tyranny. They may find it more difficult to keep aloof from the prejudices, passions and excitements of the hour. People and pastors should be guarded, and walk circumspectly. Our feelings and sympathies must be more or less enlisted, and our temporal interests are of course involved, but we are as much as possible to live peaceably with all, and to promote all the graces and charities of the Christian life. Patience and love under oppression and misrepresentation are the highest indications of our faith.

We must commit our country and ourselves to God. There will be much straitness, no doubt, in church finances. It has been so for years past, and things just now are harder than ever. More effort will be required to bring up the collections, and every one must do his part or there will be distress. The duty of the preachers is plain. The country never needed the gospel more. They must be faithful, live nearer to God than ever, and look for reviving power. Despite the times, we hear of awakenings at a few points in the Southwest. Let us pray for more refreshing manifestations of divine grace. For, after all, our help for State and Church, for the country and for Zion, is in God. Great difficulties, by toning up the faith and by increasing the effort of the church, sometimes lead to the largest blessings. Let us pray for the reviving power. We hope, from this time to the end of the year, to keep more than one column filled with bulletins from the front, glowing with accounts of spiritual victories.

BALTIMORE PAYS FOR THE CHAPEL.

BY BISHOP KEENER.

BALTIMORE, May 1, 1875.

MR. EDITOR: After an absence of six years I found myself in the place of my birth, and among relatives and connections by the score. Some of my father's friends still remain, but the greater part have fallen asleep. In the places of those merchants, public men and ministers of Christ who were the admiration of my youth, another generation has come into active life. Boys I once knew are now presidents and cashiers of banks, deep in stocks, or the heads of firms whose agents, ships and lines of traffic are reaching out toward the ends of the earth. Baltimore, always beautiful, looks larger and fairer than ever. Her houses are the perfection of neatness. The smooth-faced brick for which this city is so famous is relieved with white marble from Baltimore county. Nothing can be finer than the general effect of this combination; for these materials retain their freshness for a long time, and it is not easy to distinguish between a new house and an old one. On every side streets are piercing the fields, and whole rows of four-story houses now stand where a few years back boys wandered in search of birds'-nests and berries. But it is specially in the luxury of costly and imposing churches that this city has, during the past decade, surprised itself. A plain Methodist society worships in a house that cost, with the ground on which it stands, $400,000, and vies in expression with the most sublimely beautiful of all monuments—that raised by Maryland in honor of the great Virginian. The Presbyterians have a red sandstone structure, just now about to be finished, which is even richer in architectural merit, though not so costly as Mount Vernon. The Baptists have a white marble church of surpassing grace. The spire is of marble up to the point of its finial. It stands on an elevation. I saw the clouds passing slowly over it. The Episcopalians, low-church, have a structure as white as the top of Ixtaccihuatl, with a spire that rises nearly two hundred feet. Besides these there are many more unpretending houses of worship, and I know of no city with so large sitting accommodation for Sabbath audiences.

Our own Methodist E. Church South has several capital houses, well located and well attended. In one of these we held, last week, a meeting of all our people to see what could be done for Mexico. It was the very first one of the kind held since my return. As new brooms are said to sweep clean, you may be sure it yielded something quite handsome. The members of the Madison Avenue Methodist Episcopal Church took the very graceful method of recognizing the loan of the Capilla de San Andres to Dr. Butler by contributing $170 toward the result. The proposition was that our churches in Baltimore should pay for the "Capilla." This they responded to promptly, and $2,029.90 were contributed, some of it in "futures," but all by very responsible parties. On the following Sabbath, after the sermon at St. Paul's, a lady (Mrs. Gault) and her two daughters contributed $30 more, and at night, after the sermon at Bethany, the pastor secured a collection of $110. The Chatsworth Independent Methodist church also was represented in the good work, as will be seen by the following detailed statement of the several contributors at the Trinity meeting:

|---|---|
| Trinity church | $708 00 |
| Sunday School Teachers' Association | 100 00 |
| St. Paul's church | 300 00 |
| Central church | 150 00 |
| Emanuel church | 205 00 |
| Hookstown | 20 00 |
| Monument Street M. E. Church | 5 00 |
| Madison Avenue church | 170 00 |
| Chatsworth | 70 00 |
| Bethany (C. J. Baker) | 100 00 |
| Collection in hands of Bro. Stepley, for Mexico | 140 00 |
| Cash | 61 90 |
| | $2,029 90 |

To this add:

|---|---|
| Lady and daughters, at St. Paul's | 30 00 |
| Bethany, at night | 110 00 |
| Making a total of | $2,169 90 |

which I have in cash and subscriptions as a token of the good will and favor with which our churches here look upon this mission. The ladies of Southern Methodism enter heartily into the good work. They have organized a society—"Woman's Bible-Reading Mission"—and are collecting funds to support female Bible distributors and missionaries in foreign fields. Mrs. Hayes and Miss Melissa Baker are prominent in this good work. The object is to form auxiliary societies, which shall collect money for missions. It was my privilege to meet with them twice, and they awakened a responsive purpose in my heart to further, as far as I may be able, their noble designs.

Our preachers here are doing good work and they are true men. Our church is stronger and healthier than at any time before in Baltimore. The pastor at Trinity has of late had some sixty conversions and accessions to its membership. The troubles through which our cause has passed have been overruled for good.

I leave here to-day for Louisville. Shall spend the next Sabbath there.

Report of Publishing Committee.

The Publishing Committee of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE met in New Orleans on the sixteenth of April. The Conferences confide to us a general supervision of the financial and editorial departments of the ADVOCATE, and the committee imposed upon the undersigned the summing of results. The series of resolutions already made public are our indorsement of the editor and publisher of the paper.

The entire expense of publication is assumed by Rev. R. J. Harp, the committee, upon conditions mutually agreeable, relinquishing in his favor all interest in the revenue arising from subscriptions, advertisements, etc.

The report of the publisher convinces us that the income of the paper, with the most rigid economy, is not adequate to its support. The regular weekly issue does not exceed eight thousand, and the reduction of the price of subscription to $2 per annum has failed to effect any material increase of its circulation.

In material and mechanical execution the publisher has performed his part of the contract to the full satisfaction of the committee; and although a large portion of the paper is occupied with advertisements, we are convinced that this cannot be reduced without such pecuniary loss as would seriously peril its existence.

It is not necessary that we should incorporate the balance-sheet of the publisher in our report to convince the church that the present arrangement for the publication of the ADVOCATE has abated nothing from the struggle for financial existence.

Fortunately for the readers of the ADVOCATE, the official duality of the editor entitles him to a partial support as presiding elder, although it imposes upon him burdens grievous to be borne. With his department the readers of the ADVOCATE are approvingly familiar, and we think we but utter the opinion of the church when we say that his work is well done. A more economical and judicious appropriation of the columns devoted to reading matter cannot be made. The editorials are timely, well thought, clearly expressed and eminently suggestive; and the selections are made with a view to the interest and profit of his readers.

That portion of the paper which the editor proposes to have occupied with current thought is not always filled to his satisfaction; but the fault is not his, for no forces he has yet been able to apply have stimulated a class of writers whose contributions might enhance their abundance, and add greatly to the intellectual and moral value of the paper.

These facts being given, how may we most certainly and speedily place the paper upon a self-supporting basis? becomes a question of grave import, and we appeal to the church for an answer. We do not question its importance as a means of communicating information; as the repository of the dying testimony of our people to the truth and the power of the gospel to save from sin and fear; as the expositor and advocate of the doctrine and polity of the church; nor do we give place, no not for a moment, to the thought that the ministry or membership of the church in the patronizing Conferences will hesitate to make any reasonable sacrifice for its support. We believe that its subscription could be doubled within the year if its agents and friends would obey the dictate of conscience and duty. The eagerness with which we wait for it, our impatience if it is delayed, and the delight and profit we derive from its perusal, are the proofs of our appreciation. Its weekly visits, wisely distributing its full supplies to all classes and ages of its readers, is hailed by the household. Shall we appropriate its benefits to our selfish greed, or shall we condemn it to an inferior rank by a timid commendation? As we love the church and love the truth, and love the cause of our Redeemer, we should promptly and steadily endeavor to promote its more general circulation.

W. H. WATKINS, Chairman.

The Reign of Grace.

The religion of Jesus proposes to control the whole being and the whole life. Religion is simply a consecration to God. The effect of this consecration is that the whole nature is brought under the dominion of grace. The man who is wholly religious is the man in whom grace not only exists and manifests itself, but in whom "grace reigns." Man is necessarily under government. The constitution of his being places him under law. Whether as a sinner or as a Christian, this is evidently true. In the one case he is under the government of satan and the law of sin. In the other he is under the government of God and the law of grace. The object of religion is to deliver man from the rule of the devil, and to abrogate the law of sin under which he groans. Now if religion is not competent to this work, it is defective and does not answer the purpose for which it was given. Religion must overthrow the dominion of satan and abolish the law of sin, or it can do man no good. In place of these it must set up the government of God and promulgate the law of grace, or it is merely a negative thing. The province of religion, then, is to rule the whole man, and if it does not rule the whole man it is defective somewhere. The whole man has felt the effects of sin. The mind and soul and body have all felt the dire results of transgression. Religion is the cure for these effects, and to exert its proper healing and counteracting influences it must go wherever the disease has gone. It must run through all the emotions of the soul. It must course along all the faculties of the mind. It must lay its healing hand upon every member of the body. If it does not do this its full work is not done. The man is not what he ought to be. Grace does not reign without a rival. The piety of the man who has this sort of religion is defective—it is one-sided. The light which he "lets shine" is a reflection, not a radiation. The side opposite the light is in "gross darkness." But where "grace reigns," where "the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus" is obeyed, the "true light shines" in every direction. In such a person there is no darkness at all. In such an one religion operates according to God's law and the human constitution, and the consequence is such an one is brought into harmony with God and with God's universe. "Grace reigns," and the life is but a faint expression of the power of grace, and does more to show forth the beauty of piety than a score of people whose religion is one-sided. "Grace reigns," and the actions and feelings and thoughts are brought under her peaceful sway, and the man is happy simply because his life is in accord with the will of the Lord. One great difficulty with people trying to be religious lies in the fact that, instead of permitting grace to reign supreme in and over their lives, they are continually seeking to control and govern it. Human nature has ever been impatient of control. It delights to rule everything within its reach. It tries to rule religion, and when it does, of course, grace does not reign. People often bend their religion to suit their desires and hopes, when those desires and hopes should be subordinated to the sceptre of grace. The man who leads this sort of a life must have a great many "ups and downs," and not a few "ins and outs." The current of his being must be a troubled current. There is not that placid flow, that noiseless hope which characterizes the current of the life where "grace reigns." Nothing this side of heaven can equal the quiet enjoyment, the peaceful happiness of a life in which "grace reigns." Nothing can equal the beauty of a life in perfect harmony with the teachings of religion and subordinated entirely to her control. Such beauty as is found where "grace reigns" excels all other beauty. Like the orange of a Southern clime, a life where "grace reigns" is all the time flowering and shedding its sweet perfumes and dropping its golden fruits. "The beauty of holiness" can be excelled by no beauty of earth. The glories of an early morn fade before the glories of a young life consecrated to God!

> "The clouds that float around the setting sun,
> Like crimson drapery o'er a monarch's throne,"

are dull in comparison with the beautiful radiance that sheds itself over the evening of a life spent in devotion to God and humanity. There is no harmony so enchanting as that which grace establishes between the aspirations of the soul and the will of God. There is no philosophy so sound as that which demonstrates that the mind is working in its proper sphere when its highest hopes and most restless activities are seeking to accomplish the will of the Lord.

My brother, let "grace reign through righteousness unto eternal life by Jesus Christ our Lord." Then the deepest desire of the soul will be fulfilled and the highest aspiration of the nature realized. Then the great calm which Jesus only can produce will fill every chamber of the being, and the light of the Lord's love will shine away the darkness, and life will become "a thing of beauty and a joy forever."

OUTIS.

OUR brethren in Lebanon, Tennessee, says the Western Methodist, are enjoying a season of revival. President Stark, of Corona Female College, writes: "We have a good meeting in progress here. The Rev. S. M. Merrill, of Nashville, is helping us. Already every unconverted person of the Corona household has been brought to the Savior. I thank God that nearly every boarding pupil who has been in Corona during the last three years has become a Christian. The result arrived at in Corona is a highly cultivated Christian woman."

Bereaved.

Bro. H. J. Harris, of the Mississippi Conference (Crystal Springs,) writes us of a double sorrow. We deeply sympathize with him [illegible] family in their heavy trial. Bro. Harris says:

Our sweet daughter, Nannie Early, died of consumption on Friday morning last, May 2, at five minutes before three o'clock. For six months to a day we had waited and watched with her. Except for four days, I have not felt at liberty to leave home, because of her condition, for the last four months.

God was with her and gave her a glorious victory over death. As she neared the gates of death, just recovering from a dreadful paroxysm peculiar to the last stage of her disease, she said: "Pa, I'm almost over—almost home. Jesus is precious. Glory!"

On Thursday morning last, at five o'clock, my precious mother (Mrs. H. P. Moseley, of Clinton, Mississippi) died. When the telegram reached me, announcing this fact, I did not hesitate to tell my dying child that her grandmother had just gone before her. She exclaimed: "Glory to God!" One more cause for me to be happy. I will soon meet her in heaven."

My dear brother, I have experienced more of the power of God under this bereavement than in all past experience. As parents we feel and can say through grace: "The Lord gave and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord."

Revival in Augusta, Georgia.

Rev. C. W. Key writes to the Southern Christian Advocate, April 23, of the remarkable work in Augusta:

It has been the most extraordinary revival that has visited this charge since its organization. It has taken hold of all classes of the people, old and young, and stirred the church from its center to the circumference. Up to this time there have been one hundred and fifty members added to the church by profession, and still the work goes on with but little abatement; and what will be the final result we cannot say, but hope and pray that many scores more may yet be brought in. The conversions have been clear and powerful. The influence of these meetings at St. James and Asbury is felt at other points. The tide of feeling is rising at old St. John's, and there are clear indications of the coming shower. It is earnestly desired and prayed for that the right and left wing of this sacramental host may be directed to the center, and that the greatest of all the victories may be won. Taking the state of all these charges together, and I hesitate not to say that there is a more powerful religious influence felt and a better religious feeling enjoyed in the Methodist Church in Augusta than has been manifest in over thirty years past.

There have been over two hundred and fifty members added to the three charges here by profession during the last eight weeks, and it is hoped, from the present prospect, that as many more may be reported during the next eight weeks.

Camp Meeting.

We are requested to state that the meeting which was to have been held at the Carondelet Street church on Monday night last, and which was prevented by the rain, will be held on Monday night, the twelfth instant, at half-past seven o'clock. All are invited to be present. The object is to confer on the subject of the approaching camp meeting, and to raise money to pay a debt already incurred, and to secure the needed means to provide for the meeting in August.

SAD BEREAVEMENT.—It was with emotions of profound sadness, says the Southern Christian Advocate, that we learned, a few days since, that Rev. Henry D. Moore, president of Tuskegee Female College, had passed through Macon, attending the remains of his beloved wife to Marshallville, Georgia, for interment. Sister Moore, we learn, died of pneumonia, in Tuskegee, Alabama, on the twentieth of April. Bro. Moore will have, in this deeply afflictive season, the warm sympathies of his ministerial brethren, and of a very wide circle of friends, to whom he is greatly endeared.

WE HAVE, says the Raleigh Christian Advocate, cheering news from the church at Goldsboro, which is under the efficient charge of Rev. J. E. Mann. A revival has been in progress for some time and still continues with fine effect. The Goldsboro Messenger says:

"The revival at the Methodist church is still progressing, and the interest manifested seems to increase daily. About fifty persons have professed conversion, and the altar is still thronged with penitents."

THE Rev. J. J. Engle, says the Baltimore Episcopal Methodist, writes to us as follows, under date of April 21: "It affords me great pleasure to inform you that the Lord is doing great things for us at Bridgewater, Virginia. About forty-five have professed saving faith in Christ, and still the work goes on. To God be all the glory. We have been favored with the valuable services of Rev. W. R. McNeer, who has labored with great zeal and efficiency."

THE faithful labors of Dr. Cravens at the meeting at St. James, says the Galveston Christian Advocate, have been crowned with signal results. The interest of the meeting increased every night. Nearly a score were converted, while the church has been much strengthened. The old friends of Bro. Cravens gave him a cordial welcome, and he left bearing the warmest feelings of Christian affection from those who were benefited by his labors.

Books and Periodicals.

LECTURES ON LIGHT. Delivered in the United States in 1872-73. By John Tyndall, LL. D., F. R. S. New York: D. Appleton & Co., 1873.

These lectures, during their delivery the past winter, have been highly praised by the New York press, and were perhaps the most popular and successful of any course of lectures ever delivered on scientific subjects in America. In their delivery Mr. Tyndall indulged in some uncalled-for strictures upon the views and belief of orthodox Christians. We do not know that these have been put into the book, and we hope not. The author, when he keeps to science, is without a living superior, but his materialistic and skeptical suggestions are most foolish and pernicious. For sale by R. J. Harp, Methodist Depository, 110 and 112 Camp street, New Orleans.

SOUND. A course of eight lectures delivered at the Royal Institution of Great Britain. By John Tyndall, LL. D., F. R. S. New York: D. Appleton & Co., 1873.

This is the latest exposition of the phenomena of sound. The style is as simple and popular as possible, and the illustrations are both numerous and well executed. Prof. Tyndall says in the preface: "In the following pages I have tried to render the science of acoustics interesting to all intelligent persons, including those who do not possess any special scientific culture." We think he has tried and succeeded. For sale by R. J. Harp, Southern Methodist Depository, 110 and 112 Camp street, New Orleans.

FOURTEEN WEEKS IN HUMAN PHYSIOLOGY. By J. Dermann Steele: A. S. Barnes & Co., New York.

Received through A. H. Wilkins, agent, 112 Camp street, New Orleans. Noticed some time ago.

THE SOUTHERN REVIEW for April has reached us rather late. We have found time to read through scarcely more than half of the articles, but we have dipped into all here and there. We are more than ever impressed with the ability and value of the publication. The present number is surpassingly good. We give the contents, as follows: 1. The Apostolical Succession; 2. Peggy O'Neal, or the Doom of the Republic; 3. A Methodist in Search of the Church; 4. Lamon's Life of Lincoln; 5. The Moral Effects of a Free Justification; 6. Demonism; 7. The Virginia Springs and Mountains; 8. De Natura Gemmarum; 9. The Model Republic, Credit Mobilier; 10. The German; 11. Notices of Books.

THE SUNDAY MAGAZINE for April, besides the usual readable articles, contains an engraving and biographical sketch of the late senior editor, Rev. Thomas Guthrie. Dr. W. G. Blaikie is now sole editor, and will probably keep the magazine up to its past standard of excellence.

THE FUTURE OF SHREVEPORT is the title of a well-written pamphlet of thirty-three pages, prepared by A. D. Battle and H. J. Hearsey, editors of the Shreveport Times. Shreveport is the most flourishing city in the Southwest, and evidently has a bright and growing future.

WE HAVE RECEIVED from those well-known and enterprising music publishers, Oliver Ditson & Co., Boston, and C. H. Ditson & Co., New York, twenty-two choice pieces of sheet music.

THE ALDINE for May devotes several fine engravings to the most valuable buildings of new Chicago. The Seashore and the Unbidden Guests are both very fine engravings.

OF OTHER May periodicals we have received the Southern Methodist Monthly, Old and New, Lippincott's, Scribner's, the Southern Magazine, Arthur's Home Magazine, the Children's Hour and the Galaxy.

GOOD WORDS for April is unusually varied and entertaining. Devotional readings from the manuscripts of the late Norman McLeod are continued in this number.

THE CHRISTIAN VOICE is a very handsome monthly paper, published in Chicago, at sixty cents per annum.

OUR Sunday school publications for May have been received. A most delightful and edifying lot they are.

STEAM PLOWING is an interesting pamphlet, by D. D. Williamson, New York.

POWER OF INFLUENCE.—The stone, flung from my careless hand into thy lake, splashed down into the depths of the flowing water, and that was all. No, it was not all. Look at those eccentric rings, rolling their tiny ripples among the sedgy reeds, dipping the overhanging boughs of young willow, and producing an influence, slight but conscious, to the shores of the lake itself. That hasty word, that word of pride or scorn flung from my lips in casual company, produces a momentary depression, and that is all. No, it is not all. It deepened that man's disgust at dulliness, and it sharpened the edge of that man's sarcasm, and it shamed that half-converted one out of his penitent misgivings, and it produced an influence, slight but eternal, on the destiny of an immortal life. Oh, it is a terrible power that I have—this power of influence—and it clings to me. I cannot shake it off. It is born with me; it has grown with my growth and strengthened with my strength. It speaks, it walks, it moves; it is powerful in every look of my eye, in every word of my lips, in every act of my life. I cannot live to myself. I must either be an Abel who, by his immortal righteousness, being dead yet speaketh, or an Achan, the saddest continuance of whose otherwise forgotten name is the fact that man perishes not alone in his iniquity. O brethren, this necessary element of power belongs to you all. Thy sphere may be contracted, thine influence may be small, but a sphere and influence you have.

A LONDON PAPER states that more than one hundred thousand pounds of human hair was imported into Marseilles in 1872, principally from China.

Gentile and Jew.

A correspondent in Buffalo writes to the New York Observer, under date of January 19: Yesterday the Rev. Frederick Frothingham, of the Unitarian church in this city, preached in the Jewish synagogue and to-day the Rabbi Falk preached in the Unitarian church. The rabbi's sermon was a grand, and to most of us an enlightening one, for it pointed out the attitude of modern Judaism toward the world and Christianity as few had understood it before. "Reformed Judaism," he said, "had ceased to expect a Messiah and the restoration of political power, but looked to the final salvation and union of all people under one God." All the service beautifully befitted the occasion. The first hymn given out by Mr. Frothingham was:

"O thou to whom in ancient time
The lyre of Hebrew bards was strung,
Whom kings adored in song sublime,
And prophets praised with glowing tongue.

"Not now on Zion's height alone
Thy favored worshipers may dwell," etc.

The next hymn, the rabbi's own selection, was equally significant:

"All-seeing God! 'tis thine to know
The springs whence wrong opinions flow;
To judge from principles within,
When frailty errs, and when 'we sin.

"Who among men, great Lord of all,
Thy servant to his bar shall call?
Judge him, for modes of faith, thy foe,
And doom him to the realms of woe?" etc.

Certainly this is a remarkable sign of the times. That a preacher of Unitarian views should acknowledge the Christ as one "whom ancient kings adored," and that the Jewish rabbi should cease to look for the coming of the Messiah, are significant facts, showing plainly that both of them have made progress toward the truth. The movement is in the right direction, and we will hope that both Jew and Gentile will yet be one in Christ Jesus.

HORSE-TALK.—We read that Blondin is dead, and that Socrates has recovered from the epizootic; but, stranger still, that the "sire of Mr. Steel" has also had the epizootic, and is doing well. There is much about horse-talk that makes it necessary for an ordinary person to think twice before he understands it.

MESSRS. LEWIS & HEDRICK, at No. 103 Canal street, manufacture and keep for sale a large stock of ladies' suits and underwear.

RICHARD BRODERICK, No. 132 Julia street, cistern-maker. Second-hand cisterns always on hand.

WE QUOTE from the New Orleans Picayune: "The crowd of visitors were much pleased with the courtesy and attention of Mr. J. R. Alcee Gauthreaux, agent for the Victor scales, who not only weighed all comers, but issued to them neatly-printed certificates of their weights. The Victor scales carried off all the premiums, and were pronounced by all not only correct in balance, but elegant in finish."

HAIR FACTORY.—Mr. J. G. Bermel, whose manufactory gives employment to about forty young girls, exhibited at the Fair specimens of work showing enterprise and skill highly creditable to home manufactories. He was awarded a gold medal for the largest display, and a silver medal for the best fancy goods in his line. See advertisement elsewhere.

WASHBURN'S ART GALLERY, No. 113 CANAL STREET.—Mr. Washburn says: "The demand for copies from old daguerreotypes, photographs and other pictures of deceased friends has been so great that I have made copying and enlarging a specialty." Persons desiring this kind of work would do well to examine the specimens at Washburn's.

MARBLE AND GRANITE WORKS.—There is no better place in the city or Southwest so far as our information extends, to get any work done in marble and granite more satisfactorily than at the large establishment of George Stroud, who is well and favorably known as prompt, faithful and reliable, and keeps that class of workmen in his works.

TEA AND PAPER.—The China and Japan Tea and Paper Company exhibited at the recent State Fair one hundred samples of tea, ranging in price from fifty cents to $1, and for the excellent quality of the flavor of their teas were awarded the blue ribbon, with certificate. Their advertisement will be found in another column.

BABCOCK FIRE EXTINGUISHER.—We are assured by eye-witnesses that the trial of the extinguisher at the State Fair, which has just closed, was a complete success, extinguishing the flames which completely enveloped the building provided for the occasion, composed of highly combustible material.

PHOTOGRAPHS.—Mr. T. Lilienthal, No. 131 Poydras street, whose advertisement appears in this issue of the ADVOCATE, has been awarded silver medals and blue ribbons by the Louisiana Agricultural and Mechanics' Fair for the superiority of the photographs taken at his gallery.

BUCHU AND DANDELION

Acts on the Urinary and Biliary organs. Nature has provided these outlets or sewers through which the wastes or impurities of the organism may be eliminated. When these organs are torpid and inactive these wastes are retained in the circulation, become fruitful causes of disease and clog up the whole machinery, producing congestion and general derangement of the health.

BUCHU AND DANDELION, directly affecting the Kidneys and Liver, invigorates them to a healthy action and promotes the expulsion from the system of the exciting cause of Gout, Rheumatism, Dropsy, Scrofula, Diabetes, Gravel, Brick-dust Deposits, Inflammatory Diseases, Skin Diseases, Congestion of Kidneys and Liver, Cancer and similar diseases that make life hateful. Remove the cause, you cure the disease. Buchu and Dandelion does this by direct action on the Kidneys and Liver. This action is sure, but it is also gentle. There is no shock to the system, no prostration, no severe cathartic effect, but a mild and certain relief from congestion, consequent on the clogging up of the blood with impurities.

BUCHU AND DANDELION contains an ingredient that neutralizes that acid in the blood which causes Rheumatism, and then drives out of the system the neutralized matter.

This medicine cures unhealthy mucous discharges from the urinary canal, from whatever cause arising. It does the work claimed for any Buchu, and does it better than any other preparation in the market. It is the best and surest remedy offered to the public. It is based on common sense ideas. It acts mildly, but surely and beneficially. Try it.

CAST OUT THE DEVILS

of malarial poison in the blood, which cause the bones to ache, the teeth to chatter, the head to burn and throb with fever, the stomach to writhe in an agony of unassisted effort to eject from the system the nauseous presence of the Prince of devils—the ALCE.

Those remedies which suddenly check the chills do not bring permanent relief from this fearful disease. There is in the blood a poison that must be met, overcome and ejected before a permanent cure can be effected. In accomplishing this plain, common sense idea no remedy has ever yet been offered that so fully meets the case as

KRESS FEVER TONIC.

It enters the circulation, meets the foe, grapples him, overcomes his powers and ejects him from the system. A box of Liver Pills (free) inclosed with each bottle. Removing the cause of Chills and Fever, it effects permanent cures, and leaves the system in a healthy and vigorous condition. Ten years of competitive service justifies its claims to regal honors as

THE KING OF AGUE CURES,

and also justifies Messrs. W. C. HAMILTON & CO., of Cincinnati, Ohio, the proprietors of this remedy, in warranting a cure in every case where KRESS FEVER TONIC is used as directed. The trade supplied by

The Child's Corner.

THE CHILD AND THE RILL.

CHILD.

Beautiful rill,
Sparkling and bright,
Gliding so still
From morn to night,
Who taught thee to flow?
Who ordered thy course?
And thy fount feeds whence?

RILL.

'Twas God, my dear child,
Who gave me my source
He taught me to flow,
And ordered my course
'Neath the shade of the trees,
By the side of the hills,
'Mid the grass and the flowers,
So gentle and still.

And this is the place
For me to do good:
At the foot of the hill,
In the shade of the wood,
I water the herbs;
I refresh the tall trees;
I nurture the flowers,
And cool every breeze.

And if, my dear child,
God o'er fixes your lot
At the foot of the hill,
Come, oh, come to this spot!
Hear the beautiful birds
Sing among the thick bowers,
And see the blithe bees
Sipping sweets from the flowers.

See what beauty and love,
And what happiness too,
Spring up by my side,
And your pathway pursue;
Nor sigh to be great,
Like the ocean or flood;
But, like the small rill,
Be content to do good.

Poor Little Sandie.

Away off, I believe, in Edinburg, two gentlemen were standing at the door of a hotel, one very cold day, when a little boy, with a poor, thin, pine face, his feet bare and red with the cold, and with nothing to cover him but a bundle of rags, came and said: "Please, sir, buy some matches?" "No, I don't want any," the gentleman said. "But they are only a penny a box," the little fellow pleaded. "Yes; but you see we do not want a box," the gentleman said again. "Then I will give you two boxes for a penny," the boy said at last. "And so to get rid of him," the gentleman who tells the story in an English paper says, "I bought a box. But then I found I had no change; so I said: 'I will buy a box to-morrow.' 'Oh! do buy them the nicht, if ye please,' the boy pleaded again. 'I will rin and get ye the change; for I am verra hungry.' So I gave him the shilling and he started away; and I waited for him, but no boy came. Then I thought I had lost my shilling; but still there was that in the boy's face that I trusted, and I did not like to think bad of him. Well, late in the evening a servant came, and said a little boy wanted to see me. When he was brought in I saw it was a smaller brother of the boy that got my shilling, but, if possible, still more ragged and poor and thin. He stood a moment, diving into his rags, as if he was seeking for something, and then said: 'Are ye the gentleman that bought the matches frae Sandie?' 'Yes.' 'Weel, then, here's fourpence oot o' yer shillin'. Sandie canna come; he's no weel. A cart ran over him and knocked him doon, and he lost his bonnet and his matches, and your sevenpence; and both his legs are broken, and he's no weel at a', and the doctor says he'll dee. And that's a' he can gie ye the noo,' putting fourpence down on the table; and then the poor child broke down into great sobs. So I fed the little man," the gentleman goes on to say, "and then I went with him to see Sandie. I found that the two little things lived with a wretched, drunken stepmother; their own father and mother were both dead. I found poor Sandie lying on a bundle of shavings; he knew me as soon as I came in, and said: 'I got the change, sir, and was coming back; and then the horse knocked me doon, and both my legs are broken. And, O Reuby, little Reuby! I am sure I'm deein'! and who will take care o' ye, Reuby; when I am gane? What will ye do, Reuby?' Then I took the poor little sufferer's hand, and told him I would always take care of Reuby. He understood me, and had just strength to look at me as if he would thank me, then the light went out of his blue eyes, and in a moment

"'He lay within the light of God,
Like a babe upon the breast;
Where the wickest cease from troubling,
And the weary great rest.'"

Come, children, listen to me, and I will teach you there is but one way; it is to be tender, trusty and true. Whenever you are tempted to tell what is not true, or to be hard on other little boys and girls, or to take what mother has said you must not take, I want you to remember little Sandie. This poor little man, lying on a bundle of shavings, dying and starving, was tender, trusty and true; and so God told the gentleman to take poor little friendless Reuby, and be a friend to him. And Sandie heard him say he would do it—just the last thing he ever did hear, and then, before I can tell you, the dark room, the bad stepmother, the bundle of shavings, the weary, broken little limbs, all faded away, and Saudie was among the angels. And I think the angels would take him and hold him until one came with the sweetest, kindest face you ever saw; and that was Jesus. And he said: "Suffer the little child to come unto me;" and then he took him in his arms and blessed him. And then Saudie's own father and mother would come and bear him away to their own home; for in our Father's house there are many mansions, and Sandie lives there now. And I think that the angels who have never known any pain, who never wore rags or sold matches, or were hungry or cold, came to look at Saudie in his new home, and wonder, and say to one another: "That is the little man that kept his word, and sent back fourpence, and was tender and trusty and true when he was hungry and faint, and both his legs were broken, and he lay a-dying." And Sandie would only find out what a grand, good thing he had done when he was right at home there in heaven. But I tell you to-day, little children, because, whether it be hard or whether it be easy, I want you to be as tender and trusty and true as Sandie, every time.—Monthly Journal.

AN EASTERN FABLE.—An ant laden with a grain of corn, which he had acquired with infinite toil, was breasting a current of his fellows, each of whom, as is the etiquette, insisted upon stopping him, feeling him all over, and shaking hands. It occurred to him that an excess of ceremony is an abuse of courtesy. So he laid down his burden, sat upon it, folded all his legs tight to his body, and smiled a smile of great grimness. "What is the matter with you?" exclaimed the first insect whose overtures were declined.

"Sick of the hollow conventionalities of a rotten civilization," was the rasping reply. "Relapsed into the highest simplicity of primitive observances. Go to grass!"

"Ah, then, we must trouble you for that corn. In a condition of primitive simplicity there are no rights of property, you know. There are 'hollow conventionalities.'"

A light dawned upon the intellect of that plsmire. He shook the reels out of his legs; he scratched the reverse of his ear; he grappled that cereal, and trotted away like a giant refreshed. It was observed that he submitted with a wealth of patience to manipulation by his friends and neighbors, and went some distance out of his way to shake hands with strangers on competing lines of traffic.

Nevertheless, this fable does not teach that social observances are always—or even commonly—grounded in good sense. If it did, that would make it true.

What an Army for Christ.

I can't help thinking about it again and again, what a host of children read the Child's Paper! I suppose there may be a million of them, and perhaps more. A million! You can't understand how large that number is. It would take you ever and ever so long to count it. You who live in a city, sometimes, it may be, at a Sabbath school anniversary, have seen five thousand children together; and what a crowd they made! But it would take two hundred such crowds to make a million! Some of you may be in a Sabbath school that has two hundred children in it; but it would take five thousand such schools to make a million!

As often as I think of this great host, I think what an army for Christ these dear children would make if they all truly loved him! A million of children, all trusting in Jesus and enlisting under his banner! What battles they might fight for him! what victories they might win! To how many of their schoolmates and playmates they might tell "the old, old story," and persuade them to join the army; and so, in a little while, they would get so many recruits that the million would become two millions, and then the two millions might grow to four millions! Would not that be glorious?

This million boys and girls who read the Child's Paper, all for Jesus? Why not? Jesus wants you all. Not one of you would he reject. There is not one of you whom he would not be glad to see in his grand army. He loves you all; he has died for you all; and he invites you all to come and take him for your Leader and Savior.

And you all would be safer and happier by doing so. You would have an almighty Friend, the great Captain of our salvation. Your conscience would tell you that you had done right; your friends who love Jesus would be ever so happy; and there would be joy among the angels in heaven.

I can't tell you how large a work you might do for Jesus if you began thus early, nor how much you would enjoy it, for nothing makes us so happy as working for Jesus. Neither can I tell you how many snares and troubles you would escape, nor how glad you would be, when your work here is all done, and you stand before the great white throne, to see Christ, the Judge, smile upon you, and hear him say: "Well done, good and faithful servant; enter into the joy of thy Lord;" nor how blessed you would be forever and ever.

It is the very best thing you can do to join Christ's army; there is no mistake about it. Ask your minister if it is not so. Ask your Sabbath school teacher if it is not so. It is a most beautiful sight to see a little child come and give himself or herself to Jesus, and begin to serve him. And you will not lose by doing so, but will gain more than all the world can give. Oh, it is ever so much better to be on Christ's side than to be against him.

How can all this million of children be brought to join Christ's army? It is a very large number, and it seems a very great work to undertake.

But suppose each boy or girl should say: "Whatever other children may do, I will give my heart to Christ; I will take him for my Savior; I will join his army. I will not wait; I do it now. Here, blessed Jesus, who didst die for me, take me and make me wholly thine!" If each one would do this, the great work would be done, and it would be the gladdest day the world has ever seen.

Won't you do this, my dear little friend; won't you give your heart to Christ now? I know many children who have done it, and they are right glad. They tell me they love Jesus, and love to be in his army, and wouldn't leave it for all the world. They love to think about him and talk about him, and they expect to live with him in heaven forever. But if you don't belong to Christ's army here, you can't live with him there. Blessed are all they that put their trust in him. Won't you be one of that number? I invite you; I urge you. I can't wish for you any other blessing so great. You'll be right glad when you have done it, and glad forever and ever.—Child's Paper.

SEVERAL little girls were in my study, seeking counsel to aid them in becoming Christians. One of them, a dear child, not much more than eleven years old, said:

"I haven't been to two or three of the meetings lately."

Desiring to test her, I answered:

"It don't make us Christians to attend meetings, Lizzie."

"I know that," she replied at once, "but it keeps it in mind."

Farm, Garden and Household.

Culture of the Irish Potato.

Mr. Walter Raleigh writes to the Southern Farm and Home to the effect that he has discovered the true plan of cultivating the Irish potato in this latitude. He says: "I plant always under straw, using plenty of it, and the deeper I cover the seed the more abundant the yield. I plant at any time from now until March. I break the potato land as deep as I can, manure it well, not too heavily, with well-rotted stable manure or cotton seed, open furrows four or five inches deep, two feet apart, fill the furrows nearly full of cotton seed, and then plant the sets on the manure, cut side down, about ten inches or a foot apart. I cut my seed a week or ten days before planting. When the sets are planted the furrows should be covered with earth, forming a ridge over the seed, and then I cover the whole with straw of any kind—pine straw is as good as any—and as deeply as I can afford. The advantage of this mode of culture is that the straw is beaten down by rain, moisture is kept up near the soil, the temperature is even, the potato is kept cool, and it thus acquires that dry, mealy quality which is so desirable. No matter how deeply you may strew the straw, be sure the tops make their way through it in search of light, and the potatoes will form and mature as high as the moisture reaches."

HARD AND SOFT-BOILED EGGS.—It is well known that a soft-boiled egg is more easily digested than a hard-boiled one, but the difficulty is in the white, not in the yelk. Experiments have shown that the gastric juice will not act readily on the tough, tenacious structure of firmly-congulated white of egg, even when cut in pieces as small as peas—or as fine as people usually chew their food—while it acts with facility on the more brittle yelk. To cook eggs so that they will be more easily digested, put them into boiling water sufficient to cover them, and let them remain ten or fifteen minutes; keep the water nearly up to the boiling point, but do not let it reach that point. Fresh eggs will cook sooner than old ones, and small ones sooner than large ones. By this process the yelks will be well cooked, while the white does not become tough and hard to digest.—Journal of Chemistry.

DESTRUCTIVE BIRDS.—C. V. Riley, in a paper read before the Alton Horticultural Society, names the following birds as enemies of the gardener and farmer, although much may be said in favor of some of them: Blue-jay, crow, blackbird, robin, oriole, cedarbird and kingbird. We should reduce the list, and place among our friends, under proper restrictions, the crow and kingbird. The former destroys many noxious animals, and corn-fields may be readily protected from him. The kingbird does but little if any harm, and destroys many of the farmers' pests. Prof. Riley thinks the Baltimore oriole sometimes eats the curculio, and that the codling moth is occasionally devoured by the titmouse and downy woodpecker. The tent caterpillar is greedily taken by the American cuckoo and jay. The warblers and bluebird eat the canker-worm.—Country Gentleman.

BEST TIME FOR PAINTING HOUSES. The best time for painting the exterior of buildings is late in autumn or during the winter. Paint then applied will endure twice as long as when applied in early summer or in hot weather. In the former it dries slowly and becomes hard, like a glazed surface, not easily affected afterward by the weather, or worn off by the beating storms. But in very hot weather the oil in the paint sinks into the wood at once, as into a sponge, leaving the lead nearly dry and nearly ready to crumble off. This last difficulty, however, might in a measure be guarded against, though at an increased expense, by first going over the surface with raw oil. By painting in cold weather one annoyance might certainly be escaped, namely, the collection of small flies on the fresh paint.

EXTRACTING HONEY FROM THE HIVE.—In France honey is extracted from the hive by "smoking" the bees. Dr. Chairou's system is now coming into general use. Select a bright, clear, sunny day; place a large table-cloth under the hive, and introduce inside a quarter of an ounce of chloroform in a pocket-handkerchief; then knot the tablecloth on the top of the hive so as to exclude the air; a loud buzzing will be heard similar to when the bees are about swarming, and at the end of four minutes a complete silence will ensue. Untie the tablecloth, raise the hive, the bees will be found in a lethargic heap on the cloth, and the few remaining inside will prove too drowsy to interfere with the removal of the combs. On exposing the bees to sun and air they will wake up and return to their hives.—Farmers' Home Journal.

A WRITER in the Rural New Yorker says to those who wish to keep their fences in good repair as possible, with small cash: "When you find a post rotted off at the ground, instead of trying to remove it and put in another in its stead, take a post, even if it be shorter and smaller than would do for a new fence, and set it in the ground strong enough to hold the old post close by its side. Bore a hole through both, large enough to drive an inch or an inch and a quarter oak pin, or, if you choose, dress off the top so that a large nail or two will hold as well and will be at less cost and labor. Now it will cost you less to make the trial than to go all the way to Madison to see a farm that has as many posts as you will care to count upheld in this way, three great gate-posts included."

GREEN CORN FRITTERS.—Grate corn from six ears; add one tablespoonful of cream or butter, one of flour, pepper and salt. Fry in hot lard. Fritters of any kind are good, but only admissible when cooked in boiling lard.

MACHINERY, TIES, ETC.

THE DUBOIS FLANGE COTTON GIN.

By the Flange the cotton is kept in contact with the teeth on each side, until the fiber is taken from the seed, without allowing them to be taken up by the return motion of the teeth, as in Gidder Gins.

The Flange prevents hulls, stems, sticks and hard substances from being cut, consequently making a better sample out of roughly-picked cotton than other Gins.

We have sold more from this point than any agency of any other Gin for the crop of 1872-73; consequently we can furnish more and better references, and they are warranted to come up to all that is said of them.

We keep constantly on hand all sizes, from 40 to 80 SAW STANDS, left or right. Price, $5 per Saw.

GODLSAN BRUFFELIS,
ap3 6m General Agents, 33 Perdido street.

IMPROVED

EAGLE COTTON GINS.

The great popularity of the EAGLE COTTON GINS is established from the well-known fact that they are the most reliable, strongest and best built Cotton Gins ever made. The Eagle Cotton Gin runs lighter than any other gin, thus having a great advantage for planters who wish to run by horse power. All the numerous planters who use the Eagle Cotton Gin will certify to the fact that when their cotton is sent to market it always brings the highest market price, as no other gin can produce a finer or a better sample of cotton than the Eagle Cotton Gins. Over seventeen thousand of the Eagle Cotton Gins have been made and sold. During a period of twenty years the undersigned has had the agency of the Eagle Cotton Gin in New Orleans. He has never had a gin returned or rejected out of the immense number sold. The saw cylinders of all the Eagle Cotton Gins are twelve inches in diameter, which is two inches larger than most other kinds of gins, thus giving our forty-saw gin more teeth, and they are more than equal to the fifty-saw gins of other makers, who use only a ten-inch cylinder, and the same great advantage of the twelve-inch cylinder in larger-sized gins can be easily estimated. Planters who wish a reliable cotton gin, with an established reputation, can purchase an Eagle Cotton Gin with a certainty that they are not making an untried experiment, but will obtain a cotton gin which is indorsed by the oldest and largest planters in the country as the best in use. A large stock of the Eagle Cotton Gins are always kept on sale in New Orleans, ready for immediate shipment. Planters should be particular to state if they want right or left-hand motion gins.

MEDICAL.

PHŒNIX OIL.—PREPARED BY J. J. LINK, New Orleans.—This valuable Liniment has no equal, and can be depended on as one of the best offered to the public. The proprietor, therefore, leaves it to them to judge of its merits, feeling satisfied that its virtue [illegible] directions are strictly followed, viz.: Piles or hemorrhoids; cases of twenty-five years standing have been cured with this Liniment. Who will suffer with this painful disease any longer, when so cheap and easy a remedy is offered? For burns or scalds the proprietor challenges the world to produce its equal; it will instantly give relief. For all virulent sores it has effected cures where the most scientific failed. For fresh cuts, sprains, bruises, tetterworm, ringworm, scald head, erysipelas, sting of a wasp, spider or snake-bite, chapped lips, chapped hands, sore mouth, sore throat, sore or caked breast, rheumatism, and pain in the side, breast or back. In cases of pneumonia it will give great relief, where there is much pain in the side or breast, by rubbing the patient with it. For warts and corns it is good, and will remove them if the directions are strictly followed. This Liniment will be found a certain cure for the following diseases in Stock: For foot-evil it is a sovereign remedy; fistula, poll-evil, galls, scratches, spavins, bruises, sweeny, and mange on dogs. In fact no plantation or family will be without this valuable preparation after it becomes generally known. Liberal discount to retailers. For sale by

THE GREAT HOUSEHOLD REMEDY.

AS AN INVIGORATOR, LIVER CORRECTOR

AND BLOOD RENOVATOR

Is superior to all the Bitters, Elixirs, Cordials Sarsaparillas in use.

It is so adapted to the whole system that every organ and function in the body is brought under its exhilarating influence. It gives tone and strength to the digestive apparatus, dispels languor and debility, invigorates the Liver, regulates the Kidneys and Bowels, removes the effect of excess or over-taxation of any kind, and gives vitality and richness to the blood.

Its curative powers alter and completely reorganize the entire mass of fluids, and even the solids of the human system, thereby preventing and curing Dyspeptic and Consumptive symptoms, Fever and Ague, Bilious diseases, Fevers of all kinds, Nervous Debility, Affections of the Stomach and Bowels, etc. As a mild and delightful Invigorant for delicate females it has no superior.

By its use new life and vigor is given to both body and mind, sending a glow of vitality through every part, which is PERMANENT AND LASTING.

It is the most effectual remedy for the relief of human suffering ever discovered, and is pleasant to the taste.

ALLEN'S LUNG BALSAM.

What the Doctors Say.

Amos Woodly, M. D., of Kosciusko county, Indiana, says: "For three years past I have used Allen's Lung Balsam extensively in my practice, and I am satisfied there is no better medicine for lung diseases in use."

Isaac A. Doran, M. D., of Logan county, Ohio, says: "Allen's Lung Balsam not only sells rapidly, but gives perfect satisfaction in every case within my knowledge. Having confidence in it, and knowing that it possesses valuable medicinal properties, I freely use it in my daily practice, and with unbounded success. As an expectorant it is most certainly far ahead of any preparation I have ever yet known."

Physicians do not recommend a medicine which has no merit. What they say about Allen's Lung Balsam can be taken as a fact. Let all afflicted test it at once, and be convinced of its real merits.

It is harmless to the most delicate child. It contains no Opium in any form.

New Orleans Markets.

From the New Orleans Price Current.

The present indications are that a considerable part of the cotton crop will be late, and therefore more exposed to damage from worms and from early frosts.

The river is 3 feet below high-water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the second instant:

|---|---|
| Louisiana | [illegible] |
| Lake | 48 |
| Arkansas | 1,254 |
| Mobile | 433 |
| Florida | 10 |
| Texas | 80 |
| Total | 6,143 |

On Saturday the sales were confined to 1,750 bales at irregular and easier prices. A considerable portion of the business showing a reduction of ⅛ cent, even of ¼c., but the rest at about previous rates, the closing figures requiring only a slight modification in quotations. Strict ordinary sold at 15c., good ordinary at 15⅛@15¼c., strict good ordinary to low middling at 16⅛@16¼c., low middling at 16⅝@16¾c., middling at 16¾@16¾c., low middling to middling at 16⅞@16⅞c., the latter for high style, and strict low middling at 17@17⅛c. On Monday prices ruled ⅛@¼c. lower. The sales summed up 4,200 bales. On Tuesday the market opened with a fair inquiry, but the actual demand was limited, and only a limited business was done during the morning, mostly at easier rates, without any quotable decline, but later in the day parties came together more freely and the business summed up 3,75 bales. Prices showed continued irregularity, good staple kinds maintaining their previous position, but mixed lots, and to meet the general run of the offerings, ruling more in favor of buyers, showing a falling off in some cases of ⅛@⅜c. Strict ordinary to good ordinary sold at 14c., good ordinary at 15⅛, 15⅛@15⅜c., the last for good style, strict good ordinary, high style, at 15c., strict good ordinary to low middling at 15⅛c., low middling at 16⅛, 16⅛@16¼c., high style do. at 17c., strict do. at 17@17⅛c., strict low middling to middling at 17⅜c., and middling at 18c.

The above makes an aggregate for the past three days of 9,650 bales, against 12,550 for the corresponding time last week and 15,250 the week before.

The receipts proper at this port since the first of September, exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas, are 1,145,067 bales, against 916,567 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 577,175 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 164,415 to Great Britain, of 60,164 to France, and of 147,223 to other foreign ports. ## News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

NEW YORK, May 7.—Chief Justice Chase died this morning of paralysis. Both his daughters and Senator Sprague were at his bedside.

Chief Justice Chase left Washington last week for New York and Boston. He expected to remain in the latter city two or three weeks, then return to Washington, and after a short stay there to go to Colorado, where he proposed to locate for the summer, with a view of restoring his health by the pure and bracing air of the mountain region.

The chief justice was in unusually good health and spirits, and continued so during Sunday and Monday. On Tuesday morning, before rising, he was stricken with paralysis, and remained unconscious until this morning at eleven o'clock, when he peacefully died, surrounded by his sorrowing relatives.

LOUISVILLE, May 7.—The entire business portion of Paris, Tennessee, burned. Loss, $100,000.

LAVA BEDS, May 7.—The Modocs captured a quartermaster's train, consisting of three wagons, eleven mules and three horses. Three soldiers also were wounded.

NEW YORK, May 8.—Judicial business was generally suspended to-day in respect to Judge Chase. He leaves about $200,000.

The receipts of the American Bible society for the year were $369,607, including $139,897 from legacies and $125,897 from donations.

ST. LOUIS, May 8.—The American Medical Association this morning adopted a resolution providing for a committee of three to confer with the Royal Medical Society of England regarding American representation in the revision of the English system of nomenclature and classification of diseases, with the view to its adoption in this country.

A resolution was adopted favoring the establishment of a national medical bureau.

SANTA FE, May 8.—The El Paso Sentinel of April 26 says: In that section and north from there up the Rio Grande the most severe snow-storms ever known have prevailed during the last few days. Fruit crops of all kinds, including grapes, are completely ruined. The same is true of this section. Heavy snows now cover all the mountains surrounding Santa Fe, and the fruit is ruined.

The great scarcity of water is severely felt here, and the agricultural prospects are very gloomy.

BOSTON, May 8.—Oakes Ames died at 9.33 to-night.

LAVA BEDS, May 8.—The remains of Lieutenant Cranston and other missing soldiers have been found among the rocks. Lieutenant Harris is sinking.

All the available horses will now be employed in hunting the Modocs in the country. A guerrilla war has commenced, and as the Modocs are well mounted it may continue all the summer.

MONROE, LA., May 9.—The Ouachita Telegraph has the following: At a quarter past one this morning a fire was discovered in the Club Room saloon, on Desiard street. The building being a wooden one, the whole house was soon in flames, and the fire, fanned by the breeze, advanced down and across the street, destroying in its route fourteen buildings.

NEW YORK, May 9.—A special to the Herald, dated London, to-day, says that John Stuart Mill died of phlegmonous erysipelas. It terminated fatally the third day after its appearance, closing the passage of the throat. Mill left his autobiography ready for the press, and several other completed works.

The Herald special, dated Madrid, says: "The government army in Biscay is in a state of mutiny in consequence of not having received their pay."

NEW YORK, May 10.—A special from St. Johns, Newfoundland, dated the ninth, says that the steamer Walrus arrived from seal-fishing, at St. Johns this morning, bringing news that the steamer Tigress had come into Roberts' bay, eighteen miles from here, having on board nineteen survivors of Hall's arctic expedition.

The correspondent immediately started to Roberts' bay to learn full particulars. The Tigress was at anchor, and the rescued men were assembled on deck. They furnished the following deeply thrilling narrative of the adventures of the expedition, the death of Captain Hall, and the final escape of the survivors, who were taken off from the ice by the Tigress, on the thirtieth of April last, in latitude fifty-three degrees thirty minutes, after having spent one hundred and ninety-six days on the floe. The following are the names of the rescued: H. C. Tyson, assistant navigator; Frederick Meyer, meteorologist; John Heron, steward; W. C. Kruger, seaman; Frederick Jnika, seaman; William Lindemann, seaman; Frederick Anthig, seaman; Gustavus T. Lingulst, seaman; P. Johnston, seaman; William Jackson, cook; Esquimaux Joe, the interpreter, Hannah and child (Esquimaux,) Haus Christian, of Kane's expedition, and Hans Christian's wife and four children, the youngest being only eight months old. This party, which had been landed from the Polaris, were driven from her by a gale, which burst her moorings, on the fifteenth of October, 1872, in latitude seventy-two degrees thirty-five seconds.

When they last saw the Polaris she was under steam and canvas, making for a harbor on the east side of Northumberland island. She had no boats left; of the six which she brought with her from New York two were lost in the northern expedition, two were landed on the ice with Captain Tyson's party, one was burnt as fire-wood to obtain water for the crew, and the other is on board the Tigress.

The Polaris was in command of Captain Buddington, who had thirteen of the crew along with him, and a plentiful stock of provisions. She was making a good deal of water, but Captain Tyson informed our correspondent that she was not more leaky than when he was on board all the previous fall and winter.

The Polaris was somewhat damaged, and it is the opinion of the survivors that she will be unable to get clear until July, and even then, if the ship is unseaworthy, they should have to make new boats to effect their escape.

On the eighth of October, 1871, in latitude eighty-one degrees thirty-eight minutes, longitude sixty-one degrees forty-four seconds, Captain Hall died of apoplexy, and was buried on shore, where they erected a wooden cross to mark his grave.

He had recently returned from a northern sledge expedition, in which he had attained the latitude of thirty-one degrees sixteen seconds. He seemed in his usual health, and had called the men into the cabin to encourage them with hopes of future rewards and stimulate them to renewed exertions, when he was suddenly stricken down and expired, to the grief of those around, to whom he had endeared himself by his kindness and devotion.

In September, 1871, the Polaris entered winter quarters, and left August 12, 1872. The ice was very heavy and set in a southern direction. She was forced south, and so continued drifting until Captain Tyson and party were driven from her.

The sledge party crossed Kane's polar sea, which they pronounced to be a strait about fifteen miles wide. There was an appearance of open water to the north.

The rescued party suffered very much during their dreary drift from hunger and cold.

For the last two months they ate raw seal and polar bear as they could get it. When met by the Tigress they showed evident signs of their great suffering, but during the nine days they have been on board they have improved vastly and are now in fair health. The party is in charge of the United States consul, and will arrive in St. Johns on Monday next.

NEW IBERIA, May 11.—A lieutenant and ten United States soldiers, accompanied by Mr. DeKlyne, United States marshal, left St. Martinsville to-day, at twelve o'clock, to meet Colonel DeBlanc and friends at General DeClonet's residence. Colonel DeBlanc will surrender to the United States troops. He positively refuses to have anything to do with the Kellogg army of invasion.

The great storm of excitement has passed over, and the terror created among the people quieted by the arrival of the United States troops.

Kellogg's new way of governing Louisiana is on the decline in Attakapas.

SAN FRANCISCO, May 11.—A dispatch from Yreka states that the Modocs are known to be out of the lava beds and fleeing toward the Goose Lake country. The Warm Spring Indians and several scouting parties are in close pursuit of them. Six men from Yreka are on the track of Boston Charley.

ST. LOUIS, May 11.—About one hundred and thirty members of Congress accepted invitations to attend the congressional conference, to be held here next week. Every State in the Union but one or two will be represented.

HOUSTON, TEXAS, May 12.—The fourth annual State fair of Texas was opened to-day. The day has been devoted to getting goods in position by exhibitors. To-morrow the formal opening will take place, Colonel D. C. Shannon delivering the annual opening address. The display of goods will more than equal last year's exhibition.

NEW YORK, May 13.—A special from the lava beds says that Captain Hasbrouck, with his scouting party, was attacked by the Modocs and completely surprised. Four soldiers and one Warm Spring Indian killed, and six soldiers and one Warm Spring Indian wounded. Captain Hasbrouck rallied his men and charged, when the Modocs scattered through the woods.

Several volleys were fired among them, but it is not known whether any Modocs were hurt. The troops captured twenty-five horses. Captain Jack wore General Canby's uniform. Thirty-three Modocs were engaged.

NEW IBERIA, May 13.—Two companies of United States troops remain at St. Martinsville, of whom ten men and one officer are at the service of the deputy United States marshal.

Colonel DeBlanc and several of his friends have surrendered, and are on parole until Friday, when they will leave for New Orleans.

The names of the eleven for whom the deputy United States marshal has warrants have not been ascertained.

Quiet now reigns in St. Martinsville, Colonel DeBlanc having accomplished his object in showing to the world the inability of Kellogg to sustain his usurped power without the aid of United States bayonets.

MONTGOMERY, May 13.—Daniel Pratt, the pioneer manufacturer of Alabama, died at his home in Prattville, fourteen miles from this city, at four o'clock this morning.

His death is universally regretted. He was seventy-three years of age.

FOREIGN.

CITY OF MEXICO, April 30.—The police have been ordered to prohibit the Jesuits from living in societies in Oaxaca. Several Jesuits preached disobedience to the laws and constitution, and their arrest was ordered, but, being advised of the movement against them, they fled.

ST. PETERSBURG, May 9.—Official dispatches state that the Khan of Khiva offers an unconditional surrender to the Russian demands.

LONDON, May 10.—The weather is favorable to the crops.

A dispatch from Rome says the Pope was too ill yesterday to receive a party of pilgrims from France.

HAVANA, May 10.—The factions in Panama are still fighting.

At Port-au-Prince, on the fourth instant, one hundred and fifty houses were burned and six persons killed.

MADRID, May 11.—Returns of the voting in Madrid and the provinces for the electoral bureau, as far as received, are in favor of the federal republicans.

ROME, May 11.—During the sitting of the Chamber of Deputies yesterday the crowd, numbering two hundred persons, marched to Querinal, making riotous demonstrations on the way and shouting for complete abolition of religious corporations.

The police made a stand against the mob and prevented it from entering the palace.

ROME, May 12.—The Japanese embassy has arrived here.

The city is quiet since the riotous attempts to intimidate Parliament yesterday. The demonstration is strongly condemned by a large majority of the deputies, and the government promises vigorous measures to prevent its recurrence.

STOCKHOLM, May 12.—The coronation of Oscar the Second and Sophie Wilhemine as King and Queen of Sweden and Norway took place to-day. The weather was unfavorable, but immense crowds witnessed the royal procession and cheered with enthusiasm as the new King walked to the church in a pouring rain. The ceremonies at the church were imposing.

ROME, May 13.—The Pope was very feeble yesterday; he had a fainting fit of an hour's duration. His condition is rather worse to-day. He is still excessively feeble. To-day is the eighty-first birthday of his holiness.

GENEVA, May 13.—Mme. Laysen, wife of Pere Hyacinthe, has given birth to a boy.

Steam in the East.

From different parts of the Eastern world we hear that steamships and railways are working great revolutions.

Accounts from Egypt and Arabia state that the pilgrims, who formerly went to Mecca by caravans, are now crowding the steamers on the Red sea, and since the opening of the Suez canal enables them to embark for Jeddah directly from almost any port on the Eastern Mediterranean, multitudes avail themselves of this easy method of reaching Mecca. The business of transporting the pilgrims is becoming so lucrative that great suffering from over-crowded steamers on the Red sea often occurs.

The company which has undertaken to build the railway from Jaffa to Jerusalem has at length received the concession of the Sultan, under the condition that the railway be completed before the expiration of three years, and that the harbor of Jaffa be improved by a secure pier. This latter enterprise, the construction of a harbor or something of the sort at Jaffa, as a shelter for steamers and other craft, is one of great importance, the landing often being impracticable in rough weather. Travelers are frequently subjected to long delays at this port, and others desiring to land are taken past. One cannot avoid a feeling of regret at the thought that the plains of Sharon and the hills of Judea will have their quiet and sacredness disturbed by the shrill whistle of the locomotive.

India is not only extending her railways, now more than five thousand miles in length, but the improvements of American cars are introduced. In the meanwhile the natives pack the trains like cattle, and are carried, some on pilgrimages and some on business, almost as cheap as freight. It is a very erroneous idea that the Orientals are not travelers. In Japan and China and India and all over the East they have been accustomed to make long journeys, and the highways often swarm with travelers. The railway system suits their fancy precisely, and wherever it is introduced it finds a people ready to avail themselves of its advantages. The Japanese are rejoicing greatly in the saving of foot-travel by the railway between Yokohama and Yeddo.

Steam is a great civilizer. It has already wrought great changes, and is destined to work still greater in the world. It is one of the mighty forces which are subsidized for the advancement of the kingdom of Christ, and we rejoice in all the evidences that it is preparing the way for the speedy coming of that kingdom in the lands of the East.—New York Observer.

Yazoo District Conference.

The District Conference for Yazoo district, North Mississippi Conference, will convene at Durant on the twenty-sixth day of June, at eleven o'clock. Sermon by Rev. J. D. Newsom.

K. A. JONES.

From the Work.

JACKSON CIRCUIT, ALABAMA CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: We have just closed our second Quarterly Conference for the Jackson circuit at this place. Our presiding elder, Bro. Briggs, remained with us four days. The membership of the church at this place has been wonderfully strengthened and revived. There were eleven accessions. On Tuesday, the last day of the meeting, the weather was very unfavorable, and we did not have any service during the day. Our prospect so far is flattering. Affectionately yours in Christ,

J. S. FRAZER.

JACKSON, ALA., May 7, 1873.

YAZOO CITY, MISSISSIPPI.—Mr. Editor: I send you a note of the good work which has been wrought in Yazoo City. We have had a gracious season of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. Our meeting, which was protracted through two weeks, closed last night, resulting in twenty-eight accessions to the church. About sixteen of these were members of the Sabbath school. On yesterday, when the large class of candidates surrounded the altar in presence of a crowded congregation, some to receive baptism, and all to be formally admitted to church-membership according to our beautiful and impressive ritual, many hearts were deeply affected, and many tears of joy and gratitude were shed. A more solemn yet sweetly impressive service I never witnessed. "What a beautiful sight!" was the happy exclamation of every one who had a heart to appreciate the joy of the church militant and the rejoicings of angels at the return of prodigals and the rescue of the lost. We are all much revived and encouraged, and yet look for larger results and a greater ingathering of souls.

CHAS. B. GALLOWAY, P. C.

MAY 5, 1873.

RAYMOND CIRCUIT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: In this vicinity recently we have had a most pleasant, interesting and profitable time.

On last Thursday, the first instant, we had a delightful time at Mississippi Springs. The young people met to crown a May queen. Your correspondent does not claim to be competent to criticise, but gives it as his opinion that, considering the short time to practice and the inexperience of most of those who participated, not only in singing but in other respects it was as complete a success as it has ever been his pleasure and privilege to witness. After our minds had been delighted and feasted, there was an ample feast of good things for our bodies. Dr. R. A. New deserves the thanks of all who were present for the prominent part he took in getting up and executing the thing. He drilled the children in singing and in other matters.

Five miles from Mississippi Springs is Raymond; and I wish, doctor, that you could have been on its streets and in the Methodist church last Friday evening. Allow me to speak briefly of the thirty-ninth anniversary of the Raymond Methodist Sunday school. A little after sundown the school assembled about half a mile from the church and took up the line of march. The house was filled to overflowing—many could not get seats. Bro. Linfield was expected, but, owing to a misapprehension of his about the railroad connection, he failed to get here. The church was most beautifully decorated. The speeches and dialogues were well spoken. The singing was most excellent—just such as this school, led by your old friend, Thomas J. Hunter, will give you any day that you may call in and see them.

Last Saturday was the first day of our second quarterly meeting, which was held at this place. So far as Bro. Linfield's preaching is concerned, it is not necessary to speak. He preached on Saturday morning, Saturday night, Sunday morning and Sunday night. Besides preaching on Sabbath at nine o'clock, he delivered a Sunday school address. I hope he will reproduce it in many places; therefore I will not even attempt a synopsis. Of the communion after the sermon, on Sabbath morning, I must speak. I have communed oftentimes, at Conference and elsewhere, but I do not remember ever to have enjoyed, or to have seen others enjoy, so feelingly a communion. Bro. Bingham, the Presbyterian preacher in this place, helped in the administration of the Lord's Supper. The congregation was very large, many persons being present from a distance. Methodists and Presbyterians, old and young (the youngest a little girl seven and a half years old,) commemorated the death of their Savior.

In the evening there were fifty or sixty persons out at our love-feast meeting, and we had a time of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. Bro. Linfield will long be remembered by this people, and if in the providence of God he should ever come here again, he will be welcomed as few men have ever been. On Sabbath night we received three persons into the church. One of them is an old citizen of this place.

Allow me, in conclusion, to speak of another matter. Would it not be a good plan for the District Conferences, which will soon convene within the bounds of the Mississippi Conference, to direct the preachers to raise from each member of the church, and from each outsider who wishes a copy of the Minutes of our Conference, say five cents, in order that we may get them immediately after the adjournment of the Conference?

Truly in Christ,

A. B. STEWART.

RAYMOND, MISS., May 7, 1873.

Mr. Spurgeon's Reasons.

At a recent meeting of his college for ministers Mr. Spurgeon gave his reasons for not accepting an invitation to lecture in this country. He said: "I will just tell you one little thing which happened to me this afternoon. I had a letter from a gentleman very well known in America, giving me this offer: $25,000 for twenty-five lectures—that is £200 for each lecture. On these terms the twenty-five nights would give me £5,000, and in a hundred nights I should have £20,000. Besides this, I should be allowed to lecture for as many more nights as I chose, so that I might, in the course of a year, be worth £40,000, and no doubt the persons who undertake this would earn ten times the amount. I have nothing to do but leave you for a year and come home with £20,000 or £40,000; while if I stay here I shall have nothing like that. What do you suppose was my answer to this offer? I wrote: 'If you multiply that offer by one hundred times and again by one hundred times, I should feel it just as easy to decline as I do now, when I say that I cannot cross the ocean to lecture upon any subject whatever. I am a minister of the gospel, and never lectured for money, and do not intend to do so now, and if my people cannot support me it is a pity.' Some people would say: Why not go to America and get the money to build the college? I shall not do so, because I would not do one thing to degrade myself nor disgrace you. I shall not make any appeal to another country to do what you can and ought to do. There are two brothers here to-night who have received offers from America. Each man can lecture as well as preach, and there is no harm in their having £500 and a month's holiday. If I were in their position I should do the same thing; but, as I am, I cannot leave you. I cannot leave the college nor the orphanage, not if my house were filled with silver and gold from top to bottom. There are two things which I should feel if I went to America. The first is that I should go not to preach the gospel, but to lecture, and I cannot do that, not for the national debt. If ever I had to choose a place to work in, and had to leave this antiquated old country under the shadow of a state church, I should choose the free country of America. I do not say I want to go there, but if I was not treated well here, or there was any fighting among you, I should leave, for I am not a fighting man, and I hold that if you are persecuted in one country fly to another. But while our dear friends treat me as they have done, no going to America or to heaven either. No, I do not mean to die just yet."

The Chinese in California.

The Chinese are already in California in large numbers, and are arriving here at the rate of from ten to fifteen thousand a year. We confess that to our mind there is something fearful in these figures. If these people were of a mobile, flexible character, easily brought under the influences of Caucasian civilization, like the negroes of the Southern States, we should not be so much concerned. But the case is not so. They are heathenish to the core, and the gospel has no easy victory to accomplish in gaining admission into their hearts. They erect here their idolatrous temples, celebrate their idolatrous rites, and in all respects form a compact and separate community. In view of these facts, as well as for political and economical reasons, we would stop their immigration if we could. But, as this cannot be done, we must meet the dangers which stare us in the face, and boldly address ourselves to their evangelization. This is to be no child's play. Orations, sermons, resolutions will not accomplish it. We must work, work, work!

There is one phase of the subject which demands instant attention from all right-minded people. We refer to the buying and selling of Chinese women. This ought to be, and must be, stopped. We are glad that some of the city dailies, the Evening Post among others, are making a move in this direction. The city, the State, the nation are all being disgraced. Is it not possible to form an association of our best citizens that will take instant steps to rectify the matter?

Our own church should do something toward establishing a Chinese mission here. We understand that, if proper provisions are made, Dr. Cunnyngham is willing to come among us as a missionary. He will be made abundantly welcome. We trust that the Board of Missions, which meets in a few days, will open his way before him.—Pacific Methodist.

THE Rev. E. M. Peterson writes to the Richmond Christian Advocate, Petersburg, April 9: "God is pouring out showers of blessings upon all our churches in Petersburg and at Ettrick's. We are now in the third week of our meeting at High Street church. Up to this date sixty persons have made a profession of religion. Bros. Duncan, Sledd, Bayley and Wright have been eminently successful in winning souls to Christ. An aggregate of three hundred and twenty souls have made a profession of religion in our churches here during the past seven weeks."

A MONTREAL INDIAN wrote his own epitaph thus:

"Here lies poor Johnny Konkuped;
Have mercy on him, gracious God.
He would do you, if he was (tod)
And you was Johnny Konkuped."

Worthy of Imitation.

A large number of the leading merchants and bankers of London are engaged in a movement which we commend to the notice of the merchants and bankers of New York. Its object is not to mature plans for the increase of wealth or to establish a new and gigantic moneyed institution, to inaugurate fresh openings for commerce, or to devise new modes of local or international communication. The purpose of the movement is nobler than this. It is for the promotion of vital Christianity among the business classes of that great city. And to this end they have arranged largely-attended nightly meetings at the London Tavern and elsewhere throughout London, which are participated in by the first merchants and financiers, and are addressed by eminent clergymen, who preach Christ crucified to all who will hear. The glad tidings of the gospel are thus brought to thousands who might never otherwise hear the joyful sound. When shall we be able to chronicle a like movement of the leading merchants and bankers of New York? When shall the unwonted sound of the gospel be heard in the hotels of this city, and the equally unwonted sight be witnessed of our merchants and bankers gathered in them, listening to God's word, singing his praises and addressing him in humble prayer?—Christian Intelligencer.

To Help Small Sunday Schools.

Many brethren have said to us: "We want the Uniform Lessons, but we are not able to take ten Magazines. If you will only send the Lesson Papers, with five Magazines, we can raise the money."

This seems reasonable, and we now propose: Where as many as five Magazines are sent to one address we will send six Lesson Papers with each Magazine. Thus: $5 will pay for five Magazines and thirty Lesson Papers for one year; $2.50 will pay for them for six months.

In response to my call for "names and postoffices," last winter, we have received many answers, and have sent out over fifteen hundred specimens. The increase in our subscription list has been so large and prompt this spring that our May issues have run short, although we printed a large extra edition. We will have enough next time. Now let us hear from the small schools.

ATTICUS G. HAYGOOD,
Sunday School Sec.

NASHVILLE, May 3, 1873.

REV. MR. ANCIENT, made famous by the Atlantic disaster, is thus described by a personal acquaintance: "I know this brave man, and know him well—a slight-built person with brown face and hands, and a clear, full eye that looks straight into your face, and knows no fear. Buried among his parishioners—three thousand miles from home, and with a sick wife—working day and night, educating the people, Christianizing, civilizing, ruling them by love, and commanding their respect—and now their admiration, for no class of people better appreciate personal bravery than our hardy fishermen. This is one man of a thousand. Not alone to his own parish does he confine his labors, but to all the neighboring districts. In his little boat, a mere cockle-shell, we have seen him putting out boldly to sea—through fog, by sunken reefs, with crested waves threatening on all sides—to visit his people inhabiting remote portions of the coast, and landing at some friendly cove; also walking miles to some little log hut in the woods, where may assemble a few to hear God's word, who, on account of the distance from the shore, think it too far to walk themselves."

A HEAVENLY-MINDED BISHOP.—Rev. J. B. Wakely, in his "Lost Chapters of Methodism," says of Bishop Whatcoat: "Holiness was his constant theme." His experience of the blessing, as recorded by himself, is thus briefly written: "After many sharp and painful conflicts, and many gracious visitations also, on the twenty-eighth of March, 1761, my soul was drawn out and engaged in a manner it never was before. Suddenly I was stripped of all that love. And in this happy state, rejoicing evermore, and in everything giving thanks, I continued years, with little intermission or abatement, wanting nothing for soul or body, more than I received from day to day." Mr. Wakely adds: "For purity of character, for self-denial, for deep devotion, for heavenly-mindedness, for divine unction, none of our preachers have ever surpassed him Holiness was his constant theme."

BISHOP HARRIS, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, will leave New York city for San Francisco about the middle of May, and will take the steamer at San Francisco for Japan, June 1. From Japan he goes to China; thence to India, among the Himalayas, and also to the new mission of Bombay, and perhaps another at Calcutta; thence to Turkey, Germany, Switzerland, Norway, Denmark, Sweden and Italy. He will go around the world to the music of Methodist hymns!

THE VOICE.—"I remember hearing a thoughtful person, of fine moral intuitions, who had been a little tormented by the eccentricities of a man of genius, say that all his annoyances vanished before the marvelously affecting pathos with which his odd visitor spoke the simple word 'good-night.'"

THE PATTERN IN THE SKIES.

BY MRS. GRACE WEBSTER HINSHAW.

As low I kneel, with lifted face,
A lovely form displays its grace,
And ever floats in light above:
'Tis wondrous sweet—this figure fair,
This glorious shape in heavenly air—
I see it now, its beauty love!

By hand divine some holy thought
Hath to this lovely form been wrought,
And set so high in heaven skies—
A pattern of God's holy will,
Which he will work, with rarest skill,
Oh those who gaze with longing eyes!

Oh, thought of God! take shape in me,
And let my life the motion be
Of every grace which makes complete;
Leave not thy work, heed not my tears;
See how the quick advancing years
Would all thy plan of love defeat!

Deep cut, with finer hand, my heart,
Till sternest love, with utmost art,
Thy perfect thought in me secure,
I will not shrink away from thee,
Lest thou my imperfection see;
Humbly thy strokes I will endure.

Fixed on the vision still my eyes
Shall watch the pattern in the skies,
While thou shalt work its grace in me;—
Then when the beauty of thy thought
Is in my soul's perfection wrought,
I'll praise thee through eternity!

Education by the State.—No. I.

BY W. A. M'CARTY, D. D.

Ought the State to turn schoolmaster and keep school through governmental machinery? is a question that goes down to the very foundations of government. No one can tell what government ought to do until he knows what government ought to be.

Any philosophical theory of government must be obtained by a generalization so wide as to include and be applicable to all forms of government. It ought to be such a theory as that no other could be substituted for it. The boundary line ought to be so definitely and clearly drawn as that the subject could easily see, and the functionary easily understand, when the limits were reached.

There is one theory, and only one, that meets these conditions. It is this: Government is solely for protection—to protect person and property. That this is the true theory is evident, furthermore, from the fact that no other theory is safe, and no other theory is capable of a definition.

If this is not the true theory, it must be because government ought to do more or less than protect. No one will contend that it ought to do less. The issue, then, is: Ought it to do more? If more, how much more? If some are legislated into property, or, what amounts to the same, into special privileges, of course property or privileges must be taken from others. If the government gives to A., B. and C., it must take from D., E. and F. just that amount, plus the friction of governmental manipulation—i. e., the government must always take from one class of subjects more than it can give to another. The want of equity and the waste are palpable. We demand an explanation. We are told it is upon the ground of expediency—for the good of the greatest number, etc. But we do not see the expediency. Political economy has demonstrated the inexpediency. Nevertheless, government enforces it. It is tyranny. If government can tax the grower of cotton for the benefit of the spinner, conversely it can tax the spinner for the benefit of the grower. This power will enable any de facto government to take the whole property of one and confer it on another. The monarch covets Naboth's vineyard; the doctrine of expediency will enable him to take it. The Legislature of New York enacts that in a given case the sheriff shall destroy property; or the chief executive of the nation issues a proclamation for the destruction of property. It is justified on the ground of expediency. Under this theory nothing is safe—no one's property, no one's life. Expediency is the fabled pavillon that with equal ease could cover few or many. By it one would limit government here, another there, and another nowhere. Expediency, unsafe as it is, because indefinable, yet includes all other theories except the one we have enunciated. Expediency includes: for the "public good," for the "greatest good of the greatest number," for the "greatest happiness," for the "weal of the commonwealth," and so forth and so on to the end of the chapter.

The doctrine of protection can be objected to only on the ground that it limits legislation to too narrow a compass. But really this is partly its glory. "Masterly inactivity," though expressing, in an indefinite way, merely a half truth, has been enough to immortalize such men as Calhoun and Randolph and Burke, because men who were capable of thinking have seen that danger is mostly on the side of excessive legislation. Whatever other lessons history may teach, this one she emphasizes. Whatever beacon-lights she may erect along the highway of nations, this one she hangs out above and more conspicuously than all others—over faded crowns and fallen banners and wrecked liberties—to tell us that over-legislation is the most dangerous rock in all seas to the ship of State. So long as government confines itself to its one only legitimate function there is no ground of complaint. But so soon as it passes this limit there is discontent—a tendency to revolution.

When government undertakes to do more than it ought, it weakens its capacity to perform its legitimate function. When, for instance, it undertakes to teach a school or preach a religion it loses power to protect. One function for one work is the law of the universe. John Snider and Samuel Phelps had each a mill on Big creek. Both were good men and had good mills, equally distant from a populous neighborhood. Mr. Phelps concluded it might be profitable to run a farm in connection with his mill. Henry Wise sent his son to Mr. Phelps' mill, as usual, but he was delayed. It was so over and again. The delays were easily accounted for—Mr. Phelps was over the creek and had to be called to the mill. Mr. Wise turned his custom to Mr. Snider's mill, and so did most of Mr. Phelps' customers. Too late Mr. Phelps found that he could not do two things successfully at one and the same time. In a savage state a man has to do everything, but as civilization advances he becomes more and more assigned to one definite work. One function for one work is the law, and only by [illegible] can first-rate work be done. I might multiply illustrations, but it is needless. The idea is expressed in that old homely adage: "Jack at all trades and good at none."

I object to taxation for school purposes because it is unjust, and, moreover, opens the door and sets the precedent for the destruction of all property. My neighbor Lazarus is a good citizen. He has a wife, and his parents are old, infirm and partly dependent on him. He has no children, yet it is all he can do to make buckle and tongue meet. Ought he to be taxed to school my children? My neighbor Caelebs has never married. He thinks he cannot afford such luxuries as wife and children. He may have been unwise in his choice. I could say much on that. But he is as much entitled to his choice in that as I or St. Paul or any one else. The government taxes him to school my children.

If government can tax my neighbor to school my children, of course it can tax him to feed and clothe and shelter them. If the government is to educate, because education is good for the child, so is food and clothing and shelter. If government is to take the place of a parent in one respect, why not in all? If it would be good for the child and the country in one respect, it would be so in all respects. But if the government can do so much, it can take all my neighbor's property for my use. By taxation it takes one or two or five per cent. But why do a good thing in decimal fractions? Why not do it in whole numbers? Why take twenty or fifty or a hundred years to transfer his property to me? Why not make the whole transfer at once? It would save all the costly machinery of government, stealage included. The power that can take a part can take all. Thus communism is a corrollary from the power to levy taxes for schooling children. Let those who advocate it face the consequences. Let them see that they are putting leaven in the body politic that must sooner or later leaven the whole lump. They have launched the ship on this stormy sea—have committed her to the mercy of wind and wave. The more steam they raise, the more canvas they spread, the sooner will she run her random course to ruin.

Infant Church-Membership and Salvation.

MR. EDITOR: The above heading embraces two leading thoughts, namely: Infant church-membership and infant salvation. As it regards infant church-membership, we will simply say that all Pedobaptists believe that infants have the right to church-membership; that the Almighty himself granted them this right in the days of Abraham, and that he has never taken this right from them. The conclusion is that they still retain it. They retained it in the days of Moses, in the days of John the Baptist, in the days of Jesus Christ, in the days of the apostles, in the days of the primitive fathers, and down to the present time. This is the argument for infant church-membership, founded on the identity of the church of God in all ages of the world. This is the argument that never has been nor never will be refuted while the Bible remains as it now is. Therefore we conclude that we have no need for new light to sustain the right of infants to baptism and church-membership.

As it regards infant salvation, there are several different theories, three of which we will here mention, namely: the Calvinistic theory, the Pelagian theory and the Methodist theory. The Calvinistic theory is that all elect children dying in infancy will be saved, and as a necessary consequence all the reprobate children dying in infancy must be damned. For it is absurd in the extreme to talk of election without reprobation, for they are as inseparably connected as cause and effect. So we see this Calvinistic theory saves a part of the little children dying in infancy, and damns the balance dying in infancy.

The Pelagian theory is "that mankind derives no injury from the sin of Adam, that we are now as capable of obedience to the will of God as he was, and consequently men are born without vice, as well as without virtue." This theory denies the depravity of the human soul, and takes all children to heaven as a necessary consequence. This Pelagian theory, we believe, is rejected by all orthodox Christians. Therefore it does not save the little children that die in infancy, according to what is called the orthodox view. The Calvinistic theory saves only a part of the little innocent babes, and hence we need a theory that will save them all, according to the word of God. Methodism professes to be that theory.

Methodism, according to the word of God, holds that all infants are born in sin. Now what does the word of God say on this subject? It says (Psalms li, 5:) "Behold, I was shapen in iniquity, and in sin did my mother conceive me." Again the psalmist says: "The wicked are estranged from the womb; they go astray as soon as they are born, speaking lies." —Psalms lviii, 3. See also Romans v, 12: "Wherefore, as by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin, and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned." These texts of Scripture prove that infants are born in sin, but they are not personal transgressors of God's law as adults are, to make them sinners, but they are made sinners by inheriting the sinful nature of their father Adam, who was a sinner when he begat sons and daughters. But for their sinful nature they are not accountable to God, because they had no agency in it, and could not possibly help it or prevent it, any more than we can prevent cause from producing its effect. And therefore, sustaining a passive relation to the transgression, they sustain a passive relation to the atonement; and as they were made partakers of the transgression without their consent, so also are they made partakers of the atonement of Jesus Christ independent of their volition unto justification of life. "For where sin abounded, grace did much more abound." "Therefore, as by the offense of one judgment came upon all men to condemnation, even so by the righteousness of one the free gift came upon all men unto justification of life."

These citations from the word of God prove two things: First. That all infants are born in sin. Second. That all unconscious infants sustain a passive, justified relation to the atonement made by our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, and if they die in this passive condition they will be saved. What! without regeneration? I did not say that, but I do say they will be regenerated and saved in heaven. This will be done on principles of justice and mercy harmonized. First. Justice has no demand on them, they have never sinned, and they cannot help their fallen nature. Second. Mercy sees this, and stoops to save the dying, unconscious infants through the atonement made by Jesus Christ for their salvation. The just, holy and good Lord is bound to do this by his own infinite attributes. But if some of these unconscious babes live to adult age their relation to the atonement is changed. It is changed from a passive relation to an active relation, and in order to be regenerated and be saved in heaven they must believe or trust in the atonement made by Jesus Christ. This they may do when they are quite young—just as soon as they are capable of believing and trusting in him. So soon as they do this they are regenerated or born of God; but not before, as Bro. W. would have us believe. Hear what he says: "But does not the Bible teach, when rightly understood, that all infants, irrespective of condition, receive the Holy Ghost savingly before they come to the years of discretion? I think it does." Well, Bro. W., I think it does not. If it does I have not seen it, and you would do us a great favor to give us the book, chapter and verse where this new doctrine is written. It seems also that Bro. Sample, in his article written on the same subject, would have us believe this same new doctrine. Hear what he asks: "Can any individual be justified and at the same time be unregenerated?" We answer: Yes; unconscious infants may be justified in the sense above stated, and not be regenerated. He says again: "Certainly no other meaning can be given to the utterance of the Lord than that he intended to convey the idea that little children, all little children, are believers." Strange logic indeed—"all little children are believers;" unconscious infants and all. Well might Bro. Sample say: "Here is a great mystery. We are not able to comprehend how it is that they are such believers." Yes, verily, the mystery is so great that nobody will believe it who will read our Lord's words from which this mysterious conclusion is drawn. His words are: "But whoso shall offend one of these little ones that believe in me, it were better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck, and he were drowned in the depth of the sea." We will note here, first, that this little child Jesus called unto him understood what Jesus said; second, he came to Jesus; third, he believed in Jesus. Can unconscious infants, eight days old, do all this? The answer is: They cannot. Therefore the text has nothing to do with unconscious infants, but with children large enough to understand, walk and believe in Jesus. In conclusion we will say that this is not only a new and very mysterious doctrine, but we believe it also a dangerous doctrine, because it strikes a death-blow at the very root of adult regeneration and the knowledge of sins forgiven. JAMES SHANKS.

The Power of Truth.

For we can do nothing against the truth, but for the truth.—Second Corinthians xiii, 8.

MR. EDITOR: The weapons of this world are carnal, temporary and feeble. Thus the edge of the finest sword is dulled by conflict, and even the brazen cannon is consumed by the rust of time. But there is a nobler, brighter and surer weapon drawn from the armory of Heaven—the sword of truth—that no conflict can dull, no time can rust, and no tower or fortress can finally withstand. For "truth is mighty and shall prevail."

The whole Bible, from Genesis to Revelation, is but the clear, radiant pathway of truth, as its keen blade fells a huge crime here or snaps asunder a darling sin there. Satan opposed its progress in Eden, and man and woman were banished in consequence. Cain was its enemy on the day he slew his brother, and the vagabond's mark stamped his features. Noah, by its power, outrode the surging billows, while an unbelieving world was swallowed in the flood. The Red sea, by its power, swallowed up Pharaoh and his hosts, but Israel crossed on dry land. A host of Midianites had gathered together against Israel, and Gideon and his three hundred men, by the power of truth, scattered them like autumn leaves. A giant, with a spear like a "weaver's beam," advanced against the stripling David, saying that he would give his flesh to the fowls of the air. Alas! for the cause of truth, is David to fall before this tyrant, before this huge giant, who says he defies the armies of the living God? The two armies are arranged on either side. On one are the Philistines, on the other are the Israelites; the one side representing falsehood, the other representing truth. No doubt this Goliath had often walked over the plains of Gath and elsewhere, boasting of his great strength, making little of other champions. His eyes saw no other heroes than himself in all his marshaled host. There were gray-headed chieftains, who had seen service when he was a child, perhaps. There were those present who may have saved his life in many a hard-fought battle, but they were forgotten, else were afraid of him as the man who ruled their bodies, and darkened their minds by falsehood and tyranny. Such was the man to whom David said: "Thou comest to me with a sword and a spear, but I come to thee in the name of the God of Israel, whose armies thou hast defied. And all this assembly shall know that the Lord saveth not by sword nor spear, for the battle is the Lord's, and he will deliver you into my hands." Then running forward with a tiny pebble in his sling, with a sudden whirl the pebbly messenger was sent on its whizzing way, and a heavy, crashing fall told that its work was done. Goliath was dead, his boasting gone, and truth was triumphant over falsehood.

Truth is obedience to the revealed will of God. It is grasping the lovely life of our Savior while on earth, taking him as an example in our thoughts, deeds and actions. "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." Christ says: "To this end was I born, and for this cause came I into the world: that I should bear witness unto the truth. Every one that is of the truth heareth my voice." Now, this being the case, we find that though Christ was reviled, persecuted and crucified, all these things were nothing against the truth, but for the truth. They to-day stand forth prouder than any rock-hewn monument of man, declaring that God's ways are truth, and truly this was the Son of God. And as for the apostles who were stoned, sawed asunder and devoured by wild beasts in order to oppose the glorious gospel of truth, their blood has sprung up like the choicest seed, bringing forth an abundant harvest of determined Christians. A distinguished martyr, when the fires were rolling and crackling around his burning body, said to another who was also burning: "Be of good courage, my brother. We shall this day kindle such flames in Smithfield as, I trust God, will never be quenched." And so, Christian, I say thy tormentors may imprison and behead thee like Herod did John; they may crucify thee like thy Master; they may burn thee like Latimer and Ridley; they may cast thee to wild beasts as they did Daniel; or, as is more fashionable nowadays, they may say thou art beside thyself: much learning has made thee mad—I say they may do all this, and ostracise thee like the ancient Aristides, because they are tired of hearing you called a just man. Your tormentors after this may take their easy chairs in the sanctum, or be worshiped by their minions or applauded by cowards; still I say your right—truth—shall penetrate their wrong—falsehood—even though they cuirass themselves with ribs of polished steel.

As well might thundering billows,
As they dash upon the sea,
Attempt to drown the sunlight,
That shines far o'er the lea,
As falsehood's puny right arm,
Supported by its friends,
Hope to crush truth forever,
And thus secure its ends.
The sword of truth is mighty,
As it gleams so bright on high,
Lifting up the needy,
And strikes for orphan's cry;
Far mightier than ever
When it circles round thy sight,
Striking down oppression,
First left and then to right.

P. S. P. CORBIN.

Extract from Carvosso's Experience.

"In the same happy frame of mind which God brought me into at my conversion, I went on for the space of three months, not expecting any more conflicts; but O how greatly was I mistaken! I was a young recruit, and knew not of the warfare I had to engage in. But I was soon taught that I had only enlisted as a soldier to fight for King Jesus; and that I had not only to contend with satan and the world from without, but with inward enemies also, which now began to make no small stir. Having never conversed with any one who enjoyed purity of heart, nor read any of Wesley's works, I was at a loss both with respect to the nature and the way to obtain the blessing of full salvation. From my first setting out in the way to heaven I determined to be a Bible Christian; and though I had not much time for reading many books, yet I blessed God that I had his own word, the Bible, and could look into it. This gave me a very clear map of the way to heaven, and told me that 'without holiness no man could see the Lord.' It is impossible for me to describe what I suffered 'from an evil heart of unbelief.' My heart appeared to me as a small garden with a large stump of a tree in it, which had been recently cut down level with the ground, and a little loose earth strewed over it. Seeing something shooting up I did not like, on attempting to pluck it up I discovered the deadly remains of the carnal mind; and what a work must be done before I could be 'meet for the inheritance of the saints in light!' My inward nature appeared so black and sinful that I felt it impossible to rest in that state. Some, perhaps, will imagine that this may have arisen from the want of the knowledge of forgiveness. That could not be the case, for I never had one doubt of my acceptance. The witness was so clear that satan himself knew it was in vain to attack me from that quarter. I had ever kept in remembrance

"'The blessed hour from above
I first received the pledge of love.'

What I now wanted was 'inward holiness,' and for this I prayed and searched the Scriptures. Among the many promises which I found in the Bible that gave me to see it was my privilege to be saved from all sin, my mind was particularly directed to Ezekiel xxxvi, 25-27, that great and precious promise of the eternal Jehovah, and I laid hold of it, determining not to stop short of my privilege, for I saw clearly the will of God was my sanctification. The more I examined the Scripture the more I was convinced that without holiness there could be no heaven. Many were the hard struggles which I had with unbelief, and satan told me that if I ever should get it I should never be able to retain it; but, keeping close to the word of God, with earnest prayer and supplication, the Lord gave me to see that nothing short of it would do in a dying hour and the day of judgment. Believing this, it was my constant cry to God that he would cleanse my heart from all sin and make me holy, for the sake of Jesus Christ.

"I well remember returning one night from a meeting, with my mind greatly distressed from a want of the blessing. I turned into a lonely barn to wrestle with God in secret prayer. While kneeling on the threshing-floor, agonizing for the great salvation, this promise was applied to my mind: 'Thou art all fair, my love; there is no spot in thee.' But, like poor Thomas, I was afraid to believe, lest I should deceive myself. O what a dreadful enemy is unbelief! Thomas was under its wretched influence only eight days before Jesus appeared to him; but I was a fortnight after this groaning for deliverance, and saying: 'O wretched man that I am, who shall deliver me from the body of this death?' I yielded to unbelief, instead of looking to Jesus and believing on him for the blessing; not having then clearly discovered that the witness of the Spirit is God's gift, not my act, but, given to all who exercise faith in Jesus and the promise made through him. At length, one evening while engaged in a prayer meeting, the great deliverance came. I began to exercise faith by believing: 'I shall have the blessing now.' Just at that moment a heavenly influence filled the room; and no sooner had I uttered or spoken the words from my heart, 'I shall have the blessing now,' than "'Refining fire went through my heart,

Illuminated my soul,
Scattered it's life through every part,
And sanctified the whole.'

I then received the full witness of the Spirit that the blood of Jesus had cleansed me from all sin. I cried out: This is what I wanted! I have got a new heart. I was emptied of self and sin, and filled with God. I felt I was nothing, and Christ was all in all. Him I now cheerfully received in all his offices—my Prophet to teach me, my Priest to atone for me, my King to reign over me.

"'Amazing love! how can it be
That thou, my Lord, shouldst die for me?'

O what boundless, boundless happiness there is for me in Christ." Years later he says: "Giving glory to God, I can say I am now right; and I trust him for all that is to come; and though all weakness, ignorance, helplessness and unworthiness, yet I have the testimony of my own conscience and the witness of the Spirit that I am wholly and unreservedly his—his in body, spirit, soul—for Christ is in my heart; I dwell in God, and God in me. God is love; and he is all I want for time or for eternity." Again: "To the praise and honor of his grace, who is the glorious Giver of all good, I can say with good Lady Maxwell: 'My evidence for sanctification is as strong as a cable fixed to an immovable rock, and as bright as the sun at noonday. The more I meditate on divine things the more my soul is lost in the immensity of redeeming love. This has an influence so wonderfully attractive that it draws all the powers of my heart and mind into it. Well might the poet say:

"'Who that loves can love enough.'"

A METHODIST.

OBITUARIES.

DIED, at the residence of Mr. Beverly Chew and Mrs. Bettie Chew, Benton, Mississippi, on the twenty-second of April, 1873, their youngest son, AUGUSTIN CHEW, aged six years.

ASCENITH A., wife of John H. McIntosh, was born near Crystal Springs, Copiah county, Mississippi, February 18, 1842, and died near the same place March 28, 1873.

Sister McIntosh joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South and was converted in the fall of 1863. Her life as a Christian was one of unusual uniformity and consistency. There were no spasmodic expectations; but from the time she became a member of the church until her death it was marked with such deep piety and implicit confidence in God's word and will, that it was the common remark of all who were intimate with her: "Behold an Israelite indeed, in whom is no guile." Her piety was exhibited particularly in her daily duties in the midst of her own family. She loved the church next to her own life, and would frequently attend the same when her health would hardly admit of it. Her greatest enjoyment was among the truly pious, and no one ever took greater pleasure in the company of ministers. Whatever might be said against them, she was one who would always speak in their favor and defend their characters.

As a neighbor and friend there was none more kind and accommodating. She was a stepmother, and in this capacity those same loving traits of character were to be seen. She won the love and esteem of her stepchildren, and they seemingly loved her as a real mother. In every relation of life she was in reality a most exemplary Christian.

It seems she had premonitions of her death, for, several weeks previous to her last illness, she deliberately prepared her own burial apparel. It was my privilege to be with her in her last illness, and to converse freely with her upon the subject of death, and there had been such thorough preparation for that time that she was perfectly calm, and said she had no fears or doubts upon that subject. She said all was clear before her; no dark forebodings, no dread of meeting her Savior, that "not a wave of trouble rolled across her peaceful breast." She was passing away as calm as an evening's sun. I thought if there was anything that mortal man should envy, it was to die such a death.

On several occasions before her death she had times of great rejoicing. At one time she exclaimed: "Oh, that I had strength to express to you all how I feel!"

In her death the church sustains a loss of one of her most faithful, zealous and consistent members. She leaves an affectionate husband, three little children and many friends to mourn her death.

J. W. MCNEIL.

DIED, at his residence in Morehouse parish, Louisiana, on Thursday, March 20, 1873, of an injury received by accident the day before, Bro. WILLIAM J. CHESHIRE. The subject of this sketch was born in North Carolina, July 15, 1816. He emigrated from thence to Monroe county, Georgia, when but a boy. Sojourning here for awhile, he became a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church at the age of sixteen, in which he remained until the transfer was given—signed by Immanuel's hand—to the brighter temple above. From Monroe county he moved to Randolph county, where, in 1842, he was married to Miss [illegible] A. Allen. From thence he came to Early county, where his labors are not forgotten. He acted as class-leader and superintendent of the Sabbath schools for five years with noted success. Thence he moved to Miller county in 1858, where he lived until the close of the Confederate war. Here his labors were abundant, organizing and superintending Sabbath schools with an earnestness that insured success. While here he was a member of the Georgia convention of 1862, and also a Confederate soldier for two years in the Fifty-first Georgia Regiment. After the war he moved to Pleasant Hill, Alabama, where he was the same efficient superintendent, gathering up young and old, and drilling these respective divisions for greater usefulness in the aggressive march of Zion's ever-moving columns.

In 1872 he came to this parish, where he spent the brief period of one year as the chief officer of the Bartholomew Sabbath school, which increased so rapidly that the fame thereof went abroad over the land, and we were predicting a pleasant and prosperous future, when lo! suddenly he "ceases to work and live."

Too much could not be said in his praise in all the various relations of life, all of which he filled in the strictest sense as a Christian gentleman. He leaves a wife and five children mantled in grief, yet it is penetrated with a bright hope—waiting for a glorious reunion beyond the swelling tide of Jordan, where an inheritance among those who are sanctified is looked for.

THOS. H. MCCLENDON.

NANNIE EARLY, daughter of Rev. H. J. Harris, of the Mississippi Conference, was born at Mount Albin, Warren county, Mississippi, April 25, 1853, and died May 2, 1873, aged twenty years and six days.

The deceased, as all children should be, was born, baptized and reared in the church—never knew what it was to be out of the church. She was a most devoted Sunday school scholar and teacher, and loved to teach and to be taught. She was ambitious always to do well in the Sunday school, as well as the day school. Naturally gifted with more than an ordinary intellect, she improved every opportunity for cultivation, read extensively and variously, and was familiar with the standard as well as the popular authors of our language. She possessed rare talents for composition. Many have read emanations from her mind and pen who were not aware of the fact, and such specimens as would have reflected credit upon much older persons.

One year ago last September she was attacked with a sore throat, which defied all treatment, but steadily and slowly progressed until it developed in what was considered bronchitis merely, and it was hoped might be cured; yet, while every remedy known to both the allopathic and homeopathic systems was used, with the most unremitting attention of her physician, the disease terminated in what was apprehended would be the result—that of consumption. Six months to a day she was confined to her room, shut out from the world and facing death all the while. Early in the history of her case her parents and physician were faithful to impress her with the precariousness of her condition. She seemed to be fully aware of this herself, and turned at once to the stronghold in the day of trouble. She laid all her burden upon Jesus, and was assured from that time that her way was clear to heaven. Now and then she would have doubts, and not until a few weeks before her death did she get the complete victory. It was her great desire to be able to shout as she had heard Sister McIntosh, a woman of the most undoubted piety, and who died recently. God granted her desire, and on the fourth of April she claimed the victory and maintained it until the last. Repeatedly after that time she had glorious seasons and bright visions of heaven. She talked of heaven as a place not far off, but near by, and in more than one instance asked the question why it was that God kept her back? She had in reality lost sight of earth in view of the better world. Her father requested that, as she neared the gates of death, if she was in her proper mind, she would give him some token of her final triumph; and about the last intelligent utterance, but a little while before she died, were these words: "Pa, I am almost over—almost home. Glory! Jesus is precious." Her patience in suffering is rarely equaled. She said, however, it was all of grace. She all the time manifested the greatest gratitude for the smallest acts of kindness. All the fruits of the Spirit were hers—love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith and meekness—against which, says the apostle, there is no law. She gave specific directions about her burial robe, which was made accordingly. She carefully inspected and approved each part. She distributed her wardrobe and keepsakes to brothers and sisters and gave herself up to God. It is true, in this case, that death selected a shining mark upon which to lay his ruthless hand. Sad is it for the aged to die, but sadder still for those of youth, of great promise and usefulness. Let us enter into sincere condolence in behalf of the family who are required to sustain so severe an affliction.

SCIENCE AND SUPERSTITION.

A DUET.

Science said to Superstition:
"Get on you and all your fools,
Jugglers and impostion,
Sorcing tables, chairs and stools;

"Mediums floated to the ceiling—
Skyward, as ascends the lark;
Spirit voices heard, and feeling
Spirit-fingers in the dark!

"All this nonsense you believing,
All its humbug, bush and fudge;
Go along, you self-deceiving
Fools, and idiots leaved by 'Sludge!'"

Superstition answered Science:
"You're another! Talk of me
Setting reason at defiance!
Talk of my credulity!

"If my bright imagination
Peoples space with fiery shapes,
What of your dull brain's creation;
Hairier forms—ancestral apes?

"To the mental every being
Visible trace, including man,
More believe in without seeing—
Swallow more than all I can.

"You at my beliefs a scoffer!
Of your own conjectures you
Not one fact in proof can offer;
Would have millions were they true.

"Oh, but all your speculations
Rest, assumptions though immense,
On materialist foundations,
Now so dear to common sense!

"Cease my cackle? Hold your braying!
You crawl. I at least aspire,
If among the clouds I'm scraping,
You, alas, thunder in the mire."

Funeral Address on Rev. Thomas Jackson.

BY REV. WILLIAM ARTHUR.

My beloved brethren and fathers, we feel that this moment is one of very great solemnity, and almost in spite of ourselves we must admit that it is one of sorrow; but that sorrow is undoubtedly mingled in the hearts of us all with thanksgiving for the mercies of ninety years, and sure and certain hope of the coming joy of eternal ages. The sorrow is just such as would best prepare the heart to adore and magnify the great Giver of all good, and more calmly to anticipate those wonderful mercies that turn all human sorrows ultimately into blessings which shall never flee away. We are to-day pained by the death of one whose loss will be felt in the most distant parts of the world, in every region of the Canadian territory, and in Vancouver's Isle, and I have no doubt in many of those distant places it will excite prayer, and the upward turning of men's hearts to God, who gives men grace to live well, and who gave his servant the privilege of living long. How is it that this death will touch the hearts of so many, and touch them all for good? Suppose the child born in a Yorkshire village, well-nigh ninety years ago, had grown up a godless youth, lived a godless man, and spent the whole of his days forgetting his Creator, he might have died long ago, he might have lived till to-day, but when he was buried devout men would have made no lamentation over him, and the future would not have kept him in any remembrance. All the difference has been made by that one mercy of God—an early conversion, the turning of the soul of the youth to his Savior, whereby his life was devoted to the service of the Lord, and the gifts with which God endowed him were consecrated by a course of steady self-culture, culture in private and in public, culture in preparing to do God's work in the world, and that grandest of all culture which comes in doing it—by this double process, continually kept up as life went on and spheres grew wider, and responsibilities multiplied and claims came upon him, so came blessings too; for he that has said that in all labor is profit, seems to attach a special blessing to the silent, loving labor of men who in secret, before God, are searching after the things of wisdom that they may enrich the world with wise thoughts. And that Thomas Jackson was perpetually doing, and he received a blessing for it. The rich powers wherewith God had blessed him seemed steadily to ripen in the sunshine of God's favor, which was never withdrawn. We all remember him in his old age, and many of us remember him before that had come. My first deep impression of him was in City Road Chapel, with a vast multitude surrounding him, all alive, and all earnest, and it seemed as if he were the palpitating heart that thrilled that entire assembly, and made it as one body, responding to every beat that it gave. I shall never forget, among other impressions of that occasion, how he melted all in speaking of his conversion, and the work of God in his native village, and of his hope and peace and joy when he came to allude to his venerable and beloved mother, then lying in a state of threatened death. God grant that some mothers here may be enabled to-day to put up a prayer of faith that God may give them three such sons as he gave to that mother. He who bestowed such a gift on her may do the like for others. Let us ask God's gifts in faith and say: "Thou who hast given one mother in our Israel these three sons to do this work for thee, thou canst give such sons to others." Let us expect that he who raised up these men to work for God will raise others up. In all the interval from that centenary year till this last stage, that bright life, like a very long summer's evening, when the sky is so warm, and everything glows, and yet the sun is going down after all, but you can hardly believe it is sunset, for you have all the glow and joy of the morning; so it was with him continually. When he came into a great multitude of two thousand or three thousand persons, it was rather like a little party to which you brought in a loving child; it was not the chill of old age, or anything depressing, but something to open everybody's heart, and make every one feel like a child at home. Anything like the family feeling that that presence awoke when it entered into our assemblies it would be very difficult in the history of human relations completely to parallel. And then when he used to talk to us or meditate with us, his mind and body engaged, both so much alike—robust, tenacious, buoyant, gentle, simple, strong—when he began to pour out the fullness of his heart, his white hair reflecting the light of the sun, and his countenance radiant with the light of the soul, we felt as we never did feel when any one else was talking. And the last time, so far as I remember, when I heard him deliver anything like a formal address was at a funeral at the house of a friend, surrounded by friends whom he dearly loved. He spoke of his being an old man, and not able to say much, and then, in the midst of Mr. Clubb's friends, he poured out a familiar address, every word of which you might have printed as it fell from his lips; every sentence clear and copious and round, in his own style exactly, without one sign of mental failure, and with every sign of strange moral power, and very bright spiritual life. And so God has kept him and blessed him, and enabled him to the last moment of life to testify to the unbroken peace and consolation and gladness which, from the early days when God called him in his youth, the blessed Comforter has never withdrawn from his believing heart.

We have the double testimony of the man's honest word and of the man's unspotted life. God was with him, and he walked with God, and God has taken him. And now he is speaking to us all. We who are old are not likely to be so old as he lived to be; oh that we may be as happy, as holy, as full of support for the aged, as full of comfort for the young, as full of that which commends the gospel to all! And many of us who are young, I would say to every young brother in the ministry here, how much may be done to crown a life with peculiar blessing by steady, unwearying diligence in the work of God. If every brother will take it to his heart to make the most for God of all that God has intrusted to him, whether it be the one talent or the two, or the five, to do the very utmost with it, the blessing already given will go on, and your work shall abide when you are gone. The labors of Mr. Jackson had a special connection with the place in which we now stand, and his name will be written upon its history and identified with it for all time to come. Many who have studied here are now scattered over every part of the mission-field; let us pray that his death may be made a great blessing to them all. That is one of the privileges of a good man. Having served his generation by the will of God, he has now fallen asleep; the opportunity for action is ended, but, thanks be to God, his influence is not ended. The actions are each seeds that will bear fruit after their kind; and the labor, and the zeal, and the patience, and the perseverance, and the faith, and the hope, and the charity, and the joy—they were all seeds, and those seeds will bear fruit not only in the hearts of those who were his pupils and were trained by him, but in the hearts of many others. God will make the day of his removal the time of causing the seed he sowed to spring up with fresh power. Oh that we might date a connectional revival from this day! I believe there never was a time so favorable as the present for gathering in souls for God, never so many unconverted people sitting under our ministry, never such a number who are what our blessed Master called "not far from the kingdom of God," with religious truth and a certain degree of enlightenment, but who lack the one deciding power; and if that power in a plenary influence of grace came down upon us here we might see such a gathering of souls for God as he has often promised. For oh what glorious words of comfort, what glorious foretelling of good things to Zion, he has many a time cheered us with; and sometimes, in some connectional trial, when others were depressed, and some ready to despair, he would stretch his eye over the future and tell of good days to come, of God's blessing in store, of success and triumph and victory in the work of God. Let us then to-day look to him who blessed him, first to raise up very many to work as he worked; secondly, to make all now in the work far more instrumental than we have ever been; thirdly, to make in every one of the churches, at home or abroad, those proceedings that will take place in connection with this death very fruit-bearing, very full of present and future power, and not forgetting to pray that that God who in all great concerns of public life and the affairs of nations or churches or societies forgets not one smitten heart, let us not forget to pray that divine solace may be applied to those hearts that are now bereaved, remembering that every point of character which enhanced the public benefit augments the private loss. May God, who alone gives immortality and eternal life, give to every one of us to-day the foretaste of his glory, and then lift us up at last and seat us by his side. Amen.

Altars, Ancient and Modern.

The claim of the Roman Catholic Church to be the apostolic church is constantly confronted by her own altars. For, so far as we can judge from history, not only no parallel but not even any analogous feature is afforded by the primitive church. There is, indeed, no evidence that in the apostolic church any altar, in the proper sense of that term, was known; for the reference in Hebrews xiii, 10 is not to a piece of ecclesiastical furniture, but to the cross of Christ. Bingham assures us that the term altar and table were indifferently used in the primitive church for the article on which the eucharist was placed. This altar or table was, at all events, very simple in its structure, had no images upon or about it, not even the cross, apparently, until the fourth century. There was but one altar or table in each church, sometimes only one in each city. They were at first constructed of wood, but in the sixth century it was decreed that they should be built of stone, the object being to represent Christ the foundation-stone of the church. As, however, the doctrine of transubstantiation came to be more generally accepted, and the mass to be regarded as an actual sacrifice, not as a memorial service, the communion-table came to be regarded more and more as a true altar.

At the present time, in the Romish Church, every altar has three steps [illegible], covered with a cloth. It is decked with natural and artificial flowers, according to the season of the year, and no cost is spared in adorning it with gold, silver and jewels. The tabernacle of the holy sacrament is placed on the holy altar, on each side of which are tapers of white wax, except at all offices for the dead, and during the last three days of passion-week, at which time they are yellow. A crucifix is placed on the altar. There is a copy, written in a legible hand, of the Te igitur, a prayer addressed only to the first Person of the Trinity. The altar is furnished with a little bell, which is rung thrice when the priest kneels down, thrice when he elevates the host, and thrice when he sets it down. There is also a portable altar or consecrated stone, with a small cavity in the middle of the front side, in which are put the relics of saints, and it is sealed up by the bishop. Should the seal be broken, the altar loses its consecration. The furniture of the altar consists of a chalice and paten, or holy plate for the bread and wine, both of gold or silver; a pyx or box, for holding the wafer, at least of silver-gilt; a vail in form of a pavilion, of rich white stuff, to cover the pyx; a thurible of silver or pewter for the incense; a holy-water pot, of silver, pewter or tin; also corporals, palls, purificatories, etc. About the time of Charlemagne it became common to have several altars in one church—a custom which has since spread. The side altars were usually erected on pillars, side walls or in chapels, while the main or high altar stands always in the choir. In the Roman Catholic churches of Europe the sides of the church are sometimes lined with these altars, at some of which, built for the purpose, you may almost any hour of any day see the devout Roman Catholic carrying on his or her devotions.

Why Give Every Week?

1. It tends to increase the number of givers. The majority of persons in moderate circumstances will find it much easier to contribute a little sum weekly than to bring eight times that amount for a bi-monthly gathering. If there are some in the congregation who could more easily draw their checks in advance for the donation of a quarter or a year, they are not positively forbidden to do so. Still we hope they will not complain of the "bother" of this weekly method, but will be willing to lend their example to the uniformity of its working. "They that are strong ought to bear the infirmities of the weak, and not to please themselves." That method is most Christian which is best adapted to encourage the giving, the activity, the development in every Christian way, of the largest number. This, too, will be found the wisest in a financial point of view. It is not the sudden thunder-gust, but the steady rain of little drops that soaks the ground. So the church of Christ will never muster her grandest aggregates of money for her benevolent enterprises till she learns how to cheer the very poorest of her poor with the blessed thought that even he can give something for his Master's cause. In this lies the grand power of the weekly plan. It invites and encourages every one to give something. Without diminishing the gifts of the wealthy, it augments the number of lesser offerings, and so greatly swells the aggregate. Some congregations have been surprised to find their yearly amounts actually doubled in this way; surprised, because they had been conscious of no special effort to secure such a result. The fact, too, that a definite sum is pledged at the beginning of the year will have its influence upon all classes of givers, tending to educate them to regular, systematic habits of giving; to giving on principle instead of waiting for the excitement of special appeals.

2. The other important advantage of the weekly plan is that it tends to make giving an act of worship. It does this by making it a regular part of the duties of the day and place of worship. "On the first day of the week," said an apostle, "let every one of you lay by him in store according as the Lord has prospered him." This inspired direction to Christians of the primitive age harmonized with the original scriptural idea, that "honoring the Lord with our substance," bringing him "the first fruits of our increase," was as truly an act of worship as the offering of prayer or praise. From this view the modern church has too far fallen. Our giving is too commonly done in a secular spirit. Let us restore the ancient idea. Let us give worshipfully. Let us regard our money as just as sacred to God as our lip-worship, as it really is. If we give worshipfully, we shall give conscientiously too. No personal solicitation is used. Each one gives as much or as little as he feels able, an offering not to the eyes of the congregation, but to the Lord, and equally acceptable to him, whether it be one cent or a thousand, provided the conscience of the giver himself be satisfied. The question of amount is simply one to be answered by the giver himself as in the sight of God. "If there be first a willing mind, it is accepted according to that a man hath, and not according to that he hath not."

IN ANCIENT medical phraseology herbs possessed of healing natures were called "simples;" in God's laboratory all things that heal are simple—all natural enjoyments are simple. The spirit of the life of Christ is simple, natural, with power to calm and soothe.

AN IOWA MAN cannot remember where he hid a coffee-pot full of silver during the war, and has scratched nearly every hair out of his head thinking about it.—Exchange. Why didn't he tie a knot in his pocket-handkerchief?

Scientific.

GUTTA-PERCHA decays rapidly, and becomes brittle and porous when dry and exposed to the light, but under water appears to undergo no change whatever. Gutta-percha sunk in the sea for twenty years shows no sign of decay, which must be regarded as a condition in which nature comes to the aid of mechanical and electrical science.

DR. GEORGE STRICKLEY gives an interesting account of the Western mole (Scalops Townsendii,) which occurs in the Oregon and Washington Territories. He kept a specimen for some time in a box, at the bottom of which was a quantity of rich black loam. When disturbed it instinctively endeavored to escape by burrowing in the earth of the box, using its long-pointed nose as a wedge to pioneer the way. The excavation was performed by its broad stout hands, which, surmounted with their long sharp claws, seemed admirably adapted for the purpose. The fore paws were worked alternately as in swimming, the hind feet acting as propellers. Although the earth in the box was soft and friable, it was nevertheless a matter of astonishment to see how rapidly the little creature could travel through it. When he slept it was in a sitting posture, with the body curled forward and the neck strongly bent, so that the nose rested between the hind legs. He thus assumed the shape of a ball, evidently his ordinary position when asleep.

AS ILLUSTRATING the projecting power of vegetable fibers when suddenly released from their natural tension, Mr. Thomas Meehan states that, while traveling through a wood, he was struck violently in the face by some seeds of Hamamelis Virginica, the common witch-hazel. In order to ascertain the cause of this projecting force, and, if possible, measure its power, he gathered carefully a number of the capsules. Laying these on the floor, and causing them to be suddenly disturbed, he found that the seeds they contained were thrown from four to six, and, in one instance, as much as twelve feet away. The cause of this immense projecting power he found to be simply in the contraction of the horny albumen which surrounded the seed. The seeds were oval, and in a smooth, long envelope, and, when the albumen had burst and expanded enough to get just beyond the middle, where the seed narrowed again, the contraction of the albumen caused the seed to slip out with great force; just as we would squeeze out an apple or orange-seed from between the finger and thumb. Very similar to this action is that by which the pollen of the common New England laurel is projected against the stigma of its own or adjacent blossoms; the stamens being bent outward by the expanding petal until a point is reached where the slender rod is suddenly released, and, flying back to its normal erect position, scatters beyond it the light and delicate pollen-powder.

FLUID MEAT.—The Food Committee of London recently considered Mr. S. Darby's method of preparing a variety of fluid meat containing fibrine, gelatine and coagulable albumen, but no fat, by means of pepsin and hydrochloric acid. Lean meat is finely sliced and digested with pepsin in water, previously acidulated with hydrochloric acid, at a temperature of ninety-six, to one hundred degrees Fahrenheit, until the whole of the fibrine of the meat disappears. The liquor is then filtered, to separate fat, cartilage and insoluble matters, neutralized by carbonate of soda, and carefully evaporated to the consistence of a soft extract. The changes effected, in rendering these nutritious components of meat soluble, coincide precisely with those which occur in the stomach in normal digestion, when food has been acted on and prepared for passing the pylorus, to be mixed with bile and pancreatic juice. A bitter taste, arising from the use of pepsin, is removed by the addition of a small amount of fresh pancreas. Fluid meat thus prepared is plainly ready for immediate assimilation, and does not require the digestive processes of the stomach. It will therefore render good service to dyspeptics, convalescents and the debilitated, as a nourishing food. It is readily soluble in water, possesses the flavor of roasted meat, and therefore is entirely agreeable to the taste. As a moist extract it can either be spread over other food, or, on dilution, be used as a substitute for beef-tea.

CONFIRMATION OF AGASSIZ'S GLACIAL THEORY.—The voyage of the "Hassler" gave the first opportunity for those acquainted with Agassiz's views of glaciers and glacial action to make observations in the south temperate regions. Very few observers or geological writers have even yet learned to distinguish between the effects of local glaciers and of the great glacial sheets, which once moved from the poles toward the equator; and Darwin made his observations in Patagonia and the Pacific coast before the publication of Agassiz's views—views so novel and so grand that it has required thirty years for the general students of geology to rise to their comprehension. From Montevideo, through the straits, to Valparaiso and Santiago de Chili, the party under Agassiz found the most abundant proofs of the correctness of Agassiz's Systeme Glaciaire. At almost every step of the way the evidence was before them that a great sheet of ice had once covered the whole continent, pushing its way irresistibly northward for many centuries, rounding, polishing and scratching the rocks and creating the so-called "drift" deposits; that subsequently to this period great glaciers had descended from all the higher mountains of the continent; that these glaciers are sharply distinguished from the previous great glacial sheet; and that these glaciers have gradually diminished in size until many of them have wholly disappeared, others are just vanishing, others remain of majestic proportions and action.—Old and New.

Religious Intelligence.

LAST Christmas the offering of the American chapel in Rome, amounting to over $110, was appropriated to Bishop Hare, of India.

THE REVIVAL, which is of extraordinary interest, in Bath, Maine, still continues. It is a most wonderful work. In Wesley church alone there have been more than 300 conversions.

THE total number of members of the Methodist Episcopal Church is 1,458,471, and the total number of Sunday school scholars is 1,278,171, leaving an excess of members over scholars of 179,867.

QUITE a number of the churches of Chicago are substituting the Bible-reading service for the second sermon on the Sabbath. One church is said to have had the service both morning and evening recently.

THE Maryland Annual Conference of the Methodist Protestant Church has almost unanimously recommended the next Conference to expunge the word "white" from the Discipline and law of the church.

THE report of the Jewish Persian relief committee, of which Sir Moses Montefiore is president, was recently published, and will be found of much interest. The relief distributed amounted to £18,000, or, in round numbers, $100,000.

TELEGRAMS from Denver, where Mr. Hammond has recently been at work, report a great revival in progress in that city. Several hundred conversions have been made, and many of these are among prostitutes, thieves and criminals of the lowest class.

THE statistics of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Germany are: Probationers, 1,727; members, 6,230; total of members and probationers, 7,957; local preachers, 27; traveling preachers, 60; Sunday schools, 229; officers and members, 931; scholars, 10,071.

MADAGASCAR.—The great movement continues, and the peril is that nominal conversions may be accepted for real. In 1869 18,000 persons announced their change to Christianity, increasing the rolls of communicants to 10,516; in 1871 the roll contained 18,000 names.

A DEPUTATION, representing 4,000 Nonconformist ministers in England, recently waited upon the Archbishop of Canterbury and asked him to support the bill legalizing marriage with a deceased wife's sister. The archbishop promised to take the subject under consideration.

THE Religious Telescope (United Brethren) says: "Our revival columns this week contain reports of about 1,200 accessions to the church, not counting those supposed to have been reported heretofore. Last week the number was about 1,250. These reports indicate a degree of the divine favor for which our people ought to be very thankful."

THE British minister at Peking, evidently forgetful of the message which the Lord Jesus sent by the disciples of John the Baptist to their Master, and its glorious climax, has advised British missionaries in China to forsake their labors among the poor, as a great waste of labor, and to give up their property in the interior and retire to the ports.

THE corner-stone of a new church of the Presbyterian body (South) was laid at Austin, Texas, March 11. The procession consisted of the Odd Fellows, the Knights Templars, the Masons; cadets and firemen, and moved to the music of a brass band, to the site of the church. After the singing of a hymn the corner-stone was laid with masonic ceremonies. Rev. Dr. Palmer, of New Orleans, delivered an eloquent address on the occasion.

DEACONESSES FOR CHURCHES.—Plymouth church, Minneapolis, have elected three of their lady members deaconesses. The term of office is three years, and their duties are to care for the sick and poor, especially among the women, and to look after the spiritual interests of the girls, the young ladies and the female members of the church generally. Responsive reading by the congregation has been adopted as a part of the morning service. Rev. Dr. Budington's church in Brooklyn have also elected two women as deaconesses in their congregation.

DR. M. C. RICHARDSON tells in the Congregationalist the story of an old church in Freehold, New Jersey, now 143 years old, wearing still its original covering of cedar shingles and receiving its light through the original window-sashes, whose panes are six by eight inches. A table which was used by Brainard in administering the communion to the Indians is in the church, and there is a bloodstain on one of the pews in which a wounded soldier was laid during the battle of Monmouth. The two Tennents, Gilbert and William, formerly preached here, and the desk was also occupied by George Whitefield.

THERE have many small Protestant congregations sprung up in Mexico in towns near to the capital, where the people meet and are led in their public services by some layman of the congregation. To meet the lack of preachers, thirteen laymen in the City of Mexico have been appointed to preach in the surrounding villages. Rev. Maxwell Phillips, Presbyterian, writes of a visit to Toluca, a city southwest of Mexico, where he found a congregation gathered and ministered to by an English layman in his own house. Mr. Phillips has taken measures to establish a church in the place. The congregation of Rev. H. C. Thompson in San Luis Potosi has been recently mobbed, but the police have showed every disposition to punish the instigators of the outrage.

A CORRESPONDENT of the Churchman from Rome contradicts the report that Bishop Strossmayer has made submission to the dogma of infallibility. He did have published some months ago, in the official journal of his diocese, the acts of the Vatican Council, as a part of the news of the day, which his people had a right to receive, but without giving a word of his own to enforce them. He visited Rome for the sake of his health, on business connected with the decorations of his cathedral in Agani, and to see how matters stood at the ecclesiastical capital as between the Old Catholics and the New Catholics, and his visit to the Pope was one of ceremony only; and that the subject of infallibility or the conclave was not once mentioned during the interview. Such is the correspondent's version of affairs.

MISSIONARY TRIUMPHS. The missionary enterprise of the church accomplishes feats in philology, as well as in liberality and self-sacrifice. The New Testament in the Russian language is circulating by the 100,000 at Odessa. On the coasts of Labrador the Moravians have distributed the complete Bible among the heads of families, translated into the Esquimaux tongue. A Japanese English dictionary has just been published, and the gospel of Mark in Japanese is being read in the land of the Mikado. In other places, different in climate and people, devoted missionaries are declaring, in the various languages, the wonderful works of God. And in the schools, and even theological seminaries, Bibles and other books are being studied in versions suited to those who use them. The achievements being thus wrought are valuable, even apart from their religious character. Learning, scholarship, the zeal of hard study and diligent application; all help to illustrate the Christian faith and devotion. United Presbyterian.

MR. ALBERT REVILLE, in a paper on the progress of the ardent forms of Catholicism in France, shows that it has, in particular, reconquered a notable part of the aristocracy. Catholic devotion is fashionable, while it has diminished among the working classes and the bourgeois. The Protestants form only about a thirty-second of the population, but they are socially a select body. They belong for the most part to the class of citizens in easy circumstances. They are numerous in the magistracy and in the army. A large share of the commerce and industry, and almost the whole banking business of the country, is in their hands. In the Versailles chamber, notwithstanding its clerical character, there are seventy Protestants. A number of men belonging to the literary and scientific elite of the country, without themselves adopting Protestantism, cause their children to be brought up in the Protestant church. Mr. Taine is not nominally a Protestant, but his only child was baptized by M. Coquerel, and is at this moment being trained as a Protestant.

THE report that the Japanese edicts against Christianity have been abolished is confirmed in a letter from S. R. Brown, of Yokohama, to the Christian Intelligencer. The act, however, has not been done in a formal way, by imperial proclamation, but in a tacit fashion, which is thus described by Mr. Brown: "The Emperor has given his sanction to an order that all the prohibitions of our religion that are posted throughout the land, and have been so for more than two hundred years, shall be removed, and no more appear in country town and village, to deter his subjects from embracing it. It seems that the government, while desiring to place itself right in its relations to the Christian powers in respect to this matter, deemed it wise to annul the old law in the way least tending to produce excitement among the ignorant and superstitious, and so took this method to accomplish its object. I regard it as a very clever stroke of policy." The brethren of the native church in Yokohama, when informed of the action of the government, held a meeting of thanksgiving on February 22.

BISHOP COXE writes a letter to Bishop Smith, of Kentucky, proposing that the next General Convention of the Episcopal Church call a constitutional congress, "to meet somewhere, before the year 1876, with power to adjourn from time to time, to be charged with the duty of maturing such changes" in the organic law of the church as may be referred to them. The time has come, Bishop Coxe thinks, when the constitution of the Episcopal Church greatly needs reconstructing. He says: "It is not the matter of provinces merely; we must confront the question whether we are to be fossilized as an Anglican exotic or whether we are to rise to our proper sphere, and become a mother to all the immigrant tribes that are pressing into our borders from Europe and from Asia. The question of suffragan bishops for such tribes; the question as to the see system; the question as to liturgies in foreign tongues and as adapted to foreign peoples—these and others, which I will not now enumerate, press upon us as the great problems to be solved, and which never will be solved under the machinery and routine of our existing conventions."

MORE MISSIONARIES FOR CHINA. Bishop Wiley has appointed Rev. S. D. Harris, of the graduating class of Drew Theological Seminary, missionary to Peking, China; also Rev. A. Strittmater, of the Ohio Conference to Kiuklang, China; and Rev. I. H. Corell, of the Philadelphia Conference, to Foochow, China. These brethren will sail for their new field of labor June 1, from San Francisco. Their wives will accompany them. The Bishops and missionary secretaries are looking out for additional men for the foreign work. Bishop Bowman's services being greatly needed in some of the Western Conferences, it was arranged that Bishop Foster should visit South America in his stead. The latter, who is to leave for Europe in May, will, after presiding at the Conference of Germany and Switzerland, proceed to Buenos Ayres and make inspection of our work in that city and vicinity. This arrangement will be economical both as to time and money, as in any case, in view of the prevalence of yellow fever in many of the South American ports, an American Bishop visiting South America would find it better to go by way of England.—New York Christian Advocate.

The Lost Sheep.

The lost sheep of the house of Israel were to be the first objects of solicitude with the newly-commissioned apostles. Christ declared to the Syrophenician that "I am not sent but unto the lost sheep of the house of Israel." We suppose that these wanderers had a peculiar and prior claim upon the compassion of Jesus, and he certainly exhibits a deep and remarkable interest in them. Our lost sheep are the children of the church, those baptized at our altars, and reared in our homes and Sunday schools, who have strayed away. And beyond this are those who have been received on their own profession, and have perhaps run well for a season.

In the Methodist Episcopal Church, during a period of ten years, the statistics show that less than one-third of their probationers were received into full connection. The two-thirds were not all lost, as many died, many perhaps joined other churches, and the loss of old members by death, removal and transfer to other denominations must be taken into account. As many as one-third, however, at a moderate estimate, must have gone back to the world before the expiration of the six months' probation. As we have no probationary term, there are no means of ascertaining the proportion of the new accessions which is lost. The additions are, we believe, in proportion to our membership, greater than in the Northern Methodist Church, and we think the plan of receiving applicants at once into full membership gives us as many new members as the old system gave us probationers, and the proportion of those who fall away is probably less than under the old probationary arrangement. Last year our increase was about thirty-seven thousand white members, but the number received must have been as many more than this as would cover the losses in the entire membership by death and other causes.

The statements referred to in reference to Northern Methodist probationers indicate that the great loss is within a few months of their reception. We have no statistics to determine this point in reference to our own people, but it is probably true of nearly all churches. Our new members must be nursed with great care. The crisis is in the early experience, and before habits of piety have been formed, and before there has been time for thorough instruction in righteousness. Some are disposed to think that the falling off of young converts is largely owing to the exciting influences under which they are brought in. The Christian Intelligencer enters a moderate caveat against the Methodist revival, high-pressure ways on this ground. But the objection is not valid, if it is true, that with all our losses our gains are greater than those who work in a calmer and, as they believe, in a surer method. As fishers of men we cast the gospel net broadly and deeply, and if the result is of every sort, still the good predominates, and the total saved is more than a timid and feeble course would have gathered.

The losses, however, though chiefly, are not all from the ranks of the young converts. One fruitful source is in the moving of the people. They fail perhaps to take letters, or, taking them, neglect to deliver them, or, delivering them, they wither and die in the process of transplanting. Among strangers they are not taken up and nursed as they should be, and the influences in a strange church are less favorable, at best, than in the old sanctuary where they were converted and where many tender ties and associations contributed to keep them steadfast. Another occasion of loss is in the change of pastors. Many more are doubtless gained by it, but some are frequently sent astray. The old pastor had a hold upon them, knew them, and while he remained they were kept in the church; but from dissatisfaction, or from a backslidden condition, they slip away before the new pastor has fairly found them out. And besides these there are occasions of backsliding and wandering which need to be carefully studied. We have not space to point them out—the worldly and fashionable pleasures, the vices of drunkenness and licentiousness, and many other shoals and rocks on which souls are wrecked.

However lost, they are many, and they abound in every community. The pastor and the faithful members should canvass their fields with reference to them. They must not be left out of the sermon, the prayer, the hymn and the exhortation. The lost sheep of the house of Israel! We write this word for them. Let us take pains to hunt them up and to bring them back. And not altogether by scolding and by denunciation. Who can tell their trials, their sore conflicts, their sorrows and discouragements? Inspire them with hope, reach out to them a helping hand, and give them a brotherly and sympathetic greeting. Prevention is the best. If we have found the leaks, by all means let us stop them as thoroughly as we can. Watch and nurse the young converts, bring the children forward to the recognition of their membership before they have had time to stray, and by faithful pastoral vigilance anticipate the dangers from the change of homes and of preachers. But still the lost sheep are everywhere about us. Many have wandered far, and all are in danger of death. It is both Christ-like and apostolic to seek them and lead them back to the fold. "Brethren, if any of you do err from the truth, and one convert him, let him know that he which converteth the sinner from the error of his way shall save a soul from death, and shall hide a multitude of sins."

Infant Salvation.

Our second page has for several weeks contained articles on the subject of the religion of childhood. These we have admitted, on different sides, as we regard the question one of interest and practically important. We have several articles on hand about this same thing, some, if not all, of which will probably appear sooner or later. We cannot, however, give an undue space to this discussion. We would advise, by the way, that our friends discuss the subject—and not the contributors, and that they leave all personal allusions and charges of heterodoxy out of the account. There is, no doubt, much misunderstanding and confusion in the use of terms. Pelagianism and infant regeneration are not the same thing necessarily; and when the matter is sifted our brethren may not be very far apart in their views of the actual spiritual condition of little children.

Regeneration in the unconscious infant may be something different from this experience in the believing adult. What one class of writers contends for is that the child that dies and the child that lives are in precisely the same spiritual condition. Both, in reference to character and acceptance, are of the kingdom of heaven. Both are alike sanctified, and that neither in death nor by virtue of it is any change wrought in the moral character. Dr. Hibbard, in his "Religion of Childhood," has written a volume maintaining the doctrine of infant salvation. Dr. Whedon holds this view throughout his commentary, and wrote an elaborate article, in the January number of the Methodist Quarterly, vindicating it. We suppose that neither our Baptist nor Calvinistic friends can consistently accept the doctrine, but its establishment would overthrow their peculiar notions regarding election, and that of the former concerning infant baptism. So far as we can gather, the advocates of infant grace mean that they are in a saved condition, without insisting upon the application of the terms justification and regeneration as they are used in reference to adult believers.

All we intended in this allusion to the discussion was to ask those who have written on the subject to be patient, and to remind them that it is not needful to indulge in personal reflections. We publish much that we do not ourselves assent to, but "let every man be fully persuaded in his own mind." We clip the following paragraph from the Nashville Christian Advocate. Dr. Summers has, perhaps, struck the nail on the head. He says:

We are asked if we consider infants in a justified and regenerate state. We do not use the terms justified and regenerate of infants; we reserve them for believers. Infants are in a state of acceptance with God through the atonement, and they are the subjects of preventing grace, which determines their growing and sanctifying grace on their removal by death, or their voluntary acceptance of the atonement if they survive the state of infancy. This is the teaching of Watson's Institutes, the Wesleyan Catechism, Ralston's Elements, and our divines generally.

Calling for Vengeance.

The virus of abolition fanaticism has taken such entire possession of our Northern Methodist brethren that they are incapable of a just view of affairs in the South. They are utterly deaf and blind to truth, and willingly lend themselves to multiply and disseminate lies and misrepresentations. Why is it that the Methodists of the North are so much more malignant and mendacious than others? This has been to us a problem of long standing: why they should be so much worse than the people of other denominations, and, beyond comparison, worse in their invincible prejudices than the worldlings of their section. In comparison with Northern Episcopalians, Presbyterians or sinners, their tender mercies toward us would be most cruel and vindictive. It is impossible to enlighten them, as they persist in reading but one side, and in viewing everything through the distorted and vicious medium of a fanatical bias. Their color-blindness is so perverse and incurable that it amounts to a most singular and lamentable delusion. They are bound with unfailing instinct to take the part of the negro and the administration, let the circumstances and facts point to whatever conclusion they may.

In the late troubles in Grant parish, after all the statements, pro and con, and after making due allowance for human passion and error, we believe that the negroes and their miscreant leaders were responsible for the whole. The whites and the better class of colored people were acting in the interests of law and social order, and for the peace and protection of the community. The following statement of Sheriff Nash to the commander of the United States troops sent to the scene of the riot is substantially true, and unchallenged, so far as we have heard, by any respectable authority:

STATEMENT OF SHERIFF NASH.

Major J. H. Smith, Commanding Nineteenth United States Infantry:

As the duly elected and legal sheriff of this parish I would make this statement, that you may judge for yourself relative to the legality of the action taken. I received for sheriff the largest number of votes, and as such was duly commissioned both by Messrs. McEnery and Kellogg. Previous to my election there had been bodies of riotous persons in the country, who had no fear of the law, and who made frequent threats of outlawry and incendiarism.

On the twenty-sixth of March last these persons, both white and colored, marched in a body to the courthouse and thence ejected the legally elected and installed parish officers, myself among the number. I at that time ordered them to disperse, but they fired upon myself and others, compelling us to flee for our lives. I accordingly, seeing no other course, procured from Judge Regan, the police magistrate, commissioned by Kellogg, a warrant for the arrest of the ringleaders, and with it, and a deputy constable, proceeded to Colfax, where I arrived in time to learn that an assemblage of peaceable citizens had been broken up and fired upon by the rioters.

Even then I desired to make a compromise; and, before executing the warrant, rode up and endeavored to preserve peace, but was again fired upon, and threats made by the rioters, who said they would any how drink my blood. Seeing no course then left, I, at the order of the judge, summoned a posse comitatus of citizens, both white and colored, and with these (one hundred and twenty-five in number) succeeded on Easter Sunday in dispersing the two hundred and fifty rioters and preserving peace. The warrant for their arrest and the order I still hold in my possession. I deemed that it was necessary to preserve peace at all hazards, and therefore I resorted to the measures taken. Very respectfully,

C. C. Nash, Sheriff.

D. W. Shaw, who also claimed to be sheriff under an appointment of Kellogg, testifies under oath:

I, however, ran for the office of sheriff, and Nash was elected. I do not claim to have been elected, and am satisfied I was not, Nash receiving the largest number of votes. I was appointed by Mr. Kellogg as the Republican receiving the largest number of votes.

Republicans here claim that this man Shaw is the legal sheriff, and that he had summoned the negroes as a posse. And yet in a statement made under oath he denies that he summoned them, alleging that he had no power or control over them, and that they were only an infuriated mob, "deserving to be killed" for their misdeeds. He also states that repeated efforts of compromise were made by Sheriff Nash and posse, who were executing a warrant for the arrest of several robbers, who had broken into and plundered Judge Rutland's house.

Last week we gave a specimen of Northern Methodist truth and fairness from the New York Christian Advocate. Here is an extract from Zion's Herald, breathing the same spirit of love for the truth:

The negroes of Grant parish, in this Red river township, were called together at first to defend the public offices. They were deliberately attacked by well-armed and officered bands of men. They fortified their quarters. When these were inflamed, and they proposed to surrender themselves, they were deliberately shot down like wild beasts, and their bodies left unburied upon the ruins, along the streets as they fell under murderous bullets. Now such bloodshed as this calls upon God and upon established human government for vengeance. It is an unequal controversy, in the long run, between wrong and right. God will conquer. The "bloody chasm" has not yet closed, but the country cannot endure to have it open much longer. It will be a hopeful hour when the religious press of the South does its full duty in developing a purer moral sentiment.

All who have taken pains to inform themselves know well enough that every possible effort was made to effect a peaceable dispersion of the rioters, and that the final conflict took place after a most cruel and shameful violation of a flag-truce on the part of the negroes.

It is fair, however, and to our purpose to give the paragraph from the Herald which introduces the one we have just quoted. It betrays an animus so exceedingly bitter, and a loyalty to presidential authority and despotism generally, that can hardly fail to edify. Saith the Herald:

The virus of slavery still lingers in the veins of many Southern men. The Colfax massacre is simply the outward symptom of the inward fever still inflaming the bad blood of unreconstructed men. We are the most pained with the sneering, apologetic or deliberately false statements made in reference to this horrible act by portions of the Southern Democratic press. The official examination now made fully confirms the worst view of the case that has been presented. We are not defenders of the political party in power in Louisiana. We have little doubt that it is corrupt. We lamented the failure of Congress to finally settle the strife between the contending State governments. But the Kellogg administration now holds the State offices. The President has recognized it, and must sustain it if it cannot defend itself. It is gaining strength and collecting the public taxes.

The most hopeless indication of the persistent injustice and outrage to which our people are to be subjected is the tone of the Northern Methodist press. We are glad to believe that a spirit of greater moderation prevails among the other denominational journals, and that many of the ablest secular papers have been sufficiently candid to publish the facts as they are. Our people have endured patiently, and are still enduring an amount of oppression and wrong to which no Northern State would submit. We take some comfort from the Herald's wisdom: "It is an unequal controversy, in the long run, between wrong and right. God will conquer." We are disposed to think so; but the greatest achievement of Omnipotence will be to so reconstruct a Yankee Methodist that he can deal justly and truly with the white people of the South. "In the long run!" It will be very long, we fear, before, in this unequal controversy, right will triumph. In our day we do not expect it, but some time God, in his providence, will bring it to pass.

Holiness the Want of the Ministry and the Church.

THE "HOME ALTAR."

Mr. Editor: No thoughtful man, I think, can feel that the church in general, and the Methodist Church in particular, is doing the work for and in the world that the world has a right to expect from its claims and pretensions, and that Christ demands. That it should find itself, at the end of more than eighteen centuries after its institution and endowment "with power from on high," and the Holy Ghost, which was purchased especially for it by its Founder and Head, all this time available and at its command, so to speak, in a world eight-tenths of which are not even nominally Christian, and confronted by men, reared in its midst, who challenge it to show that prayer is ever answered by a divine power, or that it is an appreciable force or agency in the world, is a phenomenon that should arrest attention, and demands serious thought. Something is wrong. Either the church was not designed and charged to enlighten and bring the world to Christ, or she did not understand her mission, or she has failed to avail herself of the powers and resources placed at her disposal, and so has not done her work. Upon which of these alternatives shall we stand? If upon either of the two first, we charge amazing misapprehension, if not ignorance, upon the cotemporaries and first followers of Christ, for they, without exception, so understood his charge and their duty. If we are compelled to take the third, as I believe all candid men admit, then a question of momentous importance arises: What prerogative or grant has the church failed to employ in her work? We need adopt no philosophical or metaphysical methods to reach the answer to this inquiry. It is clearly manifest to all Christian minds that the great desideratum, in order to succeed in the work to which the church is called, [illegible] to Christ—holiness; this is wisdom, power, success.

For want of this the ministry is feeble, and the church languid and ineffective. How much preaching is done, how much money contributed, how much machinery employed, and how few souls saved, how little glory brought to Christ, and how slowly the conversion of the world advances! Thousands feel and readily acknowledge the weak point; but alas! how little is said in the pulpit, how little by the church press, and how little in the private circle, upon this great want of the church.

Our religious papers, Mr. Editor, hardly give us an article per quarter upon what was a grand and the great theme with the Wesleys, Fletcher and other great lights of early Methodism—sanctification, holiness. Who among us points out its nature, and explains clearly and simply the method of its attainment?

How singular that there should be a need for periodicals especially devoted to the explanation and defense of this doctrine and experience! And yet, as things are, and as I fear they will be for a long time to come, such publications are more needed than any other class. And I am glad that there is found among us a man who was willing to take the risk, and whose heart impelled him to attempt such a work. Rev. William Baker, as some of your readers know, publishes the Southern Home Altar, at McMinnville, Tennessee, at $1.25 a year. It is a work well worthy of the aid and patronage of all lovers of primitive Methodist doctrine and religion. The publisher is toiling to sustain this work from a love of the doctrine and the cause of Christ. Let preachers subscribe for and read and circulate it among their people, and it will help both.

J. Hamilton.

Good News from Mobile.

Mr. Editor: We have had a gracious time in our churches in this city. Brother Shapard has received more than thirty into the St. Francis Street church. We have received nearly as many in Franklin Street, and will receive more. Bro. Foust has received five or six into St. Paul's. The meetings were held in St. Francis Street church, and under the general supervision of Bro. Shapard, though all the pastors and members felt that it was a joint meeting, and in all my life I never attended anywhere a meeting of more harmony and good feeling.

There were more than seventy conversions, and the church was greatly refreshed. Oh, it was delightful to see the tears and hear the shouts of penitents and members and converts!—to see the brethren, and sisters too, from all our churches in the same altar, kneeling in sympathy and prayer with mourners!—to hear the old-time choruses swell out from happy souls, and the earnest "amens" from hearts burdened with a sense of obligation to sinners and to God!

The older men of the church say there has not been such a time here in twenty years. But we hope it is but the beginning.

Bro. Foust is now in a meeting. There is much interest. We will all join, as far as possible. I think our church is looking up. May God help us to look only to Christ.

Yours, etc., J. W. Rush.

Mobile, May 8, 1873.

The Sixth Anniversary of the Presbyterian Sunday schools of New Orleans was held in Dr. Palmer's church on Sunday afternoon, the eleventh instant. The gathering was large, and the exercises are represented to have been very interesting. The report read showed that our Presbyterian brethren are doing a great work, and that they are spending money and labor most wisely and zealously in their Sabbath school enterprises. They have ten church and four mission schools, three hundred and seventy teachers and three thousand scholars. These figures, if correct, exhibit a most gratifying and encouraging state of affairs.

Thanks to the brethren for invitations to attend their District Conferences. For our own pleasure and for the sake of the Advocate we would be glad to come, but the tripod and district keep us steadily and inexorably at our own work. Please do not forget the Advocate at your good meetings. Not to be with you is to us a regret and a self-denial, but if possible we will. May the Lord pour out his Spirit, revive the church and save the people.

"Education by the State," on our second page, will receive a careful perusal from all our thoughtful readers. The question which Dr. McCarty discusses is one of profound interest and importance to the country and to the church.

Letter from Bishop Marvin.

I have just finished up the District Conference work for this year in Illinois. I attended the conference in each district, and made strict inquiry into every particular item of the work in hand. Every interest passed under careful review, and each circuit and station was subjected to a close examination. I was determined to know the exact condition of the work in this field, and have no doubt that I have now a good general knowledge, from actual inspection, of the state of facts and the prospects of the work.

If I were to say that every particular charge is in a high tide of success, I should not be a true witness. Indeed in the most prosperous times there are always particular places which form exceptions. But I have brought away from Illinois the conviction that the church is making progress—not rapid, but decided, solid, healthy.

In some particulars they are doing better than the average Conferences. A larger proportion of the charges than on this side of the river report class meetings regularly maintained. According to the reports of the pastors, family worship is more generally observed.

Particular inquiry was made in most of the districts as to the maintenance of godly discipline, and for the most part with a very satisfactory result. Good progress, all things considered, has been made in the acquisition of real estate. Much was done in this way last year, and several good houses are going up this year. The one at Pana especially is a very substantial brick, spacious and tasteful. The preachers, with perhaps one or two exceptions, are in good heart. The people, so far as my observation extended, are uniformly so.

The finances generally are low. Some of the preachers are well supported, but most of them are on short rations. Some are actually in distress. The charges generally have a membership too limited for good financial results. This is the case especially in the northern part of the Conference. But the membership is increasing, and a little more growth will make them comfortably self-sustaining.

The finances are managed mostly without any special system, each steward generally doing what seemeth good in his own eyes. According to my observation no considerable result is ever attained in a haphazard way. There must be method before any satisfactory condition of finances can be obtained. There was much wise talking done in some of the District Conferences on this subject, but whether anything will come of it remains to be seen.

The year opens auspiciously for the Methodist Episcopal Church South. Three remarkable and significant events have occurred: 1. The church has acquired real estate in the City of Mexico. 2. One man has contributed $500,000 to build and endow a great university of the church. 3. The little town of Lewistown, in Illinois, has donated to the church a handsome school property worth $20,000. "Truly God is good to Israel."

My tour in Illinois has been an occasion of much Christian fellowship, both with the preachers and the people. Our love-feasts especially have been seasons of grace. To me this fellowship of saints grows more and more precious as I grow older.

I cannot conclude without mentioning that at the conference of the Rushville district, held at Detroit, I found two children from the Methodist Orphan Home. Happy are the children that get such homes as these two have. E. M. Marvin.

Death of Daniel Pratt.

Our news dispatches of Wednesday morning, the day we go to press, announce the death of Daniel Pratt. He died at his home in Prattville, near Montgomery, Alabama, on the thirteenth, at four o'clock A. M. Mr. Pratt was a member of the Southern Methodist Church, a generous contributor to its institutions, and a man of exemplary piety. He was a business man of great ability and enterprise, and had done much to develop the industrial interests of his State. A public-spirited and most valuable citizen, and an active Christian, ever devising liberal things for the church, his death will be universally regretted, and his loss deeply and widely felt. He had reached the ripe age of seventy-three, and in the fullness and maturity of a well-spent life he has been gathered to his fathers, "in a full age, like as a shock of corn cometh in in his season."

We regret that a quarterly service out of town prevented us from attending the anniversary of our New Orleans district Sunday schools, which occurred on Sunday afternoon, the eleventh. The reports we have heard are exceedingly flattering. The Carondelet Street church was filled, and the exercises, consisting chiefly of singing and speaking by the children, were very fine. We regret that no report of the Sunday school operations of the district was furnished. The exercises of an anniversary indicate something, but a few brief statements and statistics are desirable.

Rev. L. R. Dennis, presiding elder of the Palestine district, East Texas Conference, died, at his residence in Tylor, on the twenty-sixth of April. Rev. R. S. Finley, writing to the Galveston Christian Advocate, says: "His end was peace."

The Rev. John T. Baskervlle, M. D., of the Memphis Conference, died May 1, at his residence in Fayette county, Tennessee, in his seventy-first year.

Faithful Words.

The Jewish Messenger, in an editorial on the Mission of Israel, exhorts the people to greater fidelity. The paragraphs which we quote will be heard. Says the Messenger:

Let us remember we are living in an age when inquiry as to our religious belief is most general. We stand prominent before non-Israelites; and, when they behold us adhering to the principles of our faith, they are impressed with the truth of revelation. When they behold this remarkable faithfulness in Israel—after centuries of persecution still holding fast to the principles enunciated from Mount Sinai—they become instructed; but when, to the reverse, they observe the Israelite violating the essential principles of what they know to be his religion, independent of the fact that the Jew thus tarnishes his soul with sin, their religion, too, is weakened. Observing him faithless, they will naturally say: "If the custodian of the Bible refrains from acting as the law directs, he cannot be a believer in its truth, and therefore all religion must be a bugbear."

How essential, then, does it become, from every point of view, that we should faithfully adhere to the principles of our religion, although many of the duties may be considered a tax on our time, a load on our shoulders. Why should such considerations influence us to betray our trust? Must all our time be devoted to this world, all our energies be directed to the accumulation of wealth, and no thought directed heavenward, no means employed to secure wealth in the world to come? We call upon all Israelites to arrest the course of indifference which so generally prevails. Let them reflect on their mission; it is: "To learn and to teach, to observe and to do."

How many are there to be found in Israel who will neither learn nor teach; they seldom appear in God's house to pour forth their words in a building localized for prayer and instruction; they rarely instruct their children by their example, that they act as they profess, nor do they impart instruction to others. Let these moribund Israelites reflect on their mission, that they must be aroused from their indifference, and become faithful instructors of the word of God; not by a day of atonement, praise and prayer, but by a life of practical religion. Thus they will become faithful missionaries, securing salvation for their own souls, impressing all within their sphere by their piety and worth, and teaching even non-Israelites that, as Jews, hope has not deserted them. They believe in the God of their fathers, and fortify that belief by observing his commandments, his laws and his testimonies.

To Be Pondered.

The following, from the pen of Dr. Rosser, in the Western Methodist, is to us most seriously suggestive. Close and searching preaching to the church is the directest way to the salvation of sinners. Dr. Rosser says:

April 27, Sunday—Preached twice. Our church in the West and Gulf States has in its membership large numbers who joined as seekers, "desiring to flee the wrath to come, and to be saved from their sins." I am more than ever convinced that we cannot have a great revival, wherever this is the case, till these are converted; and sure am I that the first step we should take in revival efforts is to concentrate the strength of the church on their immediate conversion. With most of them awakening grace has subsided into indifference, if not dead formality. Here is work unfinished in the church; they are pledged to seek conversion, and the church is pledged to help them. Call these, therefore, first to the altar everywhere in time of revival, and their conversion will add incalculably to the spiritual strength and influence of the church, and you may expect consequently greater revivals in the world in any place. Had we begun at this point in Memphis, by this time, from the efforts already made, and the promise that has cheered us on, this city would now be in a light blaze of revival. It is a grave opinion with me that I cannot be instrumental in a great revival wherever this step is not first taken, and carried out to the end, as with the awakened in the world elsewhere.

WE ARE INDEBTED to Mr. S. T. Goodwyn, of the Gulf States Publishing Company, 112 Camp street, New Orleans, for three popular engravings, to wit: The Good Part, Cross and Crown, and Christ Weeping over Jerusalem. These are large and well-finished steel engravings, and while we do not regard the conception and execution as in the highest style of art, the designs are not without considerable merit. The pictures will attract the popular eye, and the moral effect cannot be otherwise than salutary.

The Good Part, or the Two Sisters of Bethany, represents the memorable scene recorded in St. Luke x, 38-42. The conversation between the Savior and the two sisters of Bethany is vividly portrayed in the picture. Martha is represented bearing a tray containing food for the table. Mary sits at Jesus' feet, hearing the words of truth, joy and peace as they proceed from his lips. Christ appears as addressing Martha in the words of the text. In the distance, two miles away, the city of Jerusalem is visible.

Cross and Crown represents, in the words of Rev. Stephen H. Tyng, D. D., "impressively and affectionately" man's acceptance and rejection of the cross of Christ. It is a sermon to the eye, and, as Rev. John Hall, D. D., remarks, "conveys a vivid idea of practical religious truth."

Christ Weeping over Jerusalem represents one of the most touching events in the life of our Savior. The central group of the engraving represents the disciples listening with thoughtful countenances to the words expressed by the Master. The foreground figure presents the noble and venerable figure of Peter, anxiety being depicted in his entire demeanor. Standing immediately above him, with hands uplifted and joined, is John, the beloved disciple, with sweet and placid, yet mournful expression of countenance. Accompanying the same, and making the group complete, is James and other disciples, and our blessed Savior sitting with hands clasped, looking down upon the beautiful city and expressing the sorrowful language of his heart.

The engravings are sold only by subscription. Price, $2 each, sent postpaid by mail. Framed and sent by express at $4.50 each. Gulf States Publishing Company, 112 Camp street, New Orleans, Louisiana.

One Prayer More.

In our little praying circle we have always one person whom we try to pray for, both when we are together and when we are in our closets. God has been very good to us, and heard our prayers for these persons many times; but Henry said to-night: "It seems as if God didn't hear our prayers for Edwin. I'm almost discouraged about him. He appears further from being a Christian than when we commenced. What if we should drop him awhile and pray for another. We can pray for him too, but I feel as though I wanted our especial prayers to be for somebody else."

"Don't be impatient," said John; "God is trying us. He wants to see if we will hold on. Giving up and taking another isn't the way the widow prayed; it isn't the way Jacob prayed, or any that we read of where prayers were answered. What do you think, William? Could we pray more earnestly for somebody else?"

"I think," said William, solemnly, "we had better try one prayer more. Let us pray now."

So we tried once more to pray for Edwin. We prayed for faith to pray more earnestly for him.

As we rose, one said: "God surely heard us then."

"Yes," said another with beaming eyes, "I know he heard, and he will answer in his own good time. We won't give up praying for Edwin yet."

There's nothing that will revive our faith like "one prayer more."

EXISTENCE OF GOD.—Basil called the world a school wherein reasonable souls are taught the knowledge of God. In a musical instrument, when we observe diverse strings meet in harmony we conclude that some skillful musician tuned them. When we see thousands of men in a field, marshaled under several colors, all yielding exact obedience, we infer that there is a general whose commands they are all subject to. In a watch, when we take notice of great and small wheels all so fitted as to concur to an orderly motion, we acknowledge the skill of an artificer. When we come into a printing-house, and see a great number of different letters so ordered as to make a book, the consideration hereof maketh it evident that there is a composer, by whose art they were brought into such a frame. When we behold a fair building, we conclude it had an architect; a stately ship, well-rigged, and safely conducted to the port, that it hath a pilot. So here. The visible world is such an instrument—army, watch, book, building, ship—as undeniably argueth a God, who was and is the framer, general and artificer, the composer, architect and pilot of it.

A GOOD CONFESSION.—Lord, I confess this morning I remembered my breakfast, but forgot my prayers. And as I have returned no praise, so thou mightest justly have afforded me no protection. Yet thou hast carefully kept me to the middle of this day, intrusted me with a new debt before I have paid the old score. It is now noon, too late for a morning, too soon for an evening sacrifice. My corrupt heart prompts me to put off my prayers till night; but I know it too well, or rather too ill, to trust it. I fear if till night I defer them, at night I shall forget them. Be pleased, therefore, now to accept them. Lord, let not a few hours the later make a breach; especially seeing (be it spoken not to excuse my negligence, but to implore thy pardon) a thousand years in thy sight are but as yesterday. I promise hereafter, by thy assistance, to bring forth fruit in due season. See how I am ashamed the sun should shine on me, who now newly start in the face of my devotions, when he, like a giant, hath run more than half his course in the heavens.

DEFINITIONS OF CONSCIENCE.—There is a principle of reflection by which they distinguish between, approve and disapprove, their own actions. We are plainly constituted such sort of creatures as to reflect upon our own nature. The mind can take a view of what passes within itself, its propensions, aversions, passions, affections, as respecting such objects and in such degrees; and of several actions consequent thereupon. In this survey it approves of one and disapproves of another, and toward another it is affected in neither of these ways, but it is quite indifferent. This principle in man, by which he approves or disapproves his heart, temper and actions, is called conscience; and this is the strict sense of the word, though sometimes it is used to take in more.—Bishop Butler.

HE WHO rejoices in God shall never be confounded or ashamed, world without end. It is an abiding joy. If I rejoice in the sun, it sets; if in the earth, it shall be burnt up; if in myself, I shall die; but to triumph in One who never fails and never changes, but lasts forever—this is a lasting joy.—Spurgeon.

REV. J. T. DAVIS, presiding elder of Delhi district, Louisiana Conference, in a private note makes this incidental mention of the work:

I have held the second quarterly meeting of the second round. The outlook is encouraging. Left an interesting meeting in progress at Monroe this week. Bro. Cobb, and, in fact, nearly all my preachers, are doing well. The largest crowd perhaps that has ever been assembled in our church met on Sunday night. Brethren thought that no such congregation of citizens were assembled any time during the Annual Conference.

A MAN who was unexpectedly called upon to address a Sunday school, after several desperate but vain attempts to say something appropriate, hoarsely muttered: "Dear children, never fool with powder." Very sound advice.

HOME INDUSTRY.—The New Orleans Times says: We take pleasure in translating from the original French, in the Bee, the following communication, knowing, as we do, from a personal acquaintance with the worthy citizen whose name is thus brought prominently forward, how well his energy, enterprise, perseverance and skill merit the compliments paid him by his zealous friend in the Bee—compliments that are endorsed by the handsome and costly display distinguish the object of the eulogium.

(Communicated.)

"To develop our city's resources by increasing its industrial pursuits is to insure its strength and its prosperity.

"Mr. Bermel, at No. 121 Canal street, has done his full share in putting this axiom into practical execution. His house's exquisite taste in the selections of articles of vertu was already well known; and his magnificent exhibition of art bronzes at the late State Fair was justly awarded the silver medal. But what there attracted general and undivided attention and admiration was his Hair Factory, which won for him the gold medal. Beyond a doubt, no other establishment can be compared to his, and he has surpassed in this exhibition all that has been shown to the same line in the United States.

"Mr. Bermel is an active and intelligent business man; it may truthfully be said of him that he is a self-made man. Coming to New Orleans when quite young, he has risen to his present prominent position by the most assiduous industry. Kind-hearted and sincere in all his intercourse, his many employes are all attached to him by warmer ties than those of mere interest. At present he is unceasing in his efforts to place his factory on a successful basis. It is but eighteen months since he established it, and he now gives steady work, at No. 121 Canal street, to fifty persons, employes and work-hands, not including a number of others who work at their own homes.

"What a pretty sight his elegant Hair Factory presented at the Fair! He had transferred it there in its entirety. Though rapidly put together, under his personal supervision, and in a limited space, it was complete throughout. The forty young girls who, under the control of a skillful foreman, were busy, day after day, in all the various details and elegancies of their art, and who, though for the most part of tender age, assist already by their liberal earnings in supporting their families, presented to the observant spectator a tableau as interesting as it was morally encouraging.

"May the public appreciate the merit of this enterprise, and by their patronage give it assured strength. Others will be stimulated thereby. May the example given by Mr. Bermel be followed by a host of others; so that, in all branches of industry, we may no longer be compelled to rely on importation to add to our city's prosperity and fame.

"We tender our best thanks to Mr. Bermel, and in this we but follow the example of observing and sensible citizens, who understand and admire the spirit of progress. We will be joined by them in wishing him abundant results from his enterprise.

"To desire that his efforts may be crowned with ample success is to wish also that our working population may, following his example, learn to draw from intelligent industry a permanent competency."

The Child's Corner.

OUT IN THE SNOW.

BY S. M. WALSH.

Morris dogs to dun the dreary gray clouds
Darken the festive fly snow,
Trimming with dew a the stiff green hedge,
And the frozen ground below.

The evergreens catch on their bristling arms
The snow flakes soft and pure,
And little brown birds come fluttering down,
Like leaves around the door.

But hark to the laughter and joyous shout
That ring through the falling snow,
As troops of merry-eyed boys and girls
Go skipping to and fro.

How eager the fingers that gather up
The treasures from the sky!
No matter how stiff and cold they grow—
The snow-balls merrily fly.

And the very sleds, as they skim along,
Seem to feel the rampant glee
That brightens the eyes of my tiniest boy
As he bounds away from me.

But I put down the ear-laps, soft and warm,
And button the little coat,
Press into their mittens the restless hands,
And muffle the fair white throat.

And out goes my baby—a baby no more,
But a "great big boy" is he,
And the little red mittens scoop up the snow
And toss it back to me.

And I think the snow not a whit more fair
Than the brow on which it falls,
Or the tiny hands that gather it up
And shape it into balls.

Oh, the dancing eyes! may they ever flash
With as clear a light as now!
And the eager hands—the treasures they grasp
Be ever as pure as snow!

Christian Union.

Kant and the Robbers.

John Kant was professor and doctor of divinity at Cracow. He was a pious man, with a spirit peculiarly gentle and guileless, and he at all times would have preferred to suffer injustice rather than exercise it. For many years he had conscientiously followed his duties as spiritual teacher of the place to which he had been appointed by God. His head was covered with the snows of age when he was seized with an ardent desire to revisit the scenes of his youth in his native country, Silesia. The journey appeared fraught with peril to one at his advanced age; but he set his affairs in order, and started on his way, commending himself to the care of God. He rode slowly along, attired in his black robe, with long beard and hair, according to the fashion of the time. Then he pursued his way through the gloomy woods of Poland, which scarcely a sunbeam could pierce; but there was a light in his soul, for God's Spirit irradiated it.

One evening, as he was thus journeying along, holding communion with God, and taking no heed of objects beside him, on reaching an opening in the thick forest, a tramping noise was suddenly heard, and he was instantly surrounded by figures, some on horseback and some on foot. Knives and swords glittered in the moonlight, and the pious man saw that he was at the mercy of a band of robbers. Scarcely conscious of what passed, he alighted from his horse and offered his property to the gang. He gave them a purse filled with silver coins, unclasped the chain from his neck, took the gold lace from his cap, drew a ring from his finger, and took from his pocket his book of prayer, which was clasped with silver. Not till he had yielded all he possessed, and seen his horse led away, did Kant intercede for his life.

"Have you given us all?" cried the robber chief threateningly. "Have you no more money?"

In his alarm and terror the trembling doctor answered that he had given them every coin in his possession, and, on receiving this assurance, he was allowed to proceed on his journey.

Quickly he hastened onward, rejoicing at his escape, when suddenly his hand felt something hard in the hem of his robe. It was his gold, which, having been stitched within the lining of his dress, had thus escaped discovery. The good man, in his alarm, had forgotten the secret store. His heart, therefore, again beat with joy, for the money would bear him home to his friends and kindred; and he saw rest and shelter in prospect, instead of a long and painful wandering, with the necessity of begging his way. But his conscience was a peculiarly tender one, and he suddenly stopped to listen to its voice. It cried in disturbed tones: "Tell not a lie! tell not a lie!" These words burned in his heart. Joy, kindred, home, all were forgotten. Some writers on moral philosophy have held that promises made under such circumstances are not binding, and few men certainly would have been troubled with such scruples on the occasion. But Kant did not stop to reason. He hastily retraced his steps, and entering into the midst of the robbers, who were still in the same place, said meekly:

"I have told you what is not true; but it was unintentional—fear and anxiety confused me; therefore pardon me."

With these words he held forth the glittering gold; but, to his surprise, not one of the robbers would take it! A strange feeling was at work in their hearts. They could not laugh at the pious man. "Thou shalt not steal," said a voice within them. All were deeply moved. Then, as if seized by a sudden impulse, one went and brought back his purse, another restored the book of prayer, while still another led his horse toward him, and helped him to remount it. Then they unitedly entreated his blessing; and, solemnly giving it, the good old man continued his way, lifting up his heart in gratitude to God, who brought him in safety to the end of his journey.—Angel of Peace.

How to Get the Best Places.

There are in society a great many good places, but the best places are few, and not easily reached. Who shall have the best places? Let any boy look about his school-room and ask which of these boys are to have the best places, and he will find it hard to decide. In all the schools there are many thousands of boys, and some of them will get the best places. Who are they? That is the question.

I wish to speak to the boys of one trait which often decides which of two boys, who want the same place, gets it. I refer to accuracy in scholarship and practice. I do not refer to absolute accuracy, which belongs to the all-knowing Mind, but to that habit which strives to think the thought and do the act as nearly accurate as possible. Some boys use the word "about" too often. "The area of a certain field is about so much," or a certain city is "about on such a line of latitude," or "the sum of certain quantities is about so much," or a certain sentence in a translation or composition is "about thus and so." If they spell a word, or solve a problem, or keep an engagement, that pestilent little word pushes itself into notice. The second class of boys cultivate the habit of accuracy. They try to "hit the nail on the head," and do it every time. If they add up a column or multiply or spell, or make a promise, they aim to do the thing precisely right.

Let two boys of these two kinds apply for a position as book-keeper or superintendent's clerk, or any other office of trust. The one is about right, the other is right; the one does his work about right, the other does his right; the one may be about accurate in his business, the other is accurate. The accurate boy, other things being equal, will surely get the place, while the other one will about not get it.

I saw a young man in the office of a Western railway superintendent. He was occupying a position that four hundred boys in that city would have wished to get. It was honorable and "it paid well," besides being in the line of promotion. How did he get it? Not by having a rich father, for he was the son of a laborer. The secret was his beautiful accuracy. He began as an errand-boy and did his work accurately. His leisure time he used in perfecting his writing and arithmetic. After awhile he learned to telegraph. At each step his employer commended his accuracy, and relied on what he did, because he was sure it was just right.

And it is thus with every occupation—the accurate boy is the favored one. Those who employ men do not wish to be on the constant lookout, as though they were rogues or fools. If a carpenter must stand at his journeyman's elbow to be sure his work is right, or if a cashier must run over his book-keeper's columns, he might as well do the work himself as employ another to do it in that way; and it is very certain that the employer will get rid of such an inaccurate workman as soon as possible.

I knew such a young man. He had a good chance to do well; but he was so inaccurate and unreliable that people were afraid to trust him. If he wrote a deed or a mortgage or a contract he was sure either to leave out something or put in something to make it an imperfect paper. He was a lawyer without business, because he lacked the noble quality of accuracy. Just across the street from him was another young lawyer, who was proverbial for accuracy. He was famous for searching titles; and when he wrote out the history of a title to a piece of property it was taken for granted as just so. His aim was absolute accuracy in everything. If he copied a conveyance, or cited a legal authority, or made a statement, he aimed to do it exactly. The consequence is, he is having a valuable practice at the bar and is universally esteemed.

"But," says some boy, "when I become a man that is the way I shall do. I mean to be very accurate." Perhaps so. I could tell better if I knew just how you do your work now. There are several ways of getting a lesson. One is to get it "tolerably well," which does not cost much labor. The other way is to get it faultlessly well, which costs a great deal of labor. A boy can get a general idea of his lesson "in a jiffy," but to get it with accuracy is very hard, and requires both time and industry. If you, my boy, to-day are getting your lesson in the slip-shod way, you will grow up a slip-shod man; but if to-day your habit is to get every lesson with perfect accuracy, I will warrant you will do that way when you become a man. How is it?—Little Chief.

Who Took Him on the Other Side?

"Who took him on the other side?"

A pair of soft blue eyes, full of tenderness and tears, looked up into mine. Sorrow lay on the lips that questioned me.

"On the other side! What do you mean, my darling?" And I looked wonderingly at the child.

"Baby, I mean." The little one's voice trembled. "He was so small and weak, and had to go all alone. Who took him on the other side?"

"Angels," I answered, as steadily as I could speak, for the child's question moved me deeply; "loving angels, who took him up tenderly, and laid his head softly on their bosoms, and sang to him sweeter songs than he had ever heard in this world."

"But every one will be strange to him. I'm afraid he'll be grieving for mother and nurse and me."

"No, dear. The Savior, who was once a baby in this world, is there; and the angels who are nearest to him take all the little children who leave our side, and love and care for them just as if they were their own. When baby passed through to the other side one of these angels held him by the hand all the way, and he was not in the least afraid; and when the light of heaven broke upon his eyes, and he saw the beauty of the new world into which he had entered, his little heart was full of gladness."

"You are sure of that?" The grief had almost faded out of the child's countenance.

"Yes, dear, very sure. The Lord who so tenderly loves little children—who took them in his arms and blessed them when he was on earth—who said that their angels 'do always behold the face of my Father,' is more careful of the babes who go to him than the tenderest mother could possibly be."

"I am so glad," said the child. "And it makes me feel so much better. Dear baby! I didn't know who would take him on the other side."—Children's Hour.

Labor-Saving Invention for Honey-Bees.

Most labor-saving inventions have for their object the direct benefit of the human race. Some indirectly benefit animals; for instance, the introduction of steam on street railways would greatly benefit horses. Improvements in machines impelled by animals benefit them sometimes by enabling them to do a given amount of work with less fatigue. Mr. Joseph Williams, of Bean's Station, Tennessee, has invented a labor-saving device for honey-bees, which is intended to directly reduce the labors of these industrious insects, or rather to give them opportunity to render their labors more profitable.

The gathering of honey seems to be rather a pleasant occupation, not merely because it is a product delicious to the taste, but because it is found in the throats of fragrant flowers, beautiful to sight as well as agreeable to smell. We have often thought, when exhausted by long toil at the editorial desk, we should like to exchange our occupation for that of the honey-bee. But the honey-bee's labor is not altogether the collection of honey—he has some drudgery, as well as an editor. Before he can store up his food he has to provide for it a great many little cells of wax, over which he doubtless sometimes pauses to wipe the sweat from his honest brow, and wearily sighs for their completion.

To remove this labor is the object of Mr. William's invention. He makes an artificial comb from fine, clean wax, which, placed in a hive, will be used by the bees, not only saving them the labor of constructing combs, but enabling them to spend more time in gathering honey; and thus to reward the artificial comb-builder by a larger surplus of honey than he could otherwise obtain.—American Artisan.

COAL-ASHES IN POULTRY-HOUSES.—The following is from the Poultry World: "Dry earth is unquestionably the best thing in the world for the dusting-bin. It may be procured with very little trouble during a dry spell in summer. But if not attended to at the proper season, or if the supply gives out, then coal-ashes are a very good substitute. One great merit which they possess is that, as taken from the stove or furnace, they are so very dry. The dust-bin in the fowl-house should be so arranged as not to gather dampness from the ground, for the drier its contents can be kept the better. Coal-ashes should be furnished in a separate box, in case the dust-bin is filled with dry earth, for the ashes contain bits of burnt slate and other earthy matter greedily devoured by fowls in winter, and which serve to promote appetite and digestion, and contain materials for the formation of egg-shells. Wood-ashes have been recommended for fowls to roll in, as it is said the potash they contain is noxious to vermin. No doubt but it is too caustic for the feet and skin of the fowls, and in wet weather forms a biting lye. Hens will not wallow in wood-ashes when dry earth is accessible, and they ought to have something to say in the matter."

IT IS a remarkable fact that the early history of many of our cultivated plants is involved in mystery. Many of them are not found wild anywhere, and it is clear that one or the other of two propositions must be true—that either the wild plants have all died out, or that what we have are "improvements" (evolutions is the modern phrase) from some wild kinds which have been left so far behind in the "race of progress" that no one can tell clearly from which or from what they sprung. The history of the orange is one of these mysteries. China is believed to be the early cradle of the orange family. It is believed to have gradually spread from southern Asia through Persia to Arabia, and by the Arabs introduced into those parts of Europe where it has now found a welcome home. At a recent meeting of the Berlin Geographical Society Dr. Sangerback read a paper on orange history. The Citrus Medica, still found wild in some parts of India, is the original stock from which the improved orange sprang. The orange is one of the most profitable products of Sicily. The fruit does not thrive well in Europe beyond latitude forty-one degrees.

CANNING CORN.—Shave the corn from the cob, fill the cans as full as you can with corn, then pour in cold water until even full, make a small hole in the cover and solder on the cover, place the cans in a boiler with cold water about half the height of the can, place the boiler on the stove, let them boil four hours, then remove them from the boiler, and drop a little solder on the hole in the cover. I canned mine this way last year, and they were as white and tender as when picked.

AMMONIA FOR VERBENAS.—The sulphate of ammonia is an excellent manurial liquid to apply to verbenas or any other flower, giving to the foliage a dark green luxuriant and healthy appearance. It is economical, clean and easily applied. Prepare it, in the evening before using, by dissolving one ounce of ammonia in two gallons of water. It may be applied once a week with safety.

TO FASTEN shells on picture-frames take an inch board and make a rough frame of any shape you like and cover with good white-lead putty, and then commence with your largest shells and place the putty about as thick as will about half bury the shells; then fill in with small ones according to taste; let them dry and then varnish, and the frame will be as solid as if made of stone.

WISTARIA VERSUS FLIES.—The wistaria creeping-plant will keep out house-flies. The pestiferous insects will not enter a window where one of them is growing.

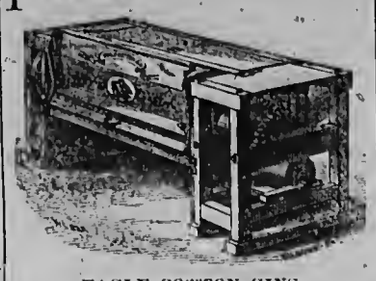
THE DUBOIS FLANGE COTTON GIN.

By the Flange the Cotton is kept in contact with the teeth on each side, until the fiber is taken from the seed, without allowing them to be taken up by the return motion of the roll, as in other Gins.



The Flange prevents hulls, stems, sticks and hard substances from being cut, consequently making a better sample out of roughly-picked cotton than other Gins.

We have sold more from this point than any agency of any other Gin for the crop of 1872-73; consequently we can furnish more and better references, and they are warranted to come up to all that is said of them.

We keep constantly on hand all sizes, from 40 to 80 SAW STANDS, left or right. Price, $5 per Saw.

IMPROVED

EAGLE COTTON GINS.

The great popularity of the EAGLE COTTON GINS is established from the well-known fact that they are the most reliable, strongest and best built Cotton Gins ever made. The Eagle Cotton Gin runs lighter than any other gin, thus having a great advantage for planters who wish to run by horse power. All the numerous planters who use the Eagle Cotton Gin will certify to the fact that when their cotton is sent to market it always brings the highest market price, as no other gin can produce a finer or a better sample of cotton than the Eagle Cotton Gins. Over seventeen thousand of the Eagle Cotton Gins have been made and sold. During a period of twenty years the undersigned has had the agency of the Eagle Cotton Gin in New Orleans. He has never had a gin returned or rejected out of the immense number sold. The saw cylinders of all the Eagle Cotton Gins are twelve inches in diameter, which is two inches larger than most other kinds of gins, thus giving our forty-saw gin more teeth, and they are more than equal to the fifty-saw gins of other makers, who use only a ten-inch cylinder, and the same great advantage of the twelve-inch cylinder in larger-sized gins can be easily estimated. Planters who wish a reliable cotton gin, with an established reputation, can purchase an Eagle Cotton Gin with a certainty that they are not making an untried experiment, but will obtain a cotton gin which is indorsed by the oldest and largest planters in the country as the best in use. A large stock of the Eagle Cotton Gins are always kept on sale in New Orleans, ready for immediate shipment. Planters should be particular to state if they want right or left-hand motion gins.

What the Doctors Say.
Amos Woolly, M. D., of Kosciusko county, Indiana, says: "For three years past I have used Allen's Lung Balsam extensively in my practice, and I am satisfied there is no better medicine for lung diseases in use."
Isaac A. Logan, M. D., of Logan county, Ohio, says: "Allen's Lung Balsam not only sells rapidly, but gives perfect satisfaction in every case within my knowledge. Having confidence in it, and knowing that it possesses valuable medicinal properties, I freely use it in my daily practice, and with unbounded success. As an expectorant it is most certainly far ahead of any preparation I have ever yet known."
Physicians do not recommend a medicine which has no merit. What they say about Allen's Lung Balsam can be taken as a fact. Let all afflicted test it at once, and be convinced of its real merits.
It is harmless to the most delicate child. It contains no opium in any form.

New Orleans Markets.

From the New Orleans Price Current.

The weather was clear and pleasant until Tuesday, when it was cloudy, dark and rainy.

The river is 3 feet below high-water mark.

The receipts of cotton at this port since the commencement of the season, and for the week ending with the ninth instant:

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Louisiana and Mississippi | bales... | 7,470 |
| Lake | | 181 |
| Arkansas | | 1,393 |
| Mobile | | 1,620 |
| Texas | | 255 |
| Total | | 10,129 |

On Saturday, the supply of saleable cottons having been materially reduced by the liberal movement of the day previous, the market exhibited less activity, but there was, nevertheless, a fair demand, and 4,850 bales changed hands at irregular prices, a part of the business being at previous rates, but the rest showing an advance of ⅛c., and in some instances ¼c., the closing rates showing a pretty general improvement of ⅛c. Strict good ordinary and the better qualities were in special request and commanded very full prices. The supply of low middling in particular was extremely limited. Low ordinary sold at 11¾c., strict good ordinary at 12⅝c., strict good ordinary to low middling at 13⅝@13¾c., strict low middling at 15¼c., and good style middling at 15⅞c. On Monday prices ruled still more in favor of factors, showing a further improvement in the medium and better grades of about ⅛c., but the sales were confined to 2,050 bales. Ordinary sold at 11@11⅝c., according to dust, strict ordinary at 12⅝@13c., strict ordinary to good ordinary at 14⅛c., good ordinary at 15c., good ordinary to strict good ordinary at 15⅞c., low middling at 16⅞@17c., the latter for high style, and strict middling to good middling at 18¼c. On Tuesday operations were restricted by dark and rainy weather, and the sales were confined to 2,300 bales. Nothing transpired to indicate any change in prices. Factors adhered to their previous pretensions, and most of the business was at Monday's figures, the principal exceptions being in low cottons, on which buyers obtained some concessions.

The above makes an aggregate for the past three days of 8,700 bales, against 9,650 for the corresponding time last week and 15,450 the week before.

The receipts proper at this port since the first of September, exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas, are 1,150,663 bales, against 933,-841 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 183,466 bales. In the exports from the United States, to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 201,814 to Great Britain, of 62,355 to France, and of 118,820 to other foreign ports. We quote:

|---|---|
| Inferior | 8½ @ 9½ |
| Low ordinary | 10⅝ @ 11⅝ |
| Ordinary | 12⅝ @ 13⅝ |
| Good ordinary | 15⅛ @ 15⅝ |
| Low middling | 16⅞ @ 17⅜ |
| Middling | 18⅛ @ 18¾ |
| Strict middling | 18⅞ @ 19 |
| Good middling | — @ 19¼ |

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

SAN FRANCISCO, May 14.—Dispatches from the lava beds represent great activity, but so far without results. The soldiers are harassed by rattlesnakes and scorpions, upon which Captain Jack and his braves feed.

Firing is heard in the direction of Colonel Mason's scouts, but the result is unknown.

BOSTON, May 15.—The Episcopal convention, on the first ballot, failed to elect. A second ballot was similar in result, and the convention adjourned.

The convention, upon reassembling, elected Benjamin H. Paddock, of Brooklyn, Bishop.

BALTIMORE, May 15.—The eighty-fifth annual General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church convened to-day. The church was crowded. The preliminary ceremonies were very impressive. Three hundred and seventy-nine delegates were present.

Rev. Howard Crosby was elected moderator. Assembly adjourned.

NEW YORK, May 17.—A Herald special says: "A letter was received here to-day from Sir Samuel Baker, on the White Nile. He reports that all is well; that the passage through to the end was effected with great difficulty, and that he hopes that the obstructions will be entirely removed during the present summer."

BALTIMORE, May 17.—The General Assembly, which reassembled this evening, received Dr. Baird, the representative from the Presbyterian Church, standing.

Dr. Baird said he hoped the day would come when there would be but one Presbyterian Church. He tendered a committee to heal the differences. The committee suggested by him was appointed by the conference.

Dr. Baird, who is one of the committee on publication, then read the secretary's annual report. It is printed and is very voluminous. It refers to the publication of the works of the church, and contains a long dissertation in relation to the benevolent institution for printing religious tracts and books, located at Richmond, Virginia, under the management of the Presbyterian Committee of Publication. Columbus, Mississippi, was selected as the next place of meeting. The Assembly then adjourned.

WASHINGTON, May 19.—George Williamson, of Shreveport, Louisiana, was to-day appointed minister resident to the Central American States, in conformity with the act of Congress of May 22, 1872, which provides that "from and after the thirtieth of June, of this year, there shall be but one minister resident accredited to those places, to reside at some place therein to be selected by the President."

BALTIMORE, May 19.—The Presbyterian General Assembly met at nine o'clock. The special order—the report of the Centennial Committee as to whether the Presbyterian Church of the United States should take part in celebrating the centennial anniversary of American independence at Philadelphia—was taken up.

The Centennial Committee was continued and a further committee of five, to be appointed by the moderator to co-operate with the Centennial Committee, was authorized: Drs. Herrick, Johnson, Backus and Ebenezer Erskine, and Elders J. Charlton Henry and Robert Carter were named as such committee. Dr. Backus being, at his own request, excused from serving, the Assembly appointed its moderator chairman of the committee.

MARSHALL, TEXAS, May 19.—Heavy rains from Friday until Sunday noon along the upper Red river, extending as far east as Shreveport. The river had risen twenty-five feet at Red River City up to this morning, and was still rising rapidly.

Clarksville reports a thirty-feet rise in Red river, and all its tributaries overflowed.

Several bridges have been washed away on the Marshall and Sherman stage route.

The Texas and Pacific road commenced track-laying from Jefferson toward Marshall to-morrow.

On the southern division the track is being laid at the rate of two miles a day. They expect to have the line completed to Dallas on or before the first of July.

WASHINGTON, May 20.—A special from Austin, Texas, says that the grasshoppers in that section are devastating vegetation. They are moving northward and threaten Missouri, Illinois, Kansas and Nebraska.

BALTIMORE, May 20.—The Presbyterian Assembly convenes at the First Presbyterian church, St. Louis, next year.

FOREIGN.

ST. PETERSBURG, May 14.—Dispatches from Kasalink bring the intelligence that detachments and reconnoitering parties from the Russian expeditionary columns report the Khivers are throwing up entrenchments at Klytzh and Dunkara. They are also sending out a vanguard to meet the Russians at Minbulakn.

There has been an engagement at Igda between the Russians and a force of Tarcomans, in which the latter were defeated. Twenty-two of the Tarcomans were killed, and one thousand of their camels were captured by the Russians.

MADRID, May 14.—The voting throughout Spain, on Saturday and Sunday last, for deputies to the Constituent Cortes, resulted in the election of three hundred and ten ministerial Federalists, thirty extreme Radicals, eight Internationalists, ten independent Republicans and thirty Monarchists.

NEW GLASGOW, N. S., May 14.—The fire at the Drummond colliery continues to burn briskly, but is slowly abating. Men who have escaped with great difficulty from the slope report that on their way up they passed the bodies of their comrades, who had probably become stupefied by the smoke. The number of victims will probably reach seventy-five.

PARIS, May 15.—It is rumored that the Legitimists and Orleanists have combined to overthrow Thiers, and will ask Chambord to authorize the Legitimists to nominate D'Aumale in place of Thiers.

VIENNA, May 15.—The Turkish provinces of Bozaria are flooded. A number of persons have been drowned, and the destruction of crops and property is heavy.

HALIFAX, May 15.—The fire and explosions in the Drummond mine continue. Four men who attempted to descend, in hopes of rescuing those below, were blown to atoms by another explosion; one was driven into the air a hundred feet and landed in the adjoining woods.

Forty-five of the lost were married men.

The manager, Mr. Dunn, lost his life by descending after the first explosion.

ODESSA, RUSSIA, May 15.—The Vienna panic has extended to the bourse here. Business is stopped. Discounts nine per cent.

LONDON, May 16.—A dispatch from Vienna says two hundred additional failures were announced on the bourse yesterday. No important bank has yet suspended. The protracted panic has created consternation in all branches of business.

The son of a wealthy banker committed suicide yesterday.

The managers of Cunard steamers have determined to adopt a "lone" line across the Atlantic, to avoid collisions.

BERLIN, May 16.—The German government has resolved to expel the Redemptorists, Lazarists, Congregations of the Holy Ghost and Sacred Heart, and the occupants of close convents, from the country within the coming six months.

ROME, May 17.—The Chamber of Deputies to-day approved the first clause of the bill suppressing religious bodies in Rome, by a vote of 385 against 13. Fifteen deputies were absent from the chamber when the vote was taken.

The second clause, with an amendment offered by Signor Ricasoli granting the Pope four hundred thousand liards annually for the maintenance of generals of orders, was adopted by a vote of 221 against 193.

HAVANA, May 17.—The vomito is increasing.

PERPIGNAN, May 18.—A Carlist paper announces that Don Carlos entered Navarre on the fourteenth instant, and took command of fifteen thousand men, who were resolved to conquer or die.

LONDON, May 19.—A telegram to the London Times, from St. Petersburg, states that the Russians reached the Khivan territory without a serious encounter.

There is talk in St. Petersburg now of the annexation of Bajhard and Khakord as well as Khiva.

The Russian press represents Turkey as tottering with misgovernment, and predicts that the time is coming when her troubles will culminate, and Russia will then be able to vindicate her interests.

ST. PETERSBURG, May 20.—The Shah of Persia is at Moscow. An immense concourse enthusiastically welcomed him. The statement that three of his wives accompany him is untrue.

The Copeland Clan.

MR. EDITOR: This was the designation of an organized band of murderers, robbers and counterfeiters which, a few years ago, extended from the Alabama to Pearl river, and committed a series of the most fearful crimes. An intensely interesting pamphlet, from the pen of Dr. Pitts, of Waynesboro, Mississippi, appeared soon after, giving an account of the clan, its origin and its crimes, which was extensively circulated, but is now out of print. The author, we understand, has been called on for a new edition, and will shortly issue it in a more imposing form, giving a more detailed account of the operations of the clan, an enlarged list of the names of those concerned, and more full and accurate details of the awful tragedy that ended its career. Dr. Pitts is a strong writer, thoroughly acquainted with his subject and its various ramifications, and his work will be looked for with much interest.

THE TIPSY GOAT.—People sometimes speak of a man being "drunk as a beast," but we rarely hear of a drunken beast, and who ever heard of a beast which got drunk a second time?

There is a story of a Welshman who was for some time fearfully intemperate, but was at length restored to sobriety by the following singular incident:

He had a tame goat which would follow him to the ale-house he frequented. One day, by way of frolic, he gave the animal so much ale that it became intoxicated. What particularly struck the Welshman was that from that time, though the creature would follow him to the door, he could never afterward get it to enter the house.

He was thereby led to see how much his sin had sunk him beneath a beast, and from that period became a sober man.

From the Work.

PRATTVILLE, ALABAMA CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: We have just closed a series of meetings in this place, continuing over three weeks, resulting in twenty-eight accessions to our church and about the same number of conversions. Among the accessions are several heads of families, who at once erected the family altar. There is quite a religious interest in the community, principally in the Sunday schools, in which our sister churches are sharing. Dr. Mitchell, our presiding elder, has labored with us a week, entering into the battle with youthful ardor. To God, who hath heard our prayers, be endless praises. E. S. SMITH.

NEW IBERIA, LOUISIANA.—Mr. Editor: I have been purposing for more than a week to write you the intelligence, which I know will be gratifying to your heart, that we have had a season of "refreshing from the presence of the Lord," for which "my soul doth magnify the Lord." In the use of the ordinary means of grace, but put forth with confidence, we have been in a gradual revival influence, having penitents at the altar and conversions and additions to the church from time to time for six weeks, until our meeting culminated in a definite, heaven-sent revival. Services continued every evening for a week. Several brethren came to my help during the week's services, rendering valuable and highly appreciated service. Some twenty souls entered into covenant relationship with God as church-members, while we rejoice at several clear cases of spiritual regeneration. The church is greatly edified and built up. There are several other applications for church-membership.

"Praise God, from whom all blessings flow!"

I have just returned from the district meeting at Franklin, where we had a delightful time with the brethren, notwithstanding the intense agitation in our fair country at the time. "Behold, how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity!" Quite a revival—conversions and accessions there.

Yours in the gospel of Jesus,

T. B. WHITE.

PARSONAGE, NEW IBERIA, May 13, 1873.

OPELOUSAS DISTRICT CONFERENCE. Mr. Editor: This conference held its session at Franklin, Louisiana, May 8 to 11 inclusive. Notwithstanding the untoward political excitement with which we were surrounded, still the conference was well attended by the brethren in the ministry, and was in all respects a complete success.

The various interests of the church within the bounds of the district were thoroughly considered and ably discussed. The result of these considerations, we are happy to say, indicates a faithful and earnest ministry, and promises abundant success.

The following resolutions were adopted with regard to these various interests:

EDUCATION.

WHEREAS, The importance of education to the interests of the church in the bounds of this district is patent to all; therefore,

Resolved, By the District Conference of the Opelousas district, Louisiana Conference, Methodist Episcopal Church South, that we do all we can to establish and maintain schools in every society, if possible, under the patronage and control of our own church.

Resolved, That we do all in our power to induce those of suitable age and preparation to enter our colleges with a view to graduation. We cordially recommend Centenary College, Mansfield Female College and Homer College as worthy the confidence and patronage of all our people.

Resolved, That the presiding elder be and is hereby requested to present the subject of education to every Quarterly Conference in the district, and urge the establishment of schools in every society.

On the subject of camp meetings the following resolutions were adopted:

Resolved, That we have a camp meeting, together with the District Conference of this district, next year.

Resolved, That a committee of seven be appointed to ascertain the most suitable location for a permanent camp ground, and the terms upon which grounds can be purchased, and report the same to the next District Conference for their action.

MEMORIAL TO ANNUAL CONFERENCE.

Resolved, That this District Conference memorialize the Annual Conference to change the mode of representation in the District Conference.

The following-named gentlemen were elected lay delegates to attend the next Annual Conference: Thomas H. Lewis, J. D. Saint, David Riggs, Joseph Knight. Alternates—Wm. Lieser, T. M. Johnson, Claudius Mayo, W. M. Richardson.

A meeting is still being protracted here, and its effect is bright and encouraging to all, foreshadowing a result of abundant good.

A. C. ALLEN, Sec.

THE new Methodist Episcopal Church South at Durant, Mississippi, will be dedicated June 29. The Rev. C. K. Marshall will (D. V.) preach the dedicatory sermon. The Yazoo District Conference will convene at Durant, June 26.

GEO. W. BROWN, Pastor.

WHEN the hour of death drew near, the late Bishop McIlvaine asked his friend, Dr. Carus, to offer prayer. When asked if he desired the form of the prayer-book to be used, he replied: "No, make the prayer yourself."

Letter from Bishop Pierce.

MR. EDITOR: Since I wrote you last I have made quite a circuit. The labors of the year began with the Louisiana Conference, in New Orleans, on the eighth of January. We had a short and pleasant session. Bishop Keener was with me. Then and there the Mexican mission was inaugurated, with a missionary collection and the strong indorsement of the Conference and the church. Our people are expected to respond favorably, not merely by verbal approval, but by large contributions. This enterprise ought to stimulate our missionary zeal. It is our field—near to us. The door is open. Providence has furnished a native preacher to begin with. Others are in training. Say not: "There are yet four months and then cometh harvest!" Let the church lift up her eyes and see; all things are ready. I expect to hold Conference in Mexico, perhaps in the halls of the Montezumas.

After my return to Georgia, the extremely cold weather and the abundance of rain shut me in more than usual. A few short trips to the neighboring towns, and two or three sermons a week, made up my labors for a month. The home fireside was enjoyed thankfully.

It was my purpose to be present at the Baltimore Conference for a time, but the sickness of Bishop Paine made it necessary for me to hold it for him. I was glad to serve the brethren and oblige the Bishop. Bishop Doggett was present also, and added greatly by his presence and labors to the interest of the occasion. The session was more than pleasant. It was delightful, socially and religiously. The great Head of the church was near unto us. It was my privilege to dedicate the Bond Street church, on the Sunday before Conference, and thus I was in the city altogether about two weeks. From all I saw and heard I am hopeful of the future in Baltimore. In the territory of the Conference the church has more than doubled its membership in seven years. All this under many discouragements, hinderances and disabilities. The vital force is strong and enduring, and, now relieved of the pressure under which it has struggled, I look for increasing prosperity. The reports to me since Conference are very cheering. The Lord grant a large ingathering, as well as an effective organization in every department of labor.

I left a day and night before the Conference adjourned. The business of the session was all done up, save the report of the committee on the Hudson case and the reading of the appointments. Sad tidings from home, as well as other engagements at hand, made it necessary for me to leave. Bishop Doggett kindly consented to remain and wind up for me.

A day or two at home and I went to Augusta to attend the General Conference of the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church in America. Eleven years of my ministerial life, as station preacher and presiding elder, were spent in and around Augusta, and I love to go there still. It is a dear old place to me. This visit was fortunate as to time and attending circumstances. A very glorious work was in progress in Bro. Evans' charge (St. James,) and I was allowed to help him without stint. My old friend Evans and myself have been yoke-fellows a long time, and it was a pleasure to relieve him and rejoice with him. What a boon to a preacher is a revival of religion; how refreshing, how strengthening; how a man can live without one I never knew. The three preachers in Augusta are a unit. They work together. They have planned a regular campaign and are going on from victory to victory. Already hundreds have been gathered in. The Lord add unto them a thousand-fold.

The colored Conference was a called one, assembled for a specific purpose. The death of Bishop Vanderhorst and the growth of the church made it necessary to strengthen the episcopacy. After conferring together with great unanimity, they elected three Bishops. As to the future fortune of this organization I am hopeful. They have made great progress. The signs of improvement are obvious. It is commanding public confidence and respect. Free, independent, conservative—if the preachers are faithful to their principles and policy, this church will be a blessing to the colored race and to the country. If ambitious bad men, "grievous wolves," do not enter in to corrupt them by divisions and factions, the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church in America will be strong and useful and enduring.

My agency for Emory College has been greatly interrupted by other calls of duty, primary and official, which I do not feel at liberty to push aside. But I work the interests of the college in as well as I may, and improve every interest for her benefit. After leaving Augusta I visited Thompson and Warrenton, preached three times, raised some money by the kindness of the few, not from the liberality of the many. Well, it is ever thus. All places are very much alike as to giving. Glad to say the work is going on, and pay ments regularly made. No debt is contracted. If we must be slow, we mean to be sure and easy. If I were free to work in this field, in five months the whole amount needed could be raised. But my main work is ministerial. By the blessing of God and the good will of the people, I expect to succeed anyhow. Let no man croak or fear. The buildings are going up and will be finished.

During this month I have held three District Conferences—one at Americus, one at Camilla and one at Blakeshear. I made a chain of the work by preaching on the way at Smithville, Albany, Thomasville and Savannah. At all these places I saw signs of interest—soft, tender, joyous emotions in the church—penitents at the altar—some conversions and some admissions to membership. The chief meetings were continued. Hope to hear of good results. What a blessing to the church these district meetings have been, and still are! What a work they have to do in reviving experimental religion, restoring practical godliness, reinstating the administration of discipline, and damming back the flood of worldliness!

The church is suffering everywhere from the same class of evils. Bad in themselves, they have grown worse by toleration. By long sufferance they defy authority and claim impunity. I take one crying sin for example: the neglect of family worship. It is very general; so common that family prayer is the exception, not the rule. What surprises me most is that the preachers report their charges as spiritual and prosperous, with the certain knowledge that hardly three in ten discharge this important duty. What a loose idea of religion is this! Are these delinquents in the favor of God? Is God well pleased with the neglect of duty? Does he compound, commute, compromise with any man? Can children be trained in the way they should go without the Bible, without prayer, religious conversation and social worship? I know a great many clever people are guilty in this matter. With all due respect, they are poor Christians—very loose examples. Nay more, after proper time and effort, kindness, entreaty, patience, if they will not be reformed, they ought to be cut off.

Is there a member always at preaching, class, love-feasts, Quarterly Conference, everywhere the church appoints and expects him? Mark it, that man prays in his family. All this he promised when God converted him. The obligation of a covenant is upon him, and he does not mean to forfeit it by infidelity. He stands to his bargain. As a citizen of Zion he is law-abiding. He means to please God and keep a good conscience.

Is there a member very irregular; frequently absent; rarely in his place, personal or official; worldly in his tastes, lax in his morals? He does not pray in his family. This is not the cause, perhaps, of his errors. It may be an effect. But the man's ideas are low. His religion is loose, and the looser because he has no conscience as to one of the leading duties of Christian life. No man can leave out of his religious life anything which essentially belongs to it, without damage and grievous peril as to final results. "I stand in doubt" of all these delinquents. They may be clever, liberal—be free from sin—never reproach the church with disorderly conduct, but they do not enjoy religion; the root of the matter is not in them; there is no oil in the vessel; they bring no fruit to perfection. Wells without water. They do not dig deep enough to strike the vein. Clouds without rain. Light, fleecy, vagrant, they drop no fatness upon the earth beneath. "Ephraim," said God, "is a cake not turned"—baked on one side only; neither bread nor dough. So with these people. They are not cooked. Their religion is not done. It is not thorough. They must be salted and turned and baked over. Let the preachers go to work gently, but in earnest. Amen.

Sunday School Anniversary.

MR. EDITOR: The New Orleans District Sunday School Union of the Methodist Episcopal Church South celebrated the twenty-seventh anniversary of its organization, in Carondelet Street church, on Sunday evening, May 11, 1873.

The origin of the association and the object of the meeting were gracefully presented by Master Willie Mathews, of Felicity Street Sunday school. When we say that Algiers was represented by seven young ladies, it is needless to add that it was ably represented.

"Be a Man" was the theme of Master Julius Blecker, of Dryades Street German school. If Diogenes measured men by Master Blecker's standard, we do not wonder that he sought for them with a torch. Existence is not living, and physical growth is not manly development. We trust the young orator will grow up to the full stature of manhood.

Carondelet Street showed its appreciation of the "fitness of things" by selecting Miss Annie Oliver to recite that beautiful poem, "No Sects in Heaven." Controversy ends at the brink of the river. Come by what path they will, all must cross at the same ford, and on the other side

> "No forms or crosses or books had they,
> No gowns of silk or suits of gray;
> No creeds to guide them, or Mass,
> For all had got on Christ's righteousness."

After a dialogue, entitled "The Bevy of I's," by seven little girls from Felicity Street, with seven pairs of eyes so sparkling and bright, we are sure they must be always looking about for some good to do, the chairman announced "The Child's Wish," by Richard W. Jay, of Louisiana Avenue. We could just see his bright, earnest face above the crowd, but, though small, he was determined to make his wishes known, and his childish tones were distinctly heard in every part of the crowded house.

The country parishes were represented by Masters J. S. Fuqua and A. S. J. Magruder, of Baton Rouge. These young gentlemen reflected great credit upon the school which sent them as its delegates to the great metropolis. This is the first time Baton Rouge has taken any part in our anniversary exercises, but we hope that a school which does its part so well will never again be wanting.

Of the singing we are not competent to speak critically, but we are satisfied that Carondelet Street church was full of music. If children can do so well on special occasions, why can they not be trained to do their full share of our congregational singing?

An Interesting Letter.

We are indebted to Colonel J. F. H. Claiborne for the following suggestive letter from General McCulloch. We hope our religious readers who have a liking for balls and the like will read it to profit.

Messrs. H. Mayer, Dr. H. P. Howard, I. P. Sampson and J. R. Sweet:

GENTLEMEN—The ticket to the complimentary ball given to General Van Dorn, which you had the kindness to present me by Dr. Howard, was received and properly appreciated by me; but, as a man who professes to be governed by principle in religion, as well as all other things, I am constrained to decline attending the ball. As a military man, if I were to disobey an order, or fail to do my duty to the best of my ability, I would be censured by my government and would be condemned by my fellow-men. I am a member of a church whose rules preclude its members from attending such parties, and, in my opinion, I would not be more justifiable in violating one of the rules of my church any more than disobeying an order in the army. I am a soldier from necessity, and a Christian from choice and principle, and shall ever endeavor to do my duty in both relations according to the convictions of my mind and conscience, and, if I fail in either, it will be for want of judgment, and not from inclination. My personal relations with General Van Dorn, as well as our official intercourse, has been of so kind a character that I know he will not regard my absence as any intended disrespect to him, either personally or officially, and, when informed by you gentlemen of the reasons that control my action in the matter, I am satisfied that he, with all his nobleness of soul, will fully and heartily approve my course. I beg leave, through you, to assure him that he carries with him my very best wishes for his happiness and success as a gentleman and an officer, with the utmost confidence that whenever he may be called to sustain our flag upon the battle-field, that it will be nobly and gallantly done.

If I were sure it would wound the feelings of no one, I might kindly intimate to those who tender such festivities, at times like these, that our country and her cause may need every dollar that her citizens can control, and that all our feelings, sympathies and prayers should be with her armies that are battling for our rights, and all our energies should be exerted to provide for and sustain them. Very truly yours,

H. C. MCCULLOCH

An Appeal for Help

The members of the Belles Lettres Society, Southern University, Greensboro, Alabama, having resolved to raise $2,600, and appointed the undersigned as a committee to carry out this resolution, deem it proper to make the following appeal to the public:

We will state, then, at the outset that we as a society stand greatly in need of at least the above sum. Our hall is but imperfectly furnished, and our library—the formation of which was interrupted by the war, and since then no attempt has been made to complete it—is inadequate to meet the constantly-growing wants of our society. Like most of the young men in the South at the present day, we are poor, and hence, unless the friends of Christian education, especially the lovers of Methodism and well-wishers of our growing university, liberally aid us in this undertaking, we must still behold our bare walls and empty shelves. To such, then, we urgently appeal for help. Every one, at a moment's thought, must perceive the great importance of a well-stocked library to a literary society. It is their mental pabulum; and, insufficiently supplied with it, they must suffer. We feel this want greatly feel it, but without your assistance cannot supply it. A small amount from comparatively few will raise the sum for which we ask.

We will thankfully receive anything which the generous may be pleased to give for this purpose. In this enterprise we shall rely greatly upon the sympathy and assistance of our ex-members. All who contribute to this object will please send their gifts to O. J. Joyner, Tirensboro, Alabama, until the first of July next, and after that time to any one of the committee whose names and addresses are given below.

REV. J. R. ALLEN, Brooksville, Miss.
O. J. JOYNER, Columbus, Miss.
A. J. SMITH, Jr., Montgomery, Ala.
REV. O. P. FITZGERALD, Mineral Springs, Ark.
R. W. LOVEN, Huntsville, Tenn.

Secular papers favorable to this will please copy.

OUR brother's all against us is nothing compared with our all against God.

UNTO THEE.

No, not despairingly
Come I to thee;
No, not distrustingly
Bend I the knee.
Sin hath gone over me,
Yet is this still my plea:
Jesus hath died.

Oh, mine indignity
Crimson hath been!
Infinite, infinite
Sin upon sin!
Sin of not loving thee,
Sin of not trusting thee,
Infinite sin.

Lord, I confess to thee
Sadly my sin;
All I can tell I thee,
All I have been.
Purge thou my sin away,
Wash thou my soul this day—
Lord, make me clean.

Faithful and just art thou,
Forgiving all;
Loving and kind art thou
When poor ones call.
Lord, let the cleansing blood—
Blood of the Lamb of God—
Pass o'er my soul.

Then all is peace and light
This soul within;
Thus shall I walk with thee,
The loved unseen;
Leaning on thee, my God,
Guided along the road,
Nothing between. Bonar.

Education by the State.—No. II.

BY W. A. M'CARTY, D. D.

But is not education necessary to make good citizens? If by education is meant mere intellectual training, it may be denied. An uneducated man, who is industrious and moral, is a better citizen than an educated man who is idle and immoral. The State cannot manufacture good citizens by any process of mere mental culture. History, with concentful voice, has been making this utterance from the beginning.

There is culture, but not a godly man, in the line of Cain. They live in a city, while the righteous seed dwell in tents. Jubal is the father of shepherds; Jubal invents the organ and harp; Tubal-Cain is an artificer in brass and iron; and Lamech sings his song (the first poetry on record) of hate and murder. They have agriculture and cattle and music and poetry all dedicated to the old serpent, while their more godly kinsfolk, on the other side of Eden, are comparatively poor and illiterate.

Egypt of old was governed by her magi. The wisest and most learned men of that learned nation were assembled around the King as his ministers and counselors; so that Egypt was ruled by an oligarchy of wise and learned men. If learning could have secured good government, Egypt should have had such. But what are the facts? They are recorded in Exodus. And if more be needed, the pyramids stand as so many monumental witnesses of oppression.

Greece and Rome almost monopolized the civilization of their times. The art-culture of the first and the literature of both have never been surpassed. The age of Pericles and about thirty years after—from 360 to 400 B. C.—was the golden age. No people before nor since could boast of such culture in architecture, in sculpture, in painting, in poetry and in philosophy as the Athenians during this period. Socrates, who was cotemporary with Pericles, and was murdered 399 B. C., because Athens could not endure longer so much virtue, lived to see a time of universal skepticism—all faith in religion, in political institutions, in social life, dead. This epoch of skepticism, of terror and of blood finds its only parallel in the French revolution.

The reign of Augustus Cæsar was the golden age of Roman literature. Cicero had just shed imperishable glory on her literature and government, and had been murdered for his love of liberty by the order of Antony and young Cæsar. Julius, the greatest of the Cæsars, himself a classic writer, yet a libertine, and suspected by Cato, the censor, of implication in the Catuline conspiracy, was the unscrupulous agent in the overthrow of Roman liberty. The citizens and leading men, with few exceptions, had become utterly corrupt. The time had come for Rome to have a master. Brutus loved liberty—murdered his friend and fought and died for it. But still we believe it was better for Rome that he failed. Since Cicero was dead there was no man, even in his own party, like-minded with himself. The tyranny of the Cæsars was the best government Rome could have. Such a time came to France in the days of Napoleon the Third. And in this country good and patriotic men—some, at least—are ready for a Cæsar or Napoleon to save us from the mingled force of Yankee and negro mobocratic rule.

It was when French literature had reached its culminating point that reason and philosophy took charge of the State, and shaped her destiny. Voltaire, as is conceded by his friends, a libertine and a liar, had been crowned as a god in a playhouse, with the exclamation: "Vive Voltaire!" Diderot is an adulterer and atheist. Rousseau, himself a criminal, had preached his gospel—the native goodness of the human heart. And Robespierre, the truest and most admiring disciple of Rousseau, has given us a practical commentary of his master's gospel in the Reign of Terror. These and their fellows are the great apostles of reason and philosophy. They stressed and relied on mere mental culture. The result is visible—tornadoes and earthquakes that overturn and shake to pieces everything great and good and venerable.

It is noteworthy, and I commend the fact to the attention of those who would make good citizens by mere intellectual training, that Greece, Rome and France were most immoral and lost their liberties about the time of their greatest literary glory.

Moreover, the figures show that at the present time in France the most immoral districts are those of the best mental culture; and that in England those districts that have the least school culture are freest from crime. Cicero had read history to some purpose. Hear him, as quoted by Watson (Institutes, part I, chapter 3:). "Who is there, of all the philosophers, whose mind, life and manners were conformable to right reason?" Cato, the censor, probably the best man of his age, opposed the introduction of the Grecian philosophers into Rome.

Now what is the meaning and significance of all this?

1. It means that man is not naturally good, according to the gospel of J. J. Rousseau, but that the "heart is deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked," according to the gospel of Jesus Christ.

2. That mere mental culture has in it no moral power; that moral power is not of the earth, but comes down from the highest heavens.

3. That man is made worse by mere mental culture, because education is a great power; and like all other great powers, when turned loose at random, and under wrong impulses, it has in it a mighty force for mischief. Herein also the teachings of history and Scripture are unified.

The Bible Cause in Alabama.

MR. EDITOR: In retiring from the agency, after seven and a half years' connection with the Bible work in Alabama and west Florida, I would say that I have visited again and again all parts of this large and important district. Many have been the obstacles to be overcome. No department of Christian enterprise is more difficult to manage. All the Protestant churches profess to be allied to this great society; all are the beneficiaries, both at home and abroad. There is not a mission in foreign lands that is not more or less blessed by the American Bible Society. The Bible cause is inseparably connected with all the hopes and labors of Protestant Christianity in the conversion of the world to God. And yet the churches South, in the aggregate, have never done anything outside of their own limits to aid the Bible cause. Before and since the war the South has always received more from the parent society than they have given. They have given; but with a few exceptions books have always been returned at cost prices to the auxiliaries. All the moneys given have been a financial saving. The whole South has been supplied with the word of God for about one-third less expense than they could have been supplied from any other source.

Since the war the parent society has made large grants to all parts of the South, paid agents, and sustained the cause in all the States. Whatever politicians may have said or done, the Bible Society has done us good, and only good, all the time. As an agent, I have never asked for aid but it was granted. I have traveled and preached by day and by night, not only on railroads, but in wagons and on mules, in rain and sunshine, in summer's heat and winter's cold. I have urged the claims of the Bible cause for all men.

I have succeeded in organizing and reorganizing about eighty auxiliaries, and yet I have accomplished, in seven years of unceasing labor, what ought to have been done in one year. When will the church of God learn what is her privilege to accomplish in her day and generation? The church smokes, chews and snuffs, to say nothing of strong drink and wine, enough to give the Bible to every human being on earth. Thousands of men and women in Alabama are without the Bible. We have the Bibles, and the men to carry them to every destitute family in this large field, but we cannot induce the people to give the money. The parent society has made large grants to auxiliaries, and they pass from year to year, and never meet or take the slightest interest in looking after the interests of the societies. Well may the Catholics smile at Protestant devotion to their Bible. If only the Southern people would stop praising, and look their avarice and delinquencies full in the face, there might be hope; but if a man has moral courage to speak out, a thousand voices rise up to condemn. Alabama ought to give to the Bible cause, instead of $5,000, $50,000. There are over two hundred thousand professing Protestants in Alabama, who commune at the Lord's table, and they have not paid $200 in seven years to give the Bible to the millions who are perishing in heathen lands. If Christians would only learn the first lesson in their religion they would have something to give. Cross-bearing and self-denial are positive terms of discipleship.

Rev. Mr. Rutledge has been appointed agent in Alabama and west Florida, and I hope he will meet a hearty welcome among all Christians. I would say to the ministry: Give him your hearty sympathy and co-operation. When he comes in your midst do not put off the Bible meeting to some unimportant hour. Is there any subject that can be brought before your people on Sabbath morning of more importance than the Bible and its circulation? There are many ways to treat an agent kindly, and yet fail to aid his enterprise. We as preachers sometimes are too much alarmed about our people giving too much, and that is one of the substantial reasons why we get so little ourselves. I can in all safety and good conscience recommend the Bible Society not only as the best institution in the world, but the best-managed Christian enterprise on the earth, worthy of all praise and confidence. I can safely say, after nine years' connection with it, that it has my full and entire confidence. I shall miss the many kind greetings from many of my own brethren all over the State. While the church has failed to come up to the full measure of her duty, I am glad to say, in all candor, that but in a very few instances they have always been kind to the Bible agent. I have met with more consideration than I deserved. May Heaven reward all such with blessings in this life, and heaven in that which is to come.

Family Prayer.

MR. EDITOR: Permit me, through the ADVOCATE, to say a few words to our membership on this very important subject. It has been written on and preached about a great deal already, I know; but it is a subject of so much importance, and the duty is so much neglected, that it is necessary to keep it before our people continually, and to give them "line upon line and precept upon precept." It is a matter of astonishment and grief to find, upon strict inquiry, how few of our heads of families attend to this duty. I know a church containing over one hundred members, only two of whom hold family prayer. How can we expect our church to prosper, to grow in grace and usefulness, to be a really healthy, vigorous, fruit-bearing vine, without the use of this means of grace? Where family religion is kept up, and the duty and importance of serving God and attending to the interests of the soul, as the great business of life, are daily brought before the minds of our children, and impressed upon their hearts, they will almost certainly be converted and brought into the church earlier in life than where they are brought up under a different regimen. Then, too, when they come into the church with this kind of training, they are more apt to make useful members than when they have been reared without this training. They are much more ready to pray in public, to fill the various offices in the church, and to pray in their own families, when they become heads of families, than those who have been brought up without family prayer. I was once urging a brother, who had been deprived of this advantage in his childhood, to pray in his family and in public; he plead the want of such training as an excuse, and said he would not begrudge all he was worth if he had had such training. Though the cross may be heavy, we should take it up, that our children may not have to indulge in these regrets, and be thus kept from taking the part which they ought to take in pushing on the conquests of the Redeemer's kingdom. Again, I am satisfied that those young people whose parents do not have family prayer, when converted, do not rise to so high a plane of Christian experience as those who have this advantage. They are but "babes in Christ;" they need constant nursing; they need all the help they can get to lead them onward and upward toward God and heaven. If God is worshiped formally and regularly in the family, they have this help; if he is not thus worshiped, they are deprived of that which is almost essential to their religious well-being. They are almost sure to sink down into the same state of carelessness and lukewarmness with their parents. If we are ever to have a really healthy state of the church, and have the fruits of our revivals to be permanent, there must, absolutely must, be a revival of family prayer. Let us as ministers not cease to urge this thing on our members. M.
